24/59

Pat 1
2002
4182

U.S. Congress

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

SIXTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME XLII.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1908.

2d set

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

J.J.R.
2d set

OCT 27 1908
D. of D.

SURPLUS - 1
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DUPLICATE

VOLUME XLII, PART III.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

In the cause of Helen M. Dodge, widow of Edward R. Dodge, deceased, v. United States;

In the cause of the trustees of the Methodist Protestant Church of Fox Hill, Va., v. United States;

In the cause of Sarah Jane Bellah, administratrix of the estate of James W. Bellah, deceased, v. United States;

In the cause of Mary McLeod, widow of Norman McLeod, deceased, v. United States;

In the cause of William H. Bacon and Annie M. Smith, heirs at law of Francis H. Bacon, deceased, v. United States; and

In the cause of Charles E. Carter, Elizabeth Crawford Bronson, and Lawrence C. Crawford, heirs at law of John C. Carter, deceased, v. United States.

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13577. An act providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Nebraska; and

H. R. 16493. An act limiting and restricting the right of entry and assignment under the desert-land law and authorizing an extension of time within which to make final proof.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of sundry organizations of Pawtucket, R. I., Washington, D. C., Fond du Lac, Wis., Wilmington, Del., Fort Smith, Ark., Highland, Ill., Madison, Nebr., and New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT presented memorials of sundry organizations of Brooklyn, New York City, and Troy, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Clifton Springs, Corinth, Matteawan, New York City, and Oswego, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the present copyright law relating to photographic reproductions, which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of sundry business men of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of all battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 187, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, of Elmira, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Deep Water Harbor Association of Portsmouth, N. H., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a dam at Fox Point, on the Piscataqua River, in aid of the commerce at that city, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Southwest Citizens' Association of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for additional railroad track facilities in connection with the United States navy-yard at that city, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Laconia and Surry, in the State of New Hampshire; of New York City and Brooklyn, in the State of New York; of McPherson County, Kans.; of Moorestown, Florence, and Rutherford, all in the State of New Jersey, and of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANKENY presented a petition of Local Union No. 170, Typographical Union, of Tacoma, Wash., and a petition of Local Union No. 65, Stereotypers and Electrotypers' Association, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, and remonstrating against the prohibitive price on news print paper, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Washington, Conn., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Lakeville, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Crumpacker bill," providing for the appointment of additional clerks for taking the Thirteenth Census, which were referred to the Committee on the Census.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Stamford, New Britain, Thompsonville, Bridgeport, New Haven, Torrington, and Broad Brook, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of Local Union No. 17, Metal Polishers, Buffers, Platers, Brass Molders, and Brass and Silver Workers' Union, of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of the proposed new battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of William G. Mitchell Post, No. 559, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation proposing to abolish the different pension agencies as now existing and consolidating them into one central office at the city of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Willard Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of West Albany, N. Y., and a petition of the Van Valkenburg Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Albany County, N. Y., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the disfranchisement of citizens on account of sex, which were referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 135, Typographical Union, of Oneonta, N. Y., and a petition of Local Union No. 523, International Typographical Union, of Tarrytown and Ossining, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOPKINS presented memorials of sundry organizations of Chicago, Bloomington, Rock Island, Shiloh, and Quincy, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Illinois State Horticultural Society, praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," and also for the establishment of postal savings banks, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 342, International Typographical Union, of Canton, Ill., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAPP presented a petition of the Minnesota Retail Hardware Association, praying for the repeal of the duty on logs, lumber, and other products of the forest imported into the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Northern Swedish Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Minnesota, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McENERY presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 5205) granting an increase of pension to Richard S. Harrison, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4920) to provide a temporary home in the District of Columbia for ex-Union volunteer soldiers, sailors, and marines, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4035) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia in accordance with the act of Congress approved January 26, 1897, and as amended July 19, 1897, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 30) to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am informed by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] that inadvertently the bill (S. 1574) to create the Calaveras Bigtree National Forest, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands instead of the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game. Upon the information thus received, I report the bill back from the Committee on Public Lands and ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3507) to fix fees and costs in the probate court of the District of Columbia, and to provide for the collection and payment of the same, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5253) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Wisconsin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1574) to create the Calaveras Bigtree National Forest, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 504) for the relief of Albert H. Raynolds, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1047) to provide for the building of a public avenue on the south side of the Potomac River from the city of Washington to Mount Vernon, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3001) to rectify the boundary line of Rock Creek Park; and

A bill (S. 2995) to provide for the extension of Kenyon street from Seventeenth street to Mount Pleasant street, and for the extenson of Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 31) authorizing the extension of Oak street NW.; and

A bill (S. 4118) in relation to business streets in the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 5331) permitting persons who had instituted contest proceedings for the purpose of securing preference right of entry on public lands, which were afterwards set aside for the establishment of the Cabinet and Kootenai forest reservations in the State of Montana, to perfect title thereto, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5332) granting a pension to James B. How, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 5333) relating to yachts, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRAZIER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5334) granting an increase of pension to Oliver T. French (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5335) granting an increase of pension to Rufus Conger (with accompanying papers).

He also introduced a bill (S. 5336) for the relief of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of Granville, Tenn., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 5337) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, United States Navy, retired, and the eight other retired mates who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 5338) authorizing the appointment of Maj. George A. Armes, United States Army, retired, to the rank and grade of major-general on the retired list of the Army, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP (for Mr. NELSON) introduced a bill (S. 5339) granting an increase of pension to B. H. Randall, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 5340) providing for the inclusion of certain unappropriated public lands in the State of Montana within the boundaries of Madison National Forest, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 5341) to authorize the enlargement, improvement, and equipment of the light-house depot at Yerba Buena Island, California, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 5342) authorizing the President to select from the lieutenants of the line of the Army one who has distinguished himself in battle or otherwise and appoint him a captain quartermaster in the United States Army, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CLAPP (for Mr. KITTREDGE) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for separate State and Territorial maps, prepared or to be prepared, in the General Land Office, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4030) to fix the pay of the Army, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COTTON-SEED PRODUCTS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. BACON submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Department of Commerce and Labor 3,000 copies of a pamphlet entitled: "Cotton-Seed Products of Foreign Countries."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOSEPH T. WOODWARD.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate all papers relative to the bill (S. 11) granting an increase of pension to Joseph T. Woodward, Sixtieth Congress, first session, there having been no adverse report thereon.

MAN AND ABNORMAL MAN.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, it was Ordered, That Senate document No. 187, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, Man and Abnormal Man, be reprinted.

PROPOSED UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That Senate document No. 143, Sixtieth Congress, first session, Appeal in behalf of proposed University of United States, be reprinted.

LOWER BRULÉ SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill (S. 4889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Lower Brulé Sioux Indians the sum of $50,000, and for other purposes, was ordered to a third reading and passed yesterday.

I may state that this bill was favorably reported as an amendment by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it was included by the Senate in the urgency deficiency appropriation bill. That amendment in the bill has been agreed to by the House, the bill has passed both Houses, and there is no occasion for the passage of this bill. I make the motion in pursuance of that fact.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CANAL AT FALLS OF WILLAMETTE RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. FULTON. There is on the table a concurrent resolution which I wish to call up. I should like to make a brief statement in regard to it. It is concurrent resolution No. 29.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. FULTON on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause such survey and examination to be made of the existing canal and locks at the Falls of the Willamette River at Oregon City, Oreg., as may be necessary to ascertain what sum of money, at present prices of labor and material, should be appropriated by Congress, in addition to the appropriation already made by the State of Oregon therefor, to enable the Government to acquire said canal and locks and properly repair the same.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, when I asked that the resolution might lie on the table I contemplated at some convenient time and appropriate occasion to submit some remarks pertinent to it. It seemed to me that it would be proper to consider the policy which the Government ought, in view of the present commercial conditions, to enter upon in the matter of improving the waterways. But since I offered the resolution the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has delivered a most instructive address on the subject, which has been published in pamphlet form and very largely covers the ground I had in mind to call the attention of the Senate to; and so far as it covers that ground it does so more completely and instructively than I could. Hence, before I take my seat I shall ask that the address of the Senator from Pennsylvania may be published as a document. I think it will be found to be especially valuable to all who are interested in this subject.

The resolution which I have offered, and which I have now called up, provides simply for a new survey and estimate touching the cost of acquiring the canal and locks of the Willamette River at the point known as the Willamette Falls. The Willamette River is one of the most splendid commercial rivers on this continent, flowing through a territory that is not exceeded and probably rarely equaled in its fertility and in the advantages it affords for settlement and for sustaining a large population. I think I do not underestimate the resources of that valley when I say that it alone could easily sustain a population of 3,000,000 people. It is penetrated by two lines of railway, but really by one line, because both lines form one system, or rather they are owned by one company.

The Willamette River is the natural regulator of freight for the people of that valley, and but for one fact it would be an all-sufficient regulation for the freight charges. That fact is that there is a natural obstruction, known as the "Falls of the Willamette."

Some years ago private parties constructed a system of canal and locks whereby this obstruction was overcome, but in the hands of a private party tolls are imposed on all commerce that passes through the locks, and therefore instead of being the regulator of freight charges which the river should be, and which nature designed it should be, in its present condition it furnishes very little aid to the shippers and the people.

The State of Oregon, realizing the importance of having the river opened to commerce, has appropriated $300,000 to aid the General Government in acquiring the canal and locks, but the sum of $300,000, under the law by which it was appropriated, is not available except when Congress shall appropriate whatever additional sum shall be necessary to acquire the works.

Pursuant to a provision in a general appropriation act in 1899, the Secretary of War was required to investigate and ascertain what the cost of acquiring the locks would be. At that time, as I recall it, the report was that it would cost about $456,000. Probably conditions have changed since then, and any committee of Congress proposing to take action in the matter would naturally desire more recent and reliable information. Therefore I have offered this resolution, and I am going to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

I make these few remarks for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee on Commerce to the importance of having the resolution adopted. I hold entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania, as expressed in his address, that the best regulator of freights, that which will contribute more than all else to the commercial development of this country, will be the wider improvement of our waterways. I believe in the construction of canals that will connect the different waterways. I believe that no more important work could be undertaken by the Government than the construction of a canal from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi River, thus giving the great section of country tributary thereto the benefit of water transportation. That is only one illustration of what might be accomplished by the improvement of waterways.

But instead of enlarging on the subject at this time, Mr. President, as I had designed doing when I offered the resolution, I will content myself with asking that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and then that this address, which I hold in my hand, which was delivered by the Senator from Pennsylvania before the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg on the 12th instant be printed in the RECORD, and also printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Senator from Oregon asks——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he will not content himself with having the address printed as a document? The RECORD is pretty heavily encumbered.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; if there is any suggestion that it is not necessary that it shall go into the RECORD, I will be content that it be simply published as a document. I think that will answer all purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 16051) to authorize the Centreville Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a dam across the Cahaba River, in said State, at or near Centerville, Ala., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 13577. An act providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Nebraska; and

H. R. 16493. An act limiting and restricting the right of entry and assignment under the desert-land law, and authorizing an extension of time within which to make final proof.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] is not feeling at all well this morning, and is anxious to submit some remarks to the Senate on the banking bill. If it suits the convenience of Senators, not to interfere with the morning business, I should be glad to ask that the bill be laid before the Senate now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was simply about to ask for the consideration of a little bill affecting the District of Columbia. I think it will not take many minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is only for the convenience of the Senator from Georgia that I make the request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, I will make my request after the Senator from Georgia gets through.

Mr. CLAY. I will not occupy more than thirty or forty minutes, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in view of the proposed speech of the Senator from Georgia, and with reference to the general subject of the debate upon the bill in charge of the Senator from Rhode Island, I think it is only fair to state that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] had intended to participate in the debate and he had some amendments which he proposed to advocate. It should appear in the RECORD that he was unavoidably called from the city on account of the fatal illness of a member of his family.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that Senate bill 3023 be now laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, a proper circulating medium demands the most careful and thoughtful attention of Congress. Our financial policy during the last quarter of a century deserves severe criticism. The action of Congress in dealing with this important subject has in many respects been unjust, unwise, and harmful to the country. The power was given to Congress to coin money and provide the people with a circulating medium. This sovereign power should be exercised by Congress for the good of the American people and should never be delegated to individuals or corporations. Now, why do I say our policy in the past deserves severe criticism? I have always held to the theory that Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money, and I fully indorse the views held by President Jackson when he declared that this power should not be delegated to corporations or individuals. The Democratic party, to which I belong, in convention assembled in 1896, declared that Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money. The Democratic party has declared time and again that all paper money which is made a legal tender for public and private debts or which is received for dues to the United States shall be issued by the Government of the United States and shall be redeemable in coin. Have we pursued that financial policy? Has Congress exercised the sovereign right and power to issue and circulate paper money or has Congress delegated this sovereign right and power to corporations and individuals? Does Congress now control the issue and the amount of our paper money or is this important right exercised by individuals and corporations?

I repeat, Congress should exercise this power not for the benefit of any particular individual or individuals, not for the benefit of any particular corporation or corporations, but Congress ought to exercise this sovereign power for the good of the entire American people. The law organizing national banks provides that every national banking association, after having complied with the provisions of the law, preliminary to commencement of the banking business and before it shall be authorized to commence banking business, shall transfer and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States, in United States registered bonds, bearing interest, or Panama Canal bonds, to an amount not less than one-fourth of the capital (the capital being $150,000 or less), as security for their circulating notes. Such bonds shall be received by the Treasurer upon deposit and shall be by him safely kept in his Office until they shall be otherwise disposed of, as in pursuance of the provisions of law.

The national banking law also provided that all transfers of United States bonds by any association under the provisions of this title shall be made to the Treasurer of the United States, in trust for the association, with a memorandum written or printed on each bond and signed by the cashier or some other officer of the association making the deposit. A receipt shall be given to the association by the Comptroller of the Currency, or by a clerk appointed by him for that purpose, stating that the bond is held in trust for the association on whose behalf the transfer is made and as security for the redemption and payment of any circulating notes that have been or may be delivered to such association.

The national banking law also provides that the bonds transferred to and deposited with the Treasurer of the United States by any association for the security of its circulating notes shall be held exclusively for that purpose until such notes are redeemed.

The act also provides that after any association receiving circulating notes has caused its promise to pay such notes on demand to be signed by the president and vice-president and cashier in such manner as to make them obligatory promissory notes, payable on demand at its place of business, such association may issue and circulate the same as money. And the same shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt and in redemption of the national currency.

This act of Congress has made these notes as good as gold and silver and given to them all the life, power, and functions of money. It is this provision of the law which has made national-bank notes as good as gold and silver in transacting the business of the country. Instead of issuing Treasury notes, the Government has delegated to these banks the power to issue and circulate their own notes. The very fact that the Government gave to these notes of the national banks partial legal-tender qualities, making them good in the business transactions of life, in purchasing the necessities of life, in the payment of debts, and performing all the functions of money, has made them as good as gold and silver, and, in fact, they are preferred to either gold or silver, because individuals, in transacting business, find it more convenient to use them than either gold or silver.

In order to establish these banks, the Government has floated its bonds, drawing interest at the rate of 2, 3, and 4 per cent per annum, and sold them to these banking associations, giving the banking associations the right to issue and circulate national-bank notes based upon these bonds. In doing so the Government to that extent has parted with its sovereign power to issue money and lodged that power in private corporations. The paper on which these notes are printed is almost entirely without intrinsic value, and these notes would be valueless as money if it were not for the fact that the Government has given them legal-tender qualities, thereby placing life in them. A United States note would be valueless as money without possessing legal-tender qualities. The very fact that the Government stamps these notes as money, giving them legal-tender qualities, constitutes their real value. The national banking law also provides that all other national-bank notes issued by the national banks shall be redeemable in Treasury notes issued by the United States. In other words, the Government has undertaken to guarantee that all national-bank notes issued by the national banks now in circulation, or that may be placed in circulation hereafter, shall be redeemable at the Treasury of the United States in United States notes; and under the present financial policy of the Government the United States notes are redeemable in gold. Consequently all of the Treasury notes now in circulation, all of the national-bank notes now in circulation, and all of the bonds of the United States now outstanding are redeemable in gold. Whether or not this be a wise policy is not now a question I care to discuss. I have been opposed to this policy for more than a quarter of a century. I merely state that these obligations are redeemable in gold with a view of answering the argument that has been made by those who oppose the issue of notes by the Government, claiming that it would be impossible to redeem additional notes with the amount of gold we have on hand.

The purpose in passing the national banking law by Congress was to sell bonds issued by our Government and to induce capitalists to buy these bonds by giving these capitalists the right and power to issue and circulate money on these bonds. This is a privilege not enjoyed by anyone else except our national banking associations. No other corporation, no other individual, no other American citizen is entitled to this privilege except these associations. This was a sovereign power and right that belonged to Congress, that ought never to have been delegated by Congress, and that ought to have been exercised by Congress for the good and welfare of the entire American people. I have no patience with the argument sometimes advanced by those against the issue of Treasury notes—that we have not sufficient gold to redeem them. If we acted upon the theory that the quantity of our paper money issued and placed in circulation must be in proportion to the gold reserve we have on hand to redeem this paper money, then it would be impossible to furnish to the American people a circulating medium sufficient to transact the business of this country. We now have in circulation about $2,772,956,455, or a per capita circulation of about $32.22. The gold reserve in the United States Treasury amounts to $150,000,000. I repeat, I have no patience with the argument of those who claim that we must retain in the Treasury a sufficient gold reserve to redeem the paper money we have in circulation, and that if any such practice was put in operation it would be impossible to have in circulation enough paper money to do the business of the country. Let us see if this is true, and let us see to what position such contentions would lead.

We have in circulation nearly $500,000,000 of silver certificates (paper money), and under the practice of the Treasury Department these silver certificates are redeemable in gold. Who claims we have the gold to redeem them? What effort has ever been made by the holders of these certificates to have them redeemed in gold so long as they have the legal-tender qualities and perform the functions of money? The holders of these certificates have no desire to redeem them in gold. They really prefer them to gold, because by the action of Congress they have been made as good as gold and silver. They perform all the functions of money and assist in carrying on the business of the country. These silver certificates are issued and placed in circulation and are based upon the silver coin now deposited in the Treasury of the United States. Notwithstanding this fact, since we have gone to a gold standard, it is the practice of the Treasury Department to redeem them in gold when the holders of these certificates desire gold. In my judgment this policy demands the condemnation of the American people. We have in circulation $350,000,000 of United States notes that are redeemable in gold and we have in circulation about $600,000,000 of national bank notes redeemable indirectly in gold. Now, what amount of gold have we on hand to redeem them that can be applied to the redemption of this paper money? We have in circulation $678,000,000 of gold certificates. These gold certificates represent gold deposited in the Treasury of the United States for their redemption, and this gold is pledged specifically for their redemption. These gold certificates, it is true, could be redeemed in gold, but where could we get gold to redeem our silver certificates, to redeem our national bank notes, and to redeem our United States notes if it be contended that we must keep enough gold to redeem all of our paper money? We have in circulation, say, $600,000,000 of national bank notes, $500,000,000 of silver certificates, $350,000,000 of United States notes, all paper money, and we only have a gold reserve of $150,000,000, and it would be impossible to redeem a billion and a half of paper money with one hundred and fifty millions of gold. I repeat, if we confine our paper money in quantity to an amount equal to our gold reserve, it would be impossible to transact the business of this country, and financial ruin would follow. It is a foolish policy to lodge in the Treasury seven hundred millions of gold and to issue seven hundred millions of gold certificates on this gold when three times that amount of paper money could be issued against that asset of gold.

It is ridiculous to contend that the holder of gold certificates or Treasury notes or silver certificates will constantly seek to have all of this paper money redeemable in gold when the paper money is just as good as gold and silver, and, in fact, preferable to gold and silver. Why should we issue gold certificates equal to the amount of our gold bullion in value and contend that this much gold must be kept on hand to redeem them, and at the same time authorize national banks to issue six hundred millions of paper money, the Government to issue a certain amount of Treasury notes and five hundred millions of silver certificates, with only one hundred and fifty millions of gold to redeem these different classes of paper money? As a matter of fact, so long as our Treasury notes, national-bank notes, and silver certificates are made legal tender in the payment of all debts, this fact alone keeps them as good as gold and silver. They pass as money, perform all the functions of money, and the people have no desire to exchange them for either gold or silver. The three hundred and fifty millions of Treasury notes now in circulation are not hoarded away, but these notes have been a great factor in carrying on the business interests of this country, and the people who have these notes are satisfied with them as money and would not exchange them for either gold or silver. Those of us who advocate the issuance of Treasury notes directly by the Government to meet the demands of commerce and business are sometimes charged with being in favor of fiat money, a depreciated currency, for the reason that said Treasury notes are simply the promises of the Government to pay, and by being given legal-tender qualities are made good in the payment of all debts, public and private, and pass as money.

If a United States note is fiat money, is not a national-bank note fiat money? What is fiat money? I do not maintain that the Government can issue an unlimited quantity of paper money and make it as good as gold and silver. Our finances must be conducted upon sound business principles. I maintain that a Treasury note is no more fiat money than a national-bank note. What is a national-bank note and why are national banks allowed to issue their notes and why are these notes as good as gold and silver? National banking associations are formed in pursuance of law, and these associations buy United States bonds and deposit these bonds with the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Comptroller of the Currency prints the money, gives it to these banking associations, and the officers of these associations sign the notes and they circulate as money. Why do they circulate as money? Why are they good in the payment of debts? Why do the people prefer them to either gold or silver? The United States bonds belong to these associations; are held by the Government as security for the redemption of these notes. I repeat, why are the national-bank notes as good as gold? These notes would have no life and power as money if it were not for the fact that Congress, by law, has made them money. It was the edict of the Government that gave them the power of money. You say that Government bonds are deposited with the Comptroller of the Currency for their redemption. What is a Government bond? It is simply the promise of the Government to pay the amount of the bond; that is all; nothing more. What is a United States note? It is simply the promise of the Government to pay, and one promise is as good as another. If a United States note is fiat, who will contend that if this Government should issue a billion dollars of United States notes in our present financial condition and make them a legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, that these notes would not pass as money and perform all of the functions of money just as the gold and silver and the national-bank notes of to-day pass as money and perform the functions of money? We must have gold and silver and paper money to carry on the business of this country. We can not do the business of this country on the amount of gold and silver we produce, and, besides, paper money is more convenient to transact business and the people are not so likely to hoard paper money as they are gold. A Republic like ours can always float a large amount of its indebtedness in the form of paper money without costing the people of the United States any interest.

Our debts at the beginning of the Spanish-American war had reached a minimum amount since the civil war. These debts existed in the way of bonds, drawing interest at the rate of 3 and 4 per cent. Instead of issuing bonds drawing interest, if we had issued Treasury notes without interest and made them legal tender in the payment of debts and paid the expenses of our Government, and if we had taken our revenue and paid our indebtedness, I believe that these Treasury notes could have been kept as good as gold and silver and we would have saved a large amount of interest to the American people. We now owe in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000, a small amount of money for a Republic like ours. Our bonds, it is true, are drawing a low rate of interest. We have outstanding bonds due in 1930 drawing 2 per cent, amounting to $646,250,150. Our rate of interest ranges from 2 to 4 per cent. We are paying annually about $24,000,000 interest. We have in circulation United States notes called "greenbacks," to be accurate, $346,681,016. These United States notes are classed as debts of the United States. I regret that they do not amount to a billion instead of three hundred and forty-six millions. These notes do not cost the people of the United States anything. We do not pay interest on them. They draw no interest. They are legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, except the interest on the public debt, etc., and are redeemable in gold. They perform all the functions of money. They are great factors in developing our commerce, in carrying on the business of the country, and the people are satisfied with these notes as money and would not part with them under any circumstances. When we provided for the construction of the Panama Canal we issued bonds equal to $200,000,000, drawing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum and providing for their sale to secure the money to construct this great waterway. If we had provided for its construction and had issued two hundred millions of Treasury notes, making them a legal tender in the payment of all debts and used them in paying for this work, these notes would have found their way into all the channels of trade, performing the functions of money and would have been a blessing to the American people, encouraging trade, giving employment to idle labor, and this great waterway would have been completed and the American people would not have felt the expense and cost incident to the construction of the same. Congress should not leave to the discretion of individuals or corporations the amount of money that shall be placed in circulation.

This is a question to be determined by Congress. Congress represents the American people. Congress is responsible to the American people for our circulating medium and is presumed to deal fairly with every American citizen. Congress has a constitutional right to exercise this sovereign power. Congress should assume full responsibility for the exercise of such an important power and should never delegate this power to corporations or individuals for the exercise of selfish purposes. Corporations intrusted with the power to issue and circulate money, however honorable and upright, will serve their selfish ends and purposes, neglecting the best interests of the American people. Take your national banking laws. Under the provisions of your national banking laws the National Banking Association can issue national-bank notes equal to the par value of their bonds. They are not compelled to do so. What is the result? This discretion leaves to the banking associations of this country the right to say what shall be the quantity of national bank notes placed in circulation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Georgia has observed that the bill which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has introduced strikes out of the law the nine-million-dollar limitation. So, that if we pass this bill as it has been reported from the Committee on Finance, the national banks can retire one hundred millions, two hundred millions, or five hundred millions whenever they get ready to do so.

Mr. CLAY. I am coming to that point now. If the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island shall pass, the national banking associations now in existence and the national banking associations that may hereafter be organized, under the provisions of this proposed law, if they see proper to do so, can take out a currency in paper notes equivalent to five hundred millions, and if these national banking associations do not desire to take out one dollar of currency, they are not compelled to do so; and if these national banking associations should take out $500,000,000 of additional currency and place it in circulation, if they want to do so, they can retire every dollar of it. There is no limitation placed upon their power.

We are placing the American people absolutely in the clutches of the national banks of this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia fails to make the distinction—and I am sure he does not intend to do so—between United States notes and Treasury notes. As to the Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890, now outstanding, they amount to but a little over $5,000,000.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator is correct.

It is a fact that can not be disputed that during our recent panic the national banking associations of this country, under existing law, if they had exercised all the power they were entitled to enjoy, could have placed in circulation nearly three hundred millions more national-bank notes than they had in circulation. To that extent the volume of our circulating medium could have been enlarged. In other words, Congress has said to these associations: "You shall exercise the sovereign right to issue and circulate notes as money; we leave it to your discretion and judgment as to the amount of these notes you will place in circulation." In other words, Congress has left to these associations the right to say how much paper money shall be placed in circulation. In fact, these associations, to a large extent, can control the paper circulating medium of this country. Congress has given to these associations the right and power that belonged to Congress and that ought never to have been parted with by Congress. At all times Congress represents the American people, acting for the entire people, and is presumed to act justly and fairly, keeping in view the interest of every citizen. Who will say when Congress delegates this power to any number of corporations that these corporations will exercise this power and right in the interest of the American people without partiality or favoritism?

Now, take the Aldrich bill. Let us analyze it and see what it means. Will all sections of the country have just, fair, and equal treatment when it becomes a law? The Aldrich bill simply enlarges the powers of the national banks without compelling them to issue one dollar of additional notes. It does not pretend to be a bill in favor of a permanent currency. We authorize banking associations to purchase State, county, municipal, and certain railroad bonds and to deposit these bonds with the Comptroller of the Currency, and to receive notes in like manner as they are authorized to receive when National Government bonds are deposited. If this bill should become a law, national banks can take National Government bonds, State bonds, city bonds, county bonds, and certain railroad bonds and deposit them with the Secretary of the Treasury and take out a circulation based upon these bonds equivalent to 90 per cent of bonds other than railroad bonds and 75 per cent of the value of railroad bonds. And this bill provides that the circulating medium shall not be increased to a larger volume than $500,000,000. Mark you, they are not compelled to take out this circulating medium. We leave it to their discretion. If they want to take out a circulating medium equal to $500,000,000 they can do so. If they do not desire to take out any additional circulating notes, they are not compelled to do so. Congress leaves it to the discretion of the banks to either increase or decrease our paper currency. We are placing the paper currency of this country entirely in the hands of the national banks. We are giving to them a power that ought to be exercised by the National Government. These institutions will eventually own the country. They will be a thousand times more dangerous than the bank that Andrew Jackson destroyed. Andrew Jackson saw the danger of intrusting too much power to one institution. It was through his iron will that this great bank was destroyed.

What benefit can the South or the West hope to secure by the passage of this bill? How can the circulating medium in the South and West be increased by the passage of this bill? Mark you, if this bill shall become a law, we give to these associations the right to buy State bonds, city bonds, and a certain class of railroad bonds and to use these bonds as a basis of a circulating medium. Take the Southern States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Georgia leaves the question of the bonds issued by the State of Georgia and by the city of Atlanta, I should like to ask him what rate of interest is paid on the State bonds?

Mr. CLAY. In Georgia?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Well, we can sell our bonds at a lower rate of interest than we did many years ago. Some of our bonds are drawing 4 per cent, some a higher rate issued years ago.

Mr. HOPKINS. I assume that you did not refuse to sell the bonds to the people of your State or to the banks of your State, did you?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly not.

Mr. HOPKINS. The $8,000,000 of bonds that were issued by your State can be used for the purpose of this increased circulation just the same, whether they are owned in Chicago or New York or whether they are owned in Atlanta, can they not?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, but Congress is here representing the American people, representing the men who cultivate the farms, the men who work in the shops; Congress is here representing the entire American people, and Congress ought not to give to men who have accumulated large fortunes and bought bonds the sole right to take the bonds and issue money when the humble citizen of the Republic can not enjoy such a privilege. I believe in a Congress that will do justice to the men who work for a living; that will represent the engineers, the mechanics, the machinists, the small farmers of the country. Who are the men and women who have made this Republic the greatest in the world? From whom is its character of unprecedented enterprise and success derived? I ask the Senator who are the men and women who have multiplied our manifold institutions of mercy and learning? Who are the men and women who have stood for truth and for good government and who have made this a strong and powerful and wealthy nation? The plain, industrious people of this country are entitled to equal and fair treatment at the hands of Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the burst of eloquence of the Senator is a little aside from the issue. I am inquiring about those bonds and the rate of interest paid on them. I should like to know now if the Senator can tell me how those bonds are rated in the market at the present time?

Mr. CLAY. Our bonds are selling at ffom 107 to 114, I think.

Mr. HOPKINS. Above par?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir. I think a Georgia bond is as good as an Illinois bond.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust there will be no repudiation of her bonds.

Mr. CLAY. Georgia has never failed to pay her honest and legitimate debts. She has a credit equal to Illinois or any other State in the Union. She has never and never will repudiate her honest obligations, contracted in pursuance of the laws of the State. Such an issue is foreign to the question we are now discussing. I will not be drawn from the real issue.

Mr. HOPKINS. Those bonds would be good security, would they not?

Mr. CLAY. They would.

Mr. HOPKINS. Whether they are in the hands of people in Chicago or people in Atlanta?

Mr. CLAY. They certainly would be, and nobody has insisted to the contrary. I simply mean that where bonds have been bought, enjoying no such privilege as this bill gives, I do not want to increase their value by legislation at the expense of the American people. That is exactly what I mean.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not that an assumption of the Senator, without any foundation in fact? It was shown by the Senator from Rhode Island the other day, and it is a well-known fact among all people who have investigated the subject, that there are now more than four thousand millions of bonds that can be utilized for this purpose, outside of Government bonds. Does the Senator say that with that large volume of bonds there would be any appreciable increase in the value of the bonds if this bill should pass?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, I do. I am afraid the Senator has not investigated it. Does the Senator believe that our United States bonds, bearing 2 per cent interest, would bring in the market 110, if they did not have the right to be used as the basis for the issuance of paper money?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator knows those bonds are limited, and the 110 was only reached in an emergency. The 2 per cent bonds do not sell in the market for 110 except in an emergency such as we met during the late crisis, and this bill proposes to meet such crises.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator there are very few railroad bonds either in the South or West that could be used as the basis of circulation; not a large amount, to say the least of it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator on the point of railroad bonds that I am advised by some of the best bond men in Chicago that there are over two thousand millions of railroad bonds which will meet the requirements of this bill and can be utilized for this purpose.

Mr. CLAY. Regardless of the amount, I am unalterably and unconditionally opposed to taking the bonds of private citizens or corporations and making them a basis for the issuance of money, and giving any particular class of corporations or any particular class of citizens the right to use their securities as the basis for the issue of money, when the Government can circulate its own money and has all the resources of the country back of it and the taxing power to redeem every dollar that it may place in circulation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then the idea of the Senator is that he would have the Government issue money without any security whatever?

Mr. CLAY. One moment. I will answer. You asked for it. Does not the Senator know that all the property of every citizen of the Republic is back of every note that we issue?

Mr. HOPKINS. These very greenbacks that the Senator speaks of were at a discount as compared with gold——

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator this——

Mr. HOPKINS. And was not that true up to the time we resumed specie payments in this country?

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that in time of war, when the nation is in very great danger or when it is greatly embarrassed in its finances, it would be difficult to keep a large amount of United States notes as good as gold and silver. But in time of profound peace, and with millions of gold and silver and all the resources of the country back of it, the situation is entirely different. Again, United States notes have never been made a full legal tender for all debts——

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator tell me why United States notes are as good as gold and silver?

Mr. HOPKINS. The reason of that is because the Government of the United States under the control of the Republican party has limited that issue to $346,000,000 and has placed in the Treasury of the United States one hundred and fifty millions of gold as a reserve to redeem them, and with laws that enable the Secretary of the Treasury to buy more gold to meet the $346,000,000. But without those provisions and with an unlimited issue of greenbacks we would be in the same position that we were in the early seventies.

Mr. CLAY. I say this: We have $346,000,000 of United States notes. We have $150,000,000 of gold reserve, and the $346,000,000 can not be redeemed in $150,000,000 of gold.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. One moment. Will the Senator please hold on? I want to get through my answer.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Georgia understands——

Mr. CLAY. I will not yield until I complete my answer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has not yielded.

Mr. CLAY. We have $346,000,000 of United States notes redeemable in gold. We have only one hundred and fifty million gold reserve. We have six hundred millions of national-bank notes redeemable in gold. We have $500,000,000 of silver certificates redeemable in gold. I do not wish to refer to politics, as this is not a political discussion, but in answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will say passed by a Republican Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has made that statement several times, and I am sure he would not make it without having some authority. Silver certificates are not directly redeemable in gold.

Mr. CLAY. Only recently the Senator admitted all of our paper money was redeemable in gold, including silver certificates.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAY. The Treasury Department of the United States now is redeeming silver certificates in gold.

Mr. ALDRICH. That may be.

Mr. CLAY. And the Senator said on the floor of the Senate—I will not say what he has said in private—that all the paper money we have in circulation is redeemable in gold.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say kept at a parity with gold. And if the Senator had read the act——

Mr. CLAY. I have read it.

Mr. ALDRICH. He would realize that silver certificates are not redeemable in gold, but in silver dollars.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Rhode Island is not so candid as he usually is in this statement. The Senator knows that the act, I believe it was the act of March 14, 1900, expressly enjoins upon the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued and in circulation. Does the Senator from Rhode Island say to the Senate and to the country that the Secretary of the Treasury would not redeem silver certificates in gold if such action became necessary to maintain the parity?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Georgia a question. The Senator from Georgia said that the $600,000,000 of silver certificates outstanding were redeemable directly in gold.

Mr. CLAY. I said "indirectly."

Mr. ALDRICH. It is all right if the Senator meant "indirectly."

Mr. TILLMAN. He said "indirectly."

Mr. ALDRICH. He said "directly." I appeal to the RECORD.

Mr. BAILEY. It had not occurred to me that the Senator had used the words "directly redeemable," and therefore I asked the Senator from Rhode Island the question whether the Secretary of the Treasury would not feel himself obliged under the law to redeem them in gold if their redemption in gold became necessary to the maintenance of the parity.

Mr. ALDRICH. The act of 1900 makes it the imperative duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued by the United States or under its authority. Under that act it is his duty to maintain the parity. There is no question about it, and he would do it in any way he could and take advantage of all ways. But silver certificates are not directly redeemable in gold, and the Senator from Texas knows it.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. No one has insisted that, when the silver certificates were issued, they were redeemable in gold, but I insist that the act which we passed in 1900, called the "Aldrich Act," putting us on the gold standard, makes all of the silver certificates redeemable in gold.

Mr. ALDRICH. I accept the apology of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. It is no apology; it is the truth.

Mr. ALDRICH. He used the word "directly" when he meant "indirectly."

Mr. CLAY. We reach the same result whether we use the word "directly" or "indirectly."

Mr. BAILEY. I want the Senator from Rhode Island to answer my question, which he has not answered directly; that is, whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury would be under a duty imposed by the law of 1900 to redeem the silver certificates in gold if their redemption in gold became necessary to maintain their parity?

Mr. ALDRICH. Unquestionably.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, as a matter of fact—and the Senator from Rhode Island knows as much about the purpose and history of that act as anybody—the very object of imposing upon him this duty to maintain the parity was to compel him to redeem silver certificates in gold and thus remove any question about their value.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was made his duty to maintain every dollar of money outstanding, issued by the United States or under its authority, at a parity with gold, which was made the standard of value.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has answered the question of the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Illinois tried to bring partisan politics into this discussion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. CLAY. Indeed, I think the Senator has. I do not want to get up any issue on that question. The question is what is right—what is best for the country. He says the reason why United States notes in circulation are as good as gold is because we have $150,000,000 of gold reserve for the purpose of redeeming $346,000,000 of United States notes. I want to say to the Senator we have $346,000,000 of United States notes with $150,000,000 of gold reserve, and the Senator from Rhode Island says that indirectly our silver certificates, of which there are nearly five hundred millions, are redeemable in gold, and that our national-bank notes, $600,000,000, are redeemable in lawful money, and lawful money is redeemable in gold. That makes about a billion and a half of paper money redeemable in gold with only $150,000,000 of gold to redeem it.

The Senator, then, does not insist that we must have a gold dollar for the redemption of every paper dollar we place in circulation. If we did, we would have only about one-tenth of the paper money we now have in circulation.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. The notes of the Bank of England are considered to be as good as gold and are supposed to be issued on the gold basis, but there is only 30 per cent in the reserve. The $346,000,000 of greenbacks issued, with a hundred and fifty million of gold reserve, are perfectly sound gold notes.

I will detain the Senator but a moment. I merely want, if he will permit me——

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to call his attention to the fact that with currency issued against a gold reserve instead of a bond-secured currency—and I believe entirely in the system of a gold reserve and not the bond security—it is held universally that one-third of the total circulation is an ample basis. It is the case in England, which is certainly sound financially.

Now, you come to national-bank notes, which are redeemable in lawful money.

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. They are taken out of circulation either by the gold notes or the silver notes of the United States or by the greenbacks. They are all on a gold basis, and all have a good deal more than one-third of gold behind them.

Mr. CLAY. For the gold certificates there is in the Treasury gold equal to their full value.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator will concede, of course, that our national-bank notes are all redeemable in gold indirectly. They are redeemable in lawful money, and if they should be redeemed in United States notes of course the holder of those notes could go and get gold for them.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. The greenback can redeem the bank note.

Mr. CLAY. The fact is, as I understand, under existing law all our paper money is redeemable either directly or indirectly in gold.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but the point I wish to make is that if you redeem the national-bank notes you do not redeem them in addition to the Government paper. You substitute the Government paper for them. They are not in addition to the Government paper.

Mr. CLAY. Certainly not. If the holder of a national-bank note takes it to the Treasury and gets lawful money for it, then somebody else may get hold of that lawful money, and of course that lawful money would be redeemable in gold.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. CLAY. Of course when the note is taken in the first instance to the Treasury to be redeemed it is not redeemable in gold. It is redeemable in lawful money of the United States. I think I understand it. I think the Senator is correct in regard to that position.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me for a moment?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have been very greatly interested in the speech of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. Thank you.

Mr. ALDRICH. The argument the Senator has been making has been rather unfamiliar in the Senate for fifteen or twenty years. It was quite familiar before that time. I should like to understand him if I can. Does he think that Government notes ought to be issued to the exclusion of all other forms of currency? Do I understand that to be his position?

Mr. CLAY. I believe that the money the United States places in circulation ought to be gold and silver, coined by the Government, and paper money issued by the Government. I have never yet been able to see why we should authorize banking institutions to issue money and have the Government stand responsible for its redemption, while the Government fails to exercise that power itself.

Look at the present condition of our finances. We are at peace with the world. We are a strong and powerful nation, with more resources probably than any other nation in the world.

I believe that the function of issuing and circulating money should never be delegated to the banks. Let the Government issue the money, and let the banks be confined to the legitimate business of banking.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia would then retire the national-bank notes and issue United States notes in their places?

Mr. CLAY. I am not prepared to say that now. You have to deal with conditions as you find them. We have banking associations with outstanding obligations which it would take years to redeem, and I am not prepared to say that in a year or two you can change the financial system of our country.

Mr. ALDRICH. What would the Senator do with the silver certificates? Would he retire them and issue United States notes in their places?

Mr. CLAY. I would not. They are coin.

Mr. ALDRICH. Silver certificates are not coin.

Mr. CLAY. They represent so much coin. So much coin in the Treasury stands good for them.

We are now dealing with a system that has been going on for years. It is not like building up a new system. You have to do it gradually. If I had to start a system now I would coin gold and silver. I would supplement it with the amount of paper money we need to carry on the business of the country, issued by the Government.

The national banks of the country are many of them in the hands of our best men, but they have been the pets of this nation for a long time. We have deposited in the national banks $241,000,000 of money collected by taxation from the American people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Without any interest.

Mr. CLAY. Without a dollar of interest. I would much rather the money was deposited in the banks than to lie idle in the Treasury, because if you keep it idle in the Treasury you take it away from the channels of trade.

The $241,000,000 now deposited in these banks is worth $100,000 a year in interest. The $241,000,000 was collected by taxation from the American people when it was not needed to pay the expenses of this Government. No business man who anderstood the elementary principles of finance would think of keeping idle money lying in the banks when he had interest-bearing notes outstanding. I believe, in the first place, that our monthly receipts and monthly expenses ought to equal each other, or about equal each other. You are bound to have a little surplus—$40,000,000 or $50,000,000. We have on hand to-day nearly enough surplus to pay one-third of our entire indebtedness, and I do not believe we can defend, from any standpoint, going to the American people and collecting, year after year, an amount equal to $270,000,000 when you do not need it to pay the expenses of this Government. Every time you take money out of the pockets of the people by taxation and allow it to accumulate in the Treasury and then deposit it in the banks it is to the interest of the banks and against the interests of the American people.

Mr. President, what will be the result? The national banks are allowed to take national bonds and on them issue circulation. National banks, by the provisions of this bill, will be allowed to take railroad bonds and city bonds and State bonds and county bonds and use them as the basis of circulation. National banks will be allowed, without paying any interest, to take all the revenue that you collect and do not need and keep it in their vaults and loan it to the people. National banks are the pets of the nation, enjoying privileges that no other citizens enjoy; and we have given them more power than they ought to enjoy. To-day, Mr. President, we are taking another step in increasing their power.

The friends of these institutions believe that in a few more years our national bonds will be paid and there will be no bonds to be used for the purpose of providing for the issue of national-bank notes, and now you are starting anew, starting with a certain class of railroad bonds, a certain class of city bonds, a certain class of municipal bonds. The object is to perpetuate the system when you get out of national bonds. The truth of the matter is Congress was clothed with this power to be exercised for the good of the American people, and we ought never to transfer it to any individual or to any number of individuals. We ought to exercise it for the good of the entire American people.

Where are the State bonds held? Who has purchased them? Where are they located? Who are the holders of these bonds? Very few citizens in my State hold Georgia bonds. These bonds are held in the East. The East has controlled the finances of this country since the civil war and has grown rich and powerful at the expense of the balance of the country. Where are our city bonds held—our city bonds drawing 4, 5, and 6 per cent interest? They are held by capitalists in the East. Our banks in the South and in the West do not own and control these bonds.

No additional circulating medium will be provided by the provisions of this bill in either the South or the West. Take the railroad bonds specified in this bill. The bill provides for the class of railroad securities that shall be used. I can name but one railroad in the South that has complied with the provisions of the bill; very few, if any, in the West. The railroad bonds of the South and West could not possibly be used as a basis of a circulating medium. This bill was most skillfully drawn in the interest of the rich and powerful; in the interest of the capitalists and not in the interest of the plain American people. What has been our financial policy? In the past we have allowed those with vast fortunes to manipulate and control our circulating medium. Congress has delegated to individuals and corporations possessing large capital the right to issue money and to circulate it; giving these banking associations the influence and favor of the Government to the detriment of the American people. When Treasury notes are issued, sanctioned by the Government, without interest, and are made money by law, no partiality and favoritism is shown to anyone. Such action upon the part of Congress represents the best interests of the entire American people. Vast fortunes have been accumulated. These fortunes have been used to control the politics of our country, to direct the policy of Congress, and we have neglected the interests of the plain people of the nation.

Let us not neglect their interests. With a happy and contented population, feeling that every citizen has had just and equal treatment at the hands of the Government, we need have no fear of American institutions. The American people love justice and fair play. They do not want a few corporations or individuals able to buy bonds and form banking associations to control the circulating medium of this country. I lay down as a sound proposition that a great Republic like ours can always carry a large part of its indebtedness in time of profound peace in the way of Treasury notes, and that these notes can be made legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, and can be kept as good as the gold and silver of the country. We should never part from these principles. The ablest statesmen that this country has ever produced have stood for these sound and just principles. President Jackson used all of his great power to induce Congress to have the money of the nation based upon the revenue and credit of the nation. His ablest lieutenant, Thomas H. Benton, discussed this subject on the floor of the Senate with great power and force. There were lively discussions in Congress on currency in 1837. Thomas Benton said in the Senate:

> The Government ought not to delegate this power to corporations if it could.

It was too great a power to be intrusted to any banking company whatever, or to any authority but the highest and most responsible which was known to our form of government. The great Senator said:

> The Government itself ceases to be independent—it ceases to be safe when the national currency is at the will of a company.

And he might have said at the will of banking associations. Senator Benton said:

> The Government can undertake no great enterprise, either of war or peace, without the consent or cooperation of that company. It can not count its revenues for six months ahead without reference to the action of that company—its friendship or enmity, its concurrence or opposition—to say how far that company will permit money to be scarce or plentiful; how far it will let the money system go on regularly or throw it into disorder; how far it will suit the interests or policy of that company to create a tempest or suffer a calm in the moneyed ocean.

Said the great Senator:

> The people are not safe when such a company has such a power. Temptations are too great, the opportunity too easy to put up and down prices, to make and break fortunes, to bring the community on its knees to the Neptune who presides over the flux and reflux of paper. All property is at their mercy. The price of real estate, of every growing crop, of every staple article in the market is at their command; stocks are their plaything, their gambling theater in which they gamble, deal with as little secrecy and as little morality and far more mischief to communities than common gamblers can carry on their operations.

The immortal Calhoun spoke on this important subject. His famous speech should be studied, should have the careful attention of the students of finance. He spoke in 1837, with great power and force, of the danger of the Government transferring to individuals the right to control our circulating medium. This was a trying time in the history of the Republic. The great South Carolinian said:

> It is, then, my impression that in the present condition of the world a paper currency in some form is doubtless indispensable in financial and commercial operations of civilized and extensive communities. In many respects it has a vast superiority over the metallic currency, especially in great and extended transactions, by its greater cheapness, lightness, and the facility of determining the amount.

The great statesman said:

> No one can doubt but that the Government credit is better than that of any bank; more reliable, more safe. Why, then, should it mix up with the less perfect credit of those institutions? Why not use its own credit to the amount of its own transactions? Why should it not be safe in its own hands while it shall be considered safe in the hands of 800 private institutions scattered all over the country, and which have no other object than their own private profit, to increase which they extend their business to the most dangerous extremes? And why should the community be compelled to give 6 per cent discount for the Government credit, blended with that of the bank, when the superior credit of the Government could be furnished separately, without discount, to the mutual advantage of the Government and the community?

The great statesman tells us that such a course gives a preference to one portion of citizens over another that is neither fair, equal, nor consistent with the spirit of our institutions. He further illustrates:

> Suppose the Government were to take up the veriest beggar in the street and enter into a contract with him that nothing should be received in payment of its dues or for the sale of its public lands in the future, except in gold and silver and his promissory note, and that he should have the use of the public funds from the time of collection until their disbursement.

Well does he ask:

> Can anyone estimate the wealth which such a contract would confer? His notes would circulate far and wide over the whole extent of the Union, and would be the medium through which the exchanges of the country would be performed, and his ample and extended credit would give him a control over all the banking institutions and moneyed transactions of communities. The possession of a hundred millions would not give a control more effectively.

The great statesman asks:

> Would it be fair, would it be equal, would it be consistent with the spirit of our institutions to confer such advantages on any individual? And if not on one, would it be if conferred on many, and if not, why should it be conferred on any corporate body of individuals?

I repeat, if we give to any class of individuals or any class of corporations the sovereign right to issue and circulate money, which sovereign right belongs to this Government, such corporations enjoying this prerogative and special privilege will become all powerful in the Republic and will control the finances of the nation. Let the banks be confined to the banking business, and let the power to issue and circulate money be exercised by Congress.

In discussing the bank Andrew Jackson was trying to destroy, Mr. Calhoun said:

> The only safe course for both the Government and the banks is to remain as they are, separate; each in the use of its own credit and in the management of its own affairs; the less the control and influence of the one over the other, the better; confined to their own legitimate sphere—that of affording temporary credit to commercial and business men.

Mr. Calhoun further said:

> Nothing but experience can determine what amount and what denominations might be safely issued; while it might be safely assumed that the country would absorb an amount greatly exceeding its annual income.

But whatever may be the amount that can be circulated, he said:

> I hold it clear that to that amount it would be as stable in value as gold and silver itself, provided the Government be bound to receive it exclusively with those metals in all its dues.

Mr. Calhoun, in discussing this subject, further said:

> The question is not between credit and no credit, as some would have us believe, but in what form credit can best perform the functions of sound and safe currency.

The South Carolinian on this important point said:

> I have freely thrown out my ideas, leaving it to this body and the public to determine what they are worth, believing that there might be a sound and safe paper currency founded on the credit of the Government exclusively.

And he closed his remarks by declaring to the American people that he should strenuously oppose all attempts to create a national bank to reunite the political moneyed powers, more dangerous than church or state, in any form or state.

Have we forgotten the lessons taught us by Andrew Jackson, Thomas H. Benton, and John C. Calhoun? Shall we depart from the principles taught us by our greatest statesmen in the earlier days of the Republic?

The United States, at the beginning of the civil war, had no national-bank currency, and the means to prosecute the war had to be obtained on the credit of the Government by taxation; while it has been said that Treasury notes were a war measure—a measure of necessity and not of choice—these notes have exerted a most beneficial influence over the property and material interests of the individuals of the United States.

Hon. E. G. Spaulding, a Member of Congress from New York, and whose name is intimately connected with Treasury notes, has truly said:

> They have affected the debtor and creditor, producer and consumer, and the price of labor and every article consumed in the household, and they still exert a great influence socially, commercially, and politically over the people of this great Republic and all the ramified and extensive business in which they are engaged.

It is true that there were statesmen in the early days of the Republic who doubted the power of Congress to make Treasury notes a legal tender in the payment of debts; many of them contended that gold and silver alone could be made a legal tender in the payment of debts, but this now is not an open question, for our Supreme Court has decided—and no one contradicts the law—that Congress has the constitutional right to issue paper money and to make this paper money a legal tender in the payment of debts.

Mr. Spaulding, who was a Member of Congress during the civil war and who was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, has given a most interesting history of greenbacks, and to him must be attributed to a large extent the action of Congress making these notes a legal tender in the payment of debts, was sustained by able men during the debate, while many of the ablest statesmen of the country declared that the action of Congress in making them legal tender would be declared unconstitutional. This distinguished Member of Congress from New York, who was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, closed the debate in the following forceful language and unanswerable argument:

> But, sir, knowing the power of money, and the disposition there is among men to use it for the acquisition of greater gain, I am unwilling that this Government, with all its immense power and resources, should be left in the hands of any class of men, bankers or money lenders, however respectable and patriotic they may be; the Government is much stronger than any of them; its capital is much greater; it has control of all of the banker's money and all the broker's money and all of the property of the American people.

A distinguished Representative asked the question:

> Why, then, should the Government go into Wall street, State street, or Chestnut street begging for money? Their money is not as secure as Government money; they issue only promises to pay, which, if the Government does its duty, are not half as secure as these Treasury notes based on adequate taxation of all the property of the country.

And this is true. All the great wealth of this great Republic is subject to the jurisdiction and control of Congress for the purpose of carrying out the powers delegated to Congress. If Congress should issue a half billion of United States notes and make them legal tender in the payment of debts and provide for their redemption, Congress would have the right to tax the entire property of the American people to fulfill these obligations.

Who will contend that the promise to pay on the part of the Government is not good? Who will contend that the promissory note of the Government is not better than any banker's note or any individual note?

Who will contend that the holder of United States notes, made legal by an act of Congress, would want to exchange them for gold? Why should they want to exchange them for gold when the United States notes, dollar for dollar, will buy just as much of the necessaries of life as gold? Treasury notes, issued by the Government on the faith and credit of the whole American people and limited in amount, can never depreciate while the Government is sound and not engaged in a war likely to lead to bankruptcy and the ruin of the nation. Of course if the nation should perish the promise of the Government would perish, but this is not probable. Who would prophesy the failure of this Republic?

In order for United States notes to be as good as gold Congress must make them money, giving them the qualities of money, limit the amount, and make them perform the functions of money just like gold and silver and national-bank notes. I do not believe that anybody can successfully contend that a United States note would not be as good as a national-bank note. Who will contend that the promise of a national bank is any better than the promise of the Government? National banks get their life from the Government, and their notes are kept on a parity with gold and silver because the Government is back of them.

But let us discuss for a few minutes the Aldrich bill. Those on the other side of the Chamber who discredit Treasury notes and call them fiat money and declare they will depreciate the currency, because we have not the gold to redeem them, certainly do not understand the provisions of the Aldrich bill. The five hundred millions in currency for national-bank notes provided in the Aldrich bill, based on Government, State, city, municipal, and railroad bonds, are indirectly redeemable in gold; they are redeemable as national-bank notes now in circulation are redeemable under the existing law, and, under the existing law, these notes are redeemable in Treasury notes, and the Treasury notes are redeemable in gold, and the Government of the United States guarantees their redemption.

If capitalist and banking associations should comply with the provisions of the Aldrich bill and secure and put in circulation five hundred millions of national-bank notes, all of these notes would be redeemable in gold, and the Government stands responsible for their redemption; then, if the Government at last is responsible for these national-bank notes that are redeemable in gold, I am unable to see how the Government would be any more embarrassed if it should issue Treasury notes redeemable in gold; if it would, then it will necessarily be embarrassed by the provisions of the Aldrich bill.

Who can consistently say that Treasury notes would be too great a strain against the gold reserve, and at the same time provide for national-bank notes that will result in the same strain against the gold reserve?

The only way I can account for it is that they want the special classes to issue and circulate money, and they want the Government to delegate the power to do this to the banking associations in order that these banking associations may grow rich and powerful and control the money of the country. If this should be our financial policy, we should all be at the mercy of the banking associations.

Our friends on the other side of the Chamber tell us that the United States notes now in circulation ought to be retired and that we ought not to print and put in circulation any more paper money, that this prerogative ought to be delegated to the banks, and that all paper money put in circulation ought to be issued by the banks. This would be a deplorable condition, and the people would be absolutely at the mercy of the banking associations so far as currency is concerned.

If we have arrived at that period in our history when Congress is willing to surrender unconditionally the sovereign power given to it by the Constitution to regulate our currency in behalf of the entire American people and transfer this right to a few corporations, many of whom may exercise it for selfish purposes, not keeping in view the best interests of the entire people, we have reached a sad day in our history.

I repeat: I stand for gold and silver and paper money issued by the Government, limited in quantity, but sufficient to do the business of the country; but I fear we are gradually tending in the direction of an absolute surrender of our paper money to the banks. Money is power, and great wealth will likely control the country. Special privileges, whereby one becomes rich and powerful, are never willingly surrendered. This is forcibly illustrated in tariff legislation. When a powerful interest has been fostered and protected by the Government and has grown rich, how hard it is to ever induce Congress to force a surrender of these special privileges. We should seek to do justice to all of our citizens, conferring no right upon one that we do not give to another, but giving everyone a fair chance in the race for wealth and honor. We make our national banking associations the special pets of the nation; they are allowed to use certain securities for the purpose of issuing and circulating money; but no other citizen is allowed this privilege. They become the national depositories of the United States, retaining millions of money without paying one cent interest.

We have now deposited in our national banking associations money collected from the people; about $250,000,000 wrung from the people by taxation, and lying idle in the different banks, and not paying one cent of interest. These deposits are worth $100,000 per year in interest. In one city we have deposited $75,000,000, and every cent of this money has been collected from the American people by taxation when it was not needed to pay the expenses of the Government. We ought to keep down taxes and to make our receipts and expenditures balance each other. Our monthly receipts and expenses ought to balance.

No good business man who owes money drawing interest would let his surplus money lie idle in the banks, but he would take it and apply it to his interest-bearing notes, and what excuse can Congress give for collecting from the American people $300,000,000 more than we need to pay the expenses of the Government? I am not complaining that this surplus was not left in the Treasury. It ought to have been deposited in the banks and drawing interest—in fact, it ought never to have been collected from the people, if we did not need it.

We have now enough surplus on hand to pay one-third of our entire indebtedness, and our bonds are drawing interest, and these vast sums of money are in the banks drawing no interest. We should take this money and pay our interest-bearing bonds, as far as it will go, and thus cut down our indebtedness, or we should utilize it in making public improvements—improving waterways, erecting public buildings, and giving rural-route service to the American people.

Is it true that the Republican party has arrived at that period of its history where its sole object is to tax the people and accumulate a surplus that the banks may have the use of it without any cost? If so, it is a sad day in our history. Our appropriations have grown enormously in the last ten years; we spend almost a billion annually; but, notwithstanding this fact, taxation has been so enormous that we have accumulated a large amount of money that we do not need to run the Government.

What should be the policy of Congress? We should reduce the tariff and put it down to a revenue basis; find out if our manufacturers are not selling their products in other countries cheaper than at home, and find out if this tariff legislation is not largely responsible for the trusts that exist in this country to-day; find out if farming implements and machinery are not sold cheaper abroad by about 25 or 30 per cent than these same articles are sold to our people for home consumption; we should scrutinize most critically our appropriations; we should run the Government economically, and we should give to the American people ample money to do the business of the country.

We have in all more than a billion and one-half of gold coin and gold bullion. I wish to condemn the practice of issuing gold certificates, retaining enough gold in the Treasury to redeem the certificates so issued and at the same time issuing a billion and a half of paper money against a hundred and fifty millions of gold reserve, when even this amount is not necessary as a reserve. Why, with a billion and one-half dollar stock of gold and the Government possessing the taxing power to fulfill all of its obligations and to carry out all of its promises, the Government can issue and float ample Treasury notes to do the business of the country. If we are to pursue our policy of redeeming our paper money in gold (which I do not indorse), it is supreme folly to contend that you must have a gold dollar deposited in the Treasury to redeem every paper dollar placed in circulation. When the American people know that the Treasury notes are made legal tender by the Government and that the Government is responsible for their redemption and that the faith and credit of the Government is pledged for their redemption, the American people, having confidence in the stability of American institutions, will never desire to exchange their paper money for either gold or silver. Why make the amount of your gold certificates equal to the value of the gold bullion you have on hand and contend that no greater amount of paper money shall be issued against this gold than these certificates when you at the same time place your Treasury notes, your national-bank notes, and your silver certificates on a different basis?

Those who claim that this Government can not issue and circulate a paper currency of its own, based upon the silver and gold bullion belonging to the country and the resources of the nation, certainly can not properly appreciate the great wealth of the Republic. The wealth of this nation is greater than a hundred billions of dollars, and the entire wealth of the nation is subject to the will of Congress to carry out the promises of the Government. We not only have our gold bullion and our silver bullion to redeem the promises of the United States, but all the wealth of all the classes of this great nation is subject to the will of Congress to carry out its promises. To say that the United States can not issue and circulate ample paper money directly united with our gold and silver to perform the business of the country is a reflection upon our credit. Our promises have never yet been violated. Promissory notes based upon the faith and credit of the nation are backed by the entire wealth of the United States. Promissory notes based upon the faith and credit of the American people are backed by all of our banking capital, our agricultural interests, and every species of American wealth. Who will contend that such notes are not as good as the notes issued by any individual or any corporation? Again, the Aldrich bill meets my condemnation for another reason. This legislation gives to national banking associations the right to buy State, municipal, city, and railroad bonds and to use them as a basis of circulation. The very fact that our United States bonds, drawing 2 per cent interest, can be used as a basis for issuing money, has made them much more valuable and higher than they otherwise would be in the markets. Who owns the municipal, State, county, and railroad bonds specified in the Aldrich bill? These bonds have been purchased by the capitalists of the country. When these bonds can be used as a basis of a circulating medium, as provided in this bill, is it not true that they will gradually appreciate in value? I predict that the city, county, State, and municipal bonds now selling for 100 will, at an early day, reach 110. The effect of this legislation is to enhance the value of these bonds in the hands of capitalists. We are allowing these capitalists to enhance their fortunes by the favor of the Government. We are giving to them a privilege that none others enjoy. We are allowing them to use their bonds as a basis for circulating money. When bonds can be used for any such purposes, these bonds naturally appreciate in value.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court has placed it in the power of Congress to issue United States legal-tender notes in any amount at any time it may deem politic or advisable. This is no longer a debatable question. In 1862 the first legal-tender act was passed, and then for the first time notes having the quality of legal tender intended to circulate as money were issued by the United States Treasury. The Supreme Court held that Congress had a legal right to issue these notes and to make them a legal tender for all debts. At first the decision was based upon the constitutionality of legal-tender notes upon the war powers of Congress. The court afterwards went further and held that such notes issued in times of peace were constitutional, and it has long since been settled that Congress has power, if it deems expedient, to issue legal-tender notes in any amount, either in time of peace or war. What a blessing this decision was to the American people! Why should Congress fail to exercise such an important power in behalf of the American people? Why question the soundness of a paper currency issued by the Government and maintain that bank issues of paper money are better than Government issues? Who would be willing to exchange a Government note for a bank note of any corporation? What would your national-bank notes be worth to-day without the backing of the Government? If any special benefit is to accrue by the use of the Government credit in issuing and circulating paper money, why not give this benefit to the American people? Why should we sell interest-bearing bonds to banking associations to be a basis of circulation when the same circulation could be issued by the Government without costing the American people anything?

Of course, Congress must act prudently and wisely and limit the amount of the issue. We must act prudently and wisely about all legislation; the amount of money we appropriate for pensions, the expenses of the Army and Navy. By acting rashly and extravagantly we could destroy the Republic. In dealing with financial questions we are presumed to act with the same caution and business judgment that we act about other matters of important legislation. I repeat that with all the gold and silver that the Government possesses and with all the resources of the nation back of Congress to carry out its promises and redeem its pledges, this Government not only has the power to issue and circulate paper money, but can issue and circulate paper money sufficient in volume, coupled with the gold and silver we have, to transact the business of the entire country, and if we are not neglectful of the people's interests we will exercise this right and pursue this policy.

Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have read, a letter from a distinguished Georgian, giving his views on this important subject. He was once a Member of Congress from my State. He is a student of history; he is not only a student of history, but he has made history; he has written history, and his opinions on this important subject are valuable to the country. The intelligent readers of the Republic will appreciate the value of his suggestions if they peruse this most interesting and instructive letter. It gives me pleasure to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read, as requested by the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read as follows:

THOMSON, GA., February 4, 1908.

Hon. A. S. CLAY, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The reason why the Aldrich bill and any similar bill should be defeated is that it delegates a function of government to private individuals and corporations.

To every student of government it is perfectly clear that certain great powers are absolutely essential to the sovereign. No matter what form sovereignty may take unto itself, its essential attributes must necessarily be the same.

Never has there been any dispute of the fact that the power to supply a nation with its currency is a sovereign power. No government ever allowed that power to slip from its hands if it was possible to prevent it.

One of the very first indications of disintegration and governmental chaos is the loss of the central authority of the exclusive right to coin money. Thus, in the middle ages and in the dark ages it was an unfailing sign that the barons had encroached on the king when the feudal lord could exercise, without interference, the right of private coinage. In those times, you will remember, the feudal lord claimed and exercised the right to administer justice within his own domain. In his own courts he tried his vassals for their lives, and not only sentenced them to terms of imprisonment, but sentenced them to death. The exercise of this function and the exercise of the right of private coinage was, as it were, a barometer by which you could tell the state of affairs throughout the kingdom. Wherever we find that the feudal lord exercised the right to hold his own courts and to coin money there was almost no governmental power in the hands of the king. As the central authority grew in strength, one of the very first things which marked that growth was the taking away from the feudal lord the right to coin money and administer justice.

The Aldrich bill proposes to give to the national banks additional powers to expand and contract the currency. This is a tremendous advantage, which should never be allowed to private citizens or corporations. Just as it is a sovereign right to declare war and make peace, to maintain the Army and the Navy, to regulate foreign commerce, to make treaties with foreign nations, to make laws and execute them, so it is a sovereign right to supply the nation with its currency. We should no more delegate to private individuals or corporations the sovereign function of supplying the country with money, or with paper to be used as money, than we should delegate to private citizens or corporations the sovereign right to control the Army or to regulate foreign commerce. The historic position of the Democratic party is that the Government alone should exercise governmental functions, and to no principle was the Democratic party prior to the civil war more emphatically committed than to that of reserving to the Government the exclusive right to supply the nation with money.

When the Government issues its own Treasury notes to supply the need of paper money, every one of those notes is based upon the credit and the wealth of the entire nation. If the credit of the nation—represented in the bonds issued by the Government—affords a safe foundation for paper money, notes issued directly by the Government would equally be safe. Whatever it is that makes the bond good would make the note good.

We hear it said that the Government might issue too many notes. Why can not it be said with equal force that the Government might issue too many bonds? It is the Government that has to decide after all. The Government has to say how many men shall serve in the Army, how many in the Navy, how many ships we shall have, how many post-offices we shall have, how many custom-houses we shall have, how many public buildings we shall have, how many offices and salaries we shall have.

When we have to trust the Government with the tremendous power of declaring war, which carries with it the death knell to untold thousands of citizens, it is the merest nonsense to say that the same Government shall not be trusted with the discretion of saying how many Treasury notes shall be issued.

Another reason why a direct issue of Treasury notes by the Government is preferable to notes issued by or through the banks is that under such a system it would be practically impossible for any clique of bankers to make a corner on the nation's supply of currency, as they did last fall. In other words, if the Government were supplying the country with its currency, it would be impossible for the national banks to bring about panics, as they have done on three occasions since the civil war.

The cry for "elastic" currency is based upon an incorrect idea of the function of money itself. In any nation the supply of real money should bear some proportion to the population and to the volume of business. There being no such thing in nature as money, and money itself being a mere creation brought into existence by legal decree for the purpose of effecting exchanges in some better way than that of bartering one commodity for another, it is a tool with which people do certain work, and therefore this tool of exchange should be proportioned to the work which it was intended to do.

At present we have in actual circulation only about $1,000,000,000, where we have about 85,000,000 people doing business on property worth something like $115,000,000,000, with a volume of commercial exchanges every day of the year which is so large that the figures can hardly be grasped by the human mind. Now, it ought to be apparent that if we had an adequate supply of currency, it would circulate as the adequate supply of blood circulates in a healthy human system. Nature takes care of the circulation of our blood, and when we are in health the automatic action of the blood vessels does not attract our attention. If a congestion occurs, we know that something is wrong with the circulation, and it is then that we try to restore that natural, healthy circulation which, for some cause, has been disturbed.

The thought which I want to express and illustrate is that a healthy currency system circulates automatically, according to the law of supply and demand, just as our blood circulates when we are in health. We do not need to have the arteries opened and an artificial supply of blood pumped in. Such a performance is not elasticity in any true sense of the word, and the bankers know it as well as the people know it. What they mean to do by their so-called "elastic" feature of the currency system is to always regulate the amount of money available for circulation in such a way that interest will never be low. If our currency system were in a healthy condition there would be times when there would be little demand for money, and therefore the interest rate would drop. At other times—for instance, when the crops are moving—there would be a greater demand for the money, and the natural consequence of that greater demand would be that interest would advance.

What the bankers want to do by the Aldrich bill is to prevent what, to them, would be a dull season. Whenever by reason of Wall street gambling or otherwise there is a great demand for money and interest soars skyward, as it did last fall, they would, under this Aldrich bill, take out "emergency currency" in order to reap the golden harvest of 100 per cent or 200 per cent or 300 per cent, as the case might be.

The amount of the tax which is proposed for this emergency currency would be as nothing compared to the profit which the bankers would gain by it. The moment the abnormal demand for money passed away and business resumed natural conditions, the interest rate sinking as the demand decreased, these specially privileged bankers would call in the emergency money, thereby decreasing the supply, and the immediate effect would be that the interest rate on the supply of money which was left would rise. Thus, these favored bankers would inflate or contract at will. Under the provisions of this bill the power which would be given to them over the markets is simply incalculable. By the inevitable law of supply and demand the increase in the volume of currency would send the prices of commodities upward. The sudden retirement of currency which this bill allows the bankers to effect would, of course, send values down; thus the markets of 85,000,000 people would be see-sawing up and down all the time at the pleasure of a handful of remorseless exploiters of a governmental prerogative.

This Aldrich bill puts all the power in the hands of a few bankers and leaves none to the Government; for while the bankers will have the right to increase the currency at any time by $500,000,000, the Government will not have the power to increase it five cents. The bankers can compel the Government to allow them to inflate the currency, but the Government can not compel the bankers either to issue or to retire a single note. The Government might desire an increase of actual money, but it would be powerless to take a step in that direction. The Government might think that the emergency currency had been out long enough and ought to be called in, but it will have no authority to issue any mandate to that effect. Thus we have the astonishing spectacle of our great Republic deliberately surrendering its prerogative to a handful of irresponsible financiers and usurers who have shown that they are willing to exploit both the Government and the people without scruple and without remorse!

Consider how this Aldrich bill would operate. In part, the emergency currency is to be based on railroad bonds. We know it to be a fact that the greater number of railroad presidents are also in control of national banks. This is true of Harriman, Gould, Ryan, Belmont, and many others. By the terms of this bill these railroad magnates can issue bonds in their railroad offices and then take the same bonds to their national-bank offices and issue notes which the unprivileged millions of the country must accept as money. Could there be any greater perversion and degradation of the powers of government? Could there be any form of special privilege more odious? Could there be any delegation of sovereign powers to private persons more dangerous in its logical tendency?

If the Government were to issue its own notes to supply the country with circulating medium it would be conforming to the sound doctrine of equal rights for all. It would have its currency going out into circulation among the people without some middleman standing in between the Government and the people to rake off a tremendous profit. The money would get into circulation through the appropriations of Congress, through the payment of pensions, through the taking up of bonds, through the construction of public works, through the reclamations of swamp and arid lands, and through the construction of canals. Personally, I should favor, with all my heart, the building by the Government of a few great post-roads, stretching from sea to sea and from Lakes to Gulf. Upon these post-roads I would send the iron horse.

By the issuance of Treasury notes to be legal tender for all demands, public and private, the Government would at once unlock the hoarded treasures of banks and of private individuals. The mere fact that the Government had taken a step in that direction would prove to Wall street that the policy of congesting money in New York could no longer be indulged. The moment the Government started up its own printing presses and began to put its own imperial stamp upon the nation's currency, those heartless, remorseless usurers of Wall street, who have brought this terrible distress upon so many millions of our people, would realize that the day of their tyranny was over. Governed by the merest selfishness, they would at once begin to put their own money into circulation to prevent the Government from making such an increase of its own note issues as would effectually undermine the power of these favored bankers over the commerce of the country.

In other words, I am against the whole national banking system, for the very same reasons given by Andrew Jackson, Thomas H. Benton, and Thomas Jefferson. I believe it to be an infernal outrage, as well as an anomaly in government, to allow six or seven thousand national bankers to use for their own benefit the irresistible power of expansion and contraction. The thing is hostile to the very spirit of democracy, and is ruinously antagonistic to the true interests of the Republic.

Another reason why the Government should issue all of the money is that it is manifestly unjust that any citizen or corporation should be allowed to have the use of the national credit in his business, to the exclusion of other citizens and corporations. Every one of the 85,000,000 people who compose our population has just as much right to the use of the national credit in his business as every other; therefore the only way in which this sound principle of equity can be maintained is for the Government, which represents all the people, to use the credit of all the people for the benefit of all the people. The issuance of greenbacks would be doing that very thing.

There is still another and most important objection to the use of bonds as a basis for the currency of the country. Owing to the fact that from the very foundation of the Government down to the present day national legislation has favored the capitalists of the East to the prejudice of other sections of the Republic; the greater portion of the capital invested in bonds is held in the East. When, therefore, we allow none but bondholders the enormous privilege, power, and profit of monetizing the wealth which they have invested in bonds, we discriminate against those whose wealth has been put into other things. The millionaire of the East, who for generations has been the beneficiary of the class legislation enacted by Congress, will come forward with his wealth represented by the bonds, and will be allowed to use this wealth as money; thus he will not only draw interest upon his bonds, but will draw interest upon the notes which are based on the bonds, and thus pocket two profits on the same investment; and, of course, where he thus reaps two profits, the millions of unprivileged citizens lose what he gains.

The farmers of the South and West have, in equity, in law, and in good morals, just as much right to monetize their lands, their wheat, their corn, their hay, their cotton, their cotton-seed oil, and their live stock as the bondholders have to monetize the wealth represented by the bonds. Mine owners and factory owners, merchants, and every other class of property owners have in equity and law just the same right to monetize their property as the bondholder has to monetize his; therefore when it is proposed to grant to the holders of bonds the exclusive right to monetize their wealth, we have not only done a monumental injustice to all other forms of wealth, but we have discriminated in favor of one section of the Republic against the others, for it is a well-known fact that, as compared with the East, the South and the West are not bondholding sections.

It is undoubtedly true that we need an increase of money, but this increase should be permanent, and not temporary. It should be real money and not mere credit stuff based on bonds.

To issue $500,000,000 of paper money would be most beneficial, provided it is real money and provided it is to remain permanently in circulation. To put out the wrong sort of money will do no good, but will do harm. To put out $500,000,000 of notes of any sort, good or bad, which are to be used for a short while and then destroyed will do harm.

The country either has a sufficient volume of currency or it has not. If we have got a sufficient quantity of money in circulation, then we do not need the additional supply contemplated in the Aldrich bill; but if we have a shortage which ought to be made good by an additional supply, then it is absolutely wrong to allow six or seven thousand national bankers to supply that deficiency on their own terms and to have the privilege of destroying the notes which they issue whenever it is to their interest to do so.

I can think of no national legislation which will inevitably bring more hardship upon the mass of our people than a refusal to give them a sufficient volume of real money with which to effect their exchanges. To put the entire business world of the United States under the feet of a favored class of eastern capitalists, as the Aldrich bill proposes to do, is certainly a monstrous proposition, which would have no chance for its life in any forum where intelligence, reason, and justice prevail.

In proof that our forefathers, in instituting our Government, meant to jealously guard the sovereign prerogatives of the central Government, we have only to read the clause in which the power to create money was denied to the States. This shows that the central Government never intended to abdicate the function of creating money to supply the country. How, then, can we believe that they meant that private corporations should ever exercise the sovereign prerogative of creating money, which was, in terms, denied to the States? It is as clear as anything can be that the fathers meant that our Government should be a full-fledged Government, and they would have rejected with indignation any suggestion that a part of the function of government should be abdicated in favor of private individuals or corporations.

Our present national banking system gives to a few favored private corporations vaster powers over the financial system of the Republic than all the States together can exercise, and this fact alone should convince any impartial student that the national banking system is utterly unconstitutional, being at war not only with the letter of that supreme law of the land, but in deadly hostility to its spirit.

No government should mutilate itself or prostitute its powers. In allowing a privileged few to farm, for the selfish profit, the great money-creating prerogative our Government maims itself of one of its necessary members and allows the greedy banker to prostitute one of its sovereign functions.

Very respectfully, yours, THOMAS E. WATSON.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not wish to infringe further upon the time of the Senator from Georgia when he desired to conclude, but I should like to define the point which I was trying to make when he was speaking about the national-bank currency being a claim against our reserves. It is admittedly a sufficient reserve for bank circulation to hold a third in gold. That is considered amply sufficient by all the conservative banking systems of the world, and I believe the opinion is an entirely sound one.

Let me now state briefly the amounts of our Government and national-bank issues.

We have $346,000,000 of greenbacks upon which we hold $150,000,000 gold reserve, which is an ample reserve for the protection of those greenbacks. We have $825,000,000, in round numbers, of gold certificates, which are warehouse receipts representing actual gold in the Treasury. We have, in round numbers, $480,000,000 of silver certificates, which are also warehouse receipts representing actual silver in the Treasury. The total, with the greenbacks, of the Government money is, in round numbers, $1,651,000,000.

Mr. ELKINS. Greenbacks?

Mr. LODGE. No; all money—gold certificates, silver certificates, and greenbacks. I am speaking of the Government money.

Now, all the money being at parity, and all directly or indirectly redeemable, we have as a gold reserve against that mass of currency the $825,000,000 of gold represented by the gold certificates, and we have $150,000,000 of gold reserve for the payment of greenbacks, making nearly one thousand million dollars of gold held by the Government for redemption purposes against a total issue of Government paper of $1,650,000,000. In other words, we are holding a reserve of two-thirds against all the Government paper that is out.

Now, take the bank notes. They were $607,000,000, I think, in August. I think they are about $690,000,000 now. They are redeemable not directly in gold, but in the lawful money of the United States; that is, they are redeemable by any part or any form of the $1,651,000,000. Back of that $1,651,000,000 lies the thousand million dollars of gold. The bank currency, therefore, is not an additional drain on that gold. The bank notes can be taken up by any form of the Government money now out, and must not be added to the Government notes as an additional claim on the gold reserve. That was the point I intended to make, and I may say further that even if we were to add, as we have no right to do, the national-bank notes to the total of Government notes, we should still have a gold reserve of nearly 50 per cent of all issues, and it is this that makes our currency solid.

Mr. President, I did not intend to be drawn into this debate. I have thought several times during its progress of a story which was told by the late Senator Vance, whom many of us remember, when a good many years ago there was one of our great financial discussions beginning about either greenbacks or silver. Senator Vance went down to North Carolina, and at a large meeting where he was announced to make a financial speech, he said:

I have come before you to discuss this great financial question. I do not pretend to be a financial expert. The only financial principle with which I am entirely familiar is that it takes two names to float my note.

I have often felt that that was a very frank and honest confession of the amount of financial knowledge which a great many of us possess.

But, Mr. President, although I am not a financial expert, I know somewhat more, I believe, than Senator Vance admitted, and I desire to go a little bit further than his statement would carry me. There has been a statement here to-day from various quarters of financial belief, especially by the Senator from Georgia, and I should like the opportunity to make my confession of faith also.

I should be very glad to see every dollar of Government notes withdrawn. I wish we did not have a dollar of Government notes afloat. I should like to see the Government confined to coining gold and silver and only issuing, if necessary, warehouse receipts against them. I do not believe in the Government being in the banking business. I do not understand how the Government can get paper out after it has printed it unless it either lends it or spends it. I know no other way by which it can put it out. The one method is pure inflation; the other is entering upon the business of loans and discounts, which no government should touch.

I do not believe in the creation of money in order to meet current expenditures. I think that is the way toward inflation. I do not believe the Government should be in the business of lending money. That is the business of a bank. The Government should control banks unquestionably, and all governments do, because every government must hold its hand upon the money that is circulated, the creation of money being necessarily a function of a sovereign government.

But I should like to see all the paper money issued by banks issued against a gold reserve, which I think is the sound business way. I have no faith in this bond-secured circulation as a scientific method of issuing currency. It has, no doubt, at one time served our purposes admirably. We ought now to substitute for it a better system. Your bonds sell at an extravagant price and are growing more and more inadequate as a basis of circulation. The bonds of the Government, which ought to be a means for the investment of the savings of people of modest means, to-day are at fancy prices because the banks need them in order to furnish their circulation. All the objections which are made to the pending bill because of the use of bonds to secure circulation go to the very foundation of all the circulation of the national banks.

But if we adhere to a bond-secured circulation, we must enlarge the bonds which give the basis of that circulation or we shall strangle business by recurring currency famines. If we are prepared, and I wish we were prepared, to get rid of a bond-secured circulation and substitute one based upon a gold reserve, that is one thing; but if we are going to retain a bond-secured circulation, then we must enlarge the bond basis, as is proposed by this bill. We must give it a reasonable elasticity; otherwise you are making a currency so rigid that you are constantly increasing the dangers of just such panics as we had last autumn.

I should like, as I have said, to see bank notes secured on a gold reserve. I should like to have all the notes issued by banks, and I think the scientific and proper way to do it would be to have a central bank of issue, like the other great commercial countries of the world—a bank controlled as those banks are controlled, by the Government under rigid laws.

I believe the system of England and of France and of Germany is the sound system of currency, giving, as a gold reserve necessarily does, a proper elasticity, thus relieving us from the rigidity of the bond circulation and separating the Government from the business of banking.

It is one of the serious objections to our large surplus that the Government, in an indirect way, has to lend to the banks, and so to the people. Let the banks do the banking business and let the Government issue the gold and silver, as required by the Constitution. I hope that the Government will never again, under any circumstances, enter on the business of printing credit paper, and I should like to see the $346,000,000 greenbacks which are still left taken out of the circulation. But I am aware that a central bank of issue, a bank circulation based on a gold reserve, and a complete extinction of all Government credit paper are at this moment councils of perfection from my point of view. We must do the best that can be done under existing conditions. I think this bill is the best that can be done and has many valuable provisions. I believe it will do great good and that it reflects great credit on the high ability of the Senator who framed it and who was confronted by most difficult conditions. It will ward off such a panic as we have just seen. It is not designed to add to bank profits, but to help and benefit the country, and that I most thoroughly believe it will do.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into a general discussion of the pending bill nor of the financial question. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the furnishing of money by the Government to its people is not a banking business. It is an exercise of a sovereign power, just as is the coining of gold and silver.

The Senator is very much disturbed about the Government doing a banking business. He says, let the banks do the business. I agree to that if we had banks. But I should like to ask the Senator what would have been the result the other day if the Government had not stepped in and helped the banks?

They were certainly unable to do the business of this country without the Government's aid. Is not that a fact?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. If we had had a system such as I described, a system like that of England, or the system of France, or, best of all, the system of Germany, where they have an emergency tax currency, we would have been just as able, and a great deal better able, to deal with that situation than we are to-day. Instead of that, as we are now situated, the Government has to go in by awkward methods to relieve the situation. Under the other system the method would be all prepared beforehand for an increase of the currency and to relieve the situation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have had some experience with this financial question myself in this body. I recall that in 1900 the Senator from Massachusetts and his associates declared that they had accomplished what the whole world had been looking for—a complete financial system—when we adopted the gold standard. I recall the debate, and if the financial millennium had not come it was supposed to be very near with the passage of that bill, and everybody expected the millenium the next morning, or, at least, very soon.

Mr. President, there is no one who can give any good reason on the face of the earth why the Government should guarantee somebody else's note and not issue its own in place of it. It is banking when the Government guarantees somebody else's note quite as much as it is when it issues a note. The Government stands, as it has been said, behind every note. To-day every bank note is guaranteed by the Government of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN rose.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say only a word or two more.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I expect some day to take some time on the pending bill. I do not care about doing it now. We had a discussion yesterday over the reserves, which I think illustrated the wisdom of the committee at least when they did not incorporate the question of reserves in the bill. Nobody seemed to know yesterday what a reserve was or what the purpose of it was. There was evidently a confusion here with some of the Senators between a reserve and cash. Under our system, which is said not to be as good as that of Germany or France or some other country, the Government has turned over to private corporations called banks the control of the money of the country. We have turned it over on the theory that we could not trust the representatives of the people in this body and in the other House to keep within proper bounds in the issue of safer money. What we have said we were unable to do we have turned over to the banks to do. I think the banks have satisfactorily furnished about as much money as we need. Nobody can tell how much we will need when conditions arise just as they have arisen in this country, and just as they have arisen with the so-called perfect system of Germany and France. With this English financial system mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts for twenty-two years the Bank of England did not pay gold on its notes which by law they were directed to pay in gold. For twenty-two solid years they failed to do that. They passed laws during that time——

Mr. ALDRICH. For twenty-five years.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Rhode Island, who is, no doubt, right about it, says it was twenty-five instead of twenty-two years. I figured it up in my mind and made it twenty-two years. They not only did not pay their notes in gold, although by it it was necessary that they should be paid in gold, but they had some system by which the council suspended the law and ordered the bank not to pay in gold, so that the bank might not be charged with an infraction of the law. That was a very strong application of the banking law to relieve the bank from the charge of breaking the law.

Mr. President, there has not been any system by which there has not come financial disturbance, and there never will be any system which will prevent all the time occurrences such as we have had. I think that the present condition is absolutely a normal condition, growing out of the condition not of the banks, but of the commerce of the country.

As I said the other day, and I want to repeat, the German system will never suit us. The French system will not suit us, nor will the English system suit us. There is no people in the world who do business as we do business in this country. Therefore you can not cite either Germany or any other country as furnishing a financial system for us.

I know, Mr. President, that of late there has been a disposition to say, of course, that if we would follow the English people in a great central bank, or the German people in a great central bank, then we would be in a good condition. In the other end of this building there are some gentlemen who insist that the thing to do is to bank upon the assets. The Senator from Texas touched that the other day. I remember very well myself when people banked on assets. I am told by some that when this bill, which we will probably pass next week, goes over to the House an attempt will be made to substitute a bill they have there for it. I do not believe the American people are prepared for a system of banking without any responsible redeemer. While there are a great many defects in our system, nobody yet, not even the Senator from Massachusetts, can present a bill here that, in my opinion, is any better than the present banking system.

Of course theoretically you say you do not want to base your banking upon a debt. The question in banking is, How will you make secure your issue? That is the one thing, the most important thing. Banking originally was not confined to receiving deposits or issuing bills. It is less than two hundred years since the first bill was ever issued, except the money issued by the old Roman government, by order of the senate, which was paper money, and that was issued only rarely.

A bank was organized for the purpose of transferring money from one section of the world to another. For ages that was the only purpose for which a bank was used. They were banks of exchange and not of issue. Then later it was thought best to issue paper money. That was supposed to be issued upon a certain amount of gold and silver, and I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that that is the best kind of banking when you have the gold and silver back of it. I do not find any fault with the fact that we have made every bit of paper money in this country redeemable in gold, and I say redeemable in gold because it is redeemable indirectly in gold, and that is just the same as if it was redeemable in gold by positive enactment. The money is just as good. I take a bank note from Texas and I take a bank note from Massachusetts. I do not care how that bank stands. If I knew it was in bankruptcy to-day I should know the bill was worth all it carried on its face. Why? Because the Government of the United States stands back of it, and the Government ought to stand back of it. Does anybody doubt the ability of the Government to make it good? Certainly not.

Mr. President, the greenbacks were issued in time of distress, in time of war, and they got a bad name, and the people who do not consider these things very much still adhere to that idea. I must confess it is with some surprise that I hear a Senator stand on this floor and say, "I am in favor of getting rid of the greenbacks; I want the Government to go out of banking," when the Government put nearly two hundred and fifty millions of dollars in the banks to keep the banks from going into bankruptcy. I am not complaining of that, Mr. President. As I stated the other day, it was a proper thing to do. It is the only thing that has kept the banks of this country in existence to-day. If the Government had not come to the relief of the banks, in my judgment, there would not have been 5 per cent of the American banks solvent to-day. The securities they hold would have gone out of sight. Nobody would have dared to buy them, and nobody would have bought them, and nobody would have had money to buy them.

I am one of those who believe that the Government should sustain the parity of all kinds of paper absolutely on a gold standard, because that is our legal standard, silver certificates, bank notes, greenbacks, and everything else, which they must do, as the Senator from Rhode Island said, under the act of 1900. It is a duty put upon the Secretary of the Treasury to make every dollar as good as every other dollar. While the law does not say he shall take a silver certificate and exchange it for gold, yet if he did not do that when I went to the Treasury with my silver certificate, that minute he discredits that bill and that kind of money. It is a duty put upon him as plainly as if you had said in the law you must redeem in gold every silver certificate that comes to the Treasury, if you have got the gold, and if not, any other money that the holder may want.

Now, Mr. President, that is not an objectionable feature of this system of ours. It is a good thing. The greenbacks, I said, were issued, not as many people have believed, with no promise to pay. We promised in the greenback to pay. We did not have the means to pay, Mr. President, and we made the mistake of withholding from the greenback one function of money, and that was to make it a legal tender for everything. We did not make it receivable for import duties. Then the people who wanted gold to pay duties on imports struggled for gold, and gold went up, and the greenback went down to 38 cents on the dollar.

The promise of the Government was out to pay then just as it is out now, but the condition was against paying it. Had the greenback been receivable for Government dues, there would have been a demand for several hundred million dollars of greenbacks that did not exist. Possibly it would not have brought them to par, but after January, 1875, if I recollect aright, there was a positive pledge of the Government to redeem greenbacks in gold. I believe the word was "coin," but in those days silver and gold were alike.

Now, Mr. President, that did not bring the greenback to par, but it did raise the greenback gradually toward par. I have mentioned this before and I want to mention it again. When Mr. Sherman, as Secretary of the Treasury, without any warrant of law, absolutely and in defiance of law, said, "I will take the greenback for import duties," that moment the demand made for a greenback was such that it was equal to gold, every dollar of it, and it has been equal to gold ever since. We call it lawful money now. That is rather satisfactory to me. I like to hear it called lawful money. I remember when it was derided and condemned and despised. I remember when every man who thought he was a financier and every man who thought he understood the philosophy of money, no matter how ignorant he might have been, was deriding the greenback and calling it fiat money.

Mr. President, I do not believe in fiat money. I do not believe in fiat money as it is understood in this country. I do believe that the term "fiat" applies to all money made by law, and there never was any money made in the history of mankind that was not made by law, or common use that became equivalent to law.

Mr. President, I want to spend but a moment more of time on this subject. Over two thousand years before Christ was born, in Asia, in China, they fixed the relation between gold and silver by law. Fifteen hundred years before Christ was born they fixed it by law in India. I am told to-day you can not fix it. There has not been a time in the history of mankind when law has not governed the issue of or coinage of money, and declared how much there should be of precious metal in it and what it should be used for.

As a people we think we know all about finances. I have found that a man who stood behind a counter and paid out money on checks, and perhaps collected money on notes, thinks because of that he knows all about the finances of the country and of the philosophy of money. We have had some such men in the Treasury Department, who would get frightened whenever silver rose 2 or 3 cents an ounce. The Government was buying silver and making 120 per cent on the purchase, doubling its money on it, and yet he shivered with fright because silver was likely to rise possibly to par.

Mr. President, the relation between silver and gold has been one fixed by law in every country in the world. It is so fixed to-day. We have discredited silver, but we have a law of that kind on our books. For years our Government has made a determined effort to discredit it through the whole civilized commercial world. We heard expressions of great pleasure when it was learned that Mexico went to the gold standard. We are told now that China will go to the gold standard. But we have been saved from disaster and disgrace by the fact that the gold product has increased from one hundred to four hundred million dollars each year for the last few years. Wait until China, with its 400,000,000 people, wakes up to something like the activity of the civilization of this country and begins to use gold; then that $400,000,000 per year will disappear, and you will not be able, without great effort, to hold a billion and a half in this country, as we now have.

Mr. President, a financial system should be permanent. It ought not to be one adopted for to-day or for to-morrow, but for all time. To-day it is said we ought to reform the banking system. This is the worst possible time to undertake such a task. Reform your financial system when everything is right and normal and not in the throes of a financial revolution. It could be seen yesterday, during the very short and brief discussion that took place, that no two men here think alike upon all the points which are necessary to be considered. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], if he should try, could not sit down and draw a bill that would get, even on his own side of the Chamber, the support that it would need to become a law. I doubt whether half a dozen Senators, getting together and agreeing, could frame a bill upturning and changing the whole financial system that we would be willing to pass. Nobody has attempted that. Here is an emergency. Such an emergency is likely to occur again. It has occurred, in my memory, many, many times, and it has occurred within the memory of every man here at least several times.

It is not pretended that the bill reported from the committee is a perfect bill, nor is it an attempt to change our system. I have great doubt whether it will accomplish as much as we hope; but it gives an opportunity, at least, for the banks to increase their circulation at a time when they are willing to pay a tax upon the issue of 6 per cent per annum. It can not be called an "expansion of the currency." It is a moderate and conservative proposition.

Mr. President, before we get through with the debate, I mean to say something about the attacks which have been made upon the Aldrich bill. My table is covered with suggestions in regard to the currency. I have had a large correspondence on this subject. I suppose it comes partly from the fact that some years ago I took an active part in the silver discussions in this body. Thousands of men all over the country are now saying that this is the proper time to restore silver to its former condition. Men are saying that this is the time to establish a sound banking system. They say, "See what has been done in Canada; see what has been done in France." Mr. President, many of the men who are writing such letters and making such appeals practically know nothing about the financial systems of any country in the world—their own not excepted. They just set themselves up as authorities. I have received petitions of such a character that I did not care to put into the RECORD showing absolute ignorance of the very first principles of finance. The philosophy of money is one thing; the practical treatment of it is another. This bill is an attempt on our part to give it practical treatment in view of conditions that are almost absolutely certain to arise. They may not arise in many years or they may arise between now and the close of the present fiscal year, but we want to give the people who have been frightened to understand that we have at least tried to do something in this direction. The people who want an asset currency will not be satisfied. The people who want a central bank will not be satisfied, but everybody knows that we have to consider a practical question, and this is not the time to undertake experiments, however great the appeal for such action may be.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that whenever he gets ready to take the banks out of the Government business I will be ready to help him take the Government out of the banking business. The Senators who express so much solicitude to withdraw the Government from the ordinary operations of business never seem to feel any solicitude to withdraw the banks from the exercise of the sovereign function of coining and issuing money. It is just as much the business of the Government to coin and issue money as it is the business of the banks to discount paper and furnish loans. I no more am willing for the Government to go into the business of lending money than I am willing to have the banks go into the business of making money.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY TUCSON, ARIZ.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 11, before the word "interest," to strike out "annual" and insert "semiannual," so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz., pursuant to an election held for that purpose on the 14th day of March, 1907, in said city, is hereby authorized, through its mayor and board of common councilmen, to issue bonds of said city to the amount of $300,000, the said bonds to be payable thirty years from the date of their issue and sale and to bear interest at the rate of not more than 4½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually. Of the proceeds of the bonds so issued the sum of $260,000 shall be applied to the extension and repair of the water and sewer system of said city, the sum of $25,000 to the equipment and improvement of the fire department; the balance of $15,000 shall be applied to the erection of a city hall for the use of said city. Said bonds, when issued, shall bear the date of their issue and the date of maturity and the rate per cent of interest, not exceeding 4½ per cent per annum. Each of said bonds shall have sixty semiannual interest coupons attached to and printed with the bonds, and each coupon shall bear on its face the amount of interest due for six months on the bond and each shall bear a number corresponding with the number of the bond to which it is attached. The interest on said bonds shall be paid semiannually, and as the interest is paid the coupon representing the same shall be detached from the bond and, after being marked paid, shall be filed by the treasurer of said city and preserved as vouchers. Said bonds shall be issued under the seal of said city of Tucson, if it have a seal, and shall be signed by the mayor of said city and attested by the signature of the clerk of the common council.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2082) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I shall have to ask the Senator from Idaho not to insist on going on with the unfinished business this afternoon. The Senator knows that some few of us have undertaken to assist him in this matter. I am one of the few, but there is a meeting this afternoon of a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, which would have met this morning but for the fact that it was deemed important that the discussion on the financial or currency bill should go on. The parties are in the committee room now waiting for the hearing to begin, and it is absolutely necessary that I should be there, as I am a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I can dispose of the question in a moment. I shall not object to the bill going over after I have made a statement as to the status of the bill for the information of the Senate, which, I think, will be not only important but interesting.

Mr. President, we have proceeded with the consideration of this bill so far that up to the point reached when it was last before the Senate we have now passed over only sections 51, 112, 113, 114, 115, and 185. This brings up to chapter 10, which refers entirely to slavery and peonage, and involves, I think, only questions that being disposed of as to one section will apply to the chapter. After that chapter—and I desire it to appear so that the status of the bill will be exactly known—after chapter 10, which is the slavery chapter, there remain to be considered only sections 286, 319, and 326. I make this statement that the Senate may be advised that we have practically disposed of the bill, except as to the title referring to slavery; and, inasmuch as the former consideration of that chapter developed the fact that there were some wide differences of opinion, it may be necessary to have present a full attendance of the Senate when that comes up for consideration. I therefore have no intention at this time of asking that we proceed further, and I now ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). At the request of the Senator from Idaho, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 17, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 14, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 208.

Whereas the President in his message to the Congress at its present session, on December 3, 1907, makes the following recommendation:

"We should acquire in the Appalachian and White Mountain regions all the forest lands that it is possible to acquire for the use of the nation. These lands, because they form a national asset, are as emphatically national as the rivers which they feed, and which flow through so many States before they reach the ocean;" and

Whereas there have been introduced into the House of Representatives bills for the acquirement of national forests in the southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains, the same being H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457, which provide as follows:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire for national forest purposes, by purchase or gift, lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, and situated on the watersheds of navigable streams in the southern Appalachian Mountains within the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and in the White Mountains within the States of New Hampshire and Maine. * * *

"That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the lands to be acquired under this act; but no payment shall be made for any such lands until the title shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General and shall be vested in the United States.

"That the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and said sum shall be available immediately and until expended for said purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall each year make a detailed report to Congress of the lands purchased under this act, and the cost thereof:" Therefore be it

Resolved, That so much of the President's message, above referred to, which relates to the acquisition of lands in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains "for the use of the nation" be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, together with the questions involved in the bills referred to, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire for national forest purposes lands in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains, within the States named, with instructions to said committee to report fully at an early date their views as to the power of the Federal Government by legislation to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the lands referred to in said bills, situated in the States mentioned, and to appropriate money therefor, and also what power and authority the Federal Government has by legislation to acquire for the purpose of forest reserves lands within a State wherein the Government of the United States has no public domain, and to make appropriation therefor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, following the reading of the preamble the resolution will make clear the subject-matter sought to be covered by this resolution. What is desired is to have the Committee on the Judiciary examine into the constitutionality of such action as is proposed by the bill which has been introduced in furtherance of the recommendation of the President in his last annual message.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I have a similar bill providing for the Paloduro forest reserve and park on the head of the Red River in the State of Texas.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then precisely the same constitutional question is involved in the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas that is involved in the bill which is referred to in the preamble to this resolution, and of course the opinion of the Judiciary Committee upon the subject involved in this resolution will cover the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The resolution reported does not contemplate the reference of any particular bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not. It refers a constitutional question to the Committee on the Judiciary to report upon. It does not refer any bill; it does not confer upon the Judiciary Committee jurisdiction of any particular bill, but it does refer to the committee the legal constitutional question involved in the bill which has been introduced, and also involved in the similar bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that is also before the Committee on Agriculture, and I presume it will not be transferred to any other committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of this side of the House I desire to state that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules recommending the passage of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and referred to the Committee on Rules. It merely provides that the questions that are stated in the resolution shall be submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary for an opinion on the law and the constitutionality of proposed legislation of a general character, as to how far the Federal Government can go into the States and buy up lands and convert them into parks and forest reserves and all that. It seemed to all of us, irrespective of party, on the Committee on Rules, that this was a question on which we ought to receive a report from a body of lawyers to advise the conscience of the House.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CURRIER. I assume that if the resolution is agreed to, the Committee on Agriculture will defer any action until they get a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assume that the Agricultural Committee would not attempt to consider this bill or any like proposed measure until the Committee on the Judiciary had reported.

Mr. CURRIER. Does the gentleman think that we shall get a report so that action may be had this session of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution expressly provides for an early report on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be in order on the next legislative day after the passage of the appropriation bill now before the House, not to interfere, of course, with District of Columbia business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day shall be in order on the next legislative day after the completion of the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, not to interfere with District of Columbia business. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT RICE, MINN.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12401) to legalize a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rice, Minn., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINDBERGH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, ETC.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress shall be, and is hereby, authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REPAYMENT OF COMMISSIONS AND PURCHASE MONEYS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15660) to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public land laws, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where purchase moneys and commissions paid under any public land law have been or shall hereafter be covered into the Treasury of the United States under any application to make any filing, location, selection, entry, or proof, such purchase moneys and commissions shall be repaid to the person who made such application, entry, or proof, or to his legal representatives, in all cases where such application, entry, or proof has been or shall hereafter be rejected, and neither such applicant nor his legal representatives shall have been guilty of any fraud or attempted fraud in connection with such application.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that any person has heretofore or shall hereafter make any payments to the United States under the public land laws in excess of the amount he was lawfully required to pay under such laws, such excess shall be repaid to such person or to his legal representatives.

SEC. 3. That when the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall ascertain the amount of any excess moneys, purchase moneys, or commissions in any case where repayment is authorized by this statute, the Secretary of the Interior shall at once certify such amounts to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized and directed to make repayment of all amounts so certified out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated and issue his warrant in settlement thereof.

With the following amendment:

Amend the title so as to read:

"A bill to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public laws."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want an explanation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill was transmitted to the House by the Secretary of the Interior, with request for its consideration, to meet a condition that has arisen, owing to the recent practice of the Department in regard to payments made upon entries not confirmed and accepted. The present law provides that where an entry has been accepted, and it shall afterwards be found that the entry must be canceled for conflict or because erroneously allowed, the money shall be repaid. But about two years ago there were very considerable withdrawals made of public lands, and the registers and receivers were instructed that when an entryman came to make final proof and payment on entries within those areas, they should receive the money, receive the proof, but hold the same until the question of the validity of the claim should be finally passed upon by the Department. That resulted in an accumulation in the offices of the registers and receivers of large sums of money, and finally some three or four hundred thousand dollars had thus accumulated.

The officials of the Department did not believe it wise to allow these large accumulations to remain in the local offices, so they instructed the registers and receivers to transmit those sums to the Department, and they then went into the Treasury and could not and can not be paid out without some express provision of law. Now, in a very great majority of those cases, probably 95 per cent of them, the entries will be allowed, or have been allowed after examination, but here and there is a case where for some reason the entry can not be allowed and perfected, and as the law now stands there is no way by which the money paid can be returned to the entryman. Then there are the cases of excess payment. In the first instance payments are generally made on the maximum acreage of the subdivision of land entered; but when the case is finally approved payment is required only for the exact acreage of the entry. The acreage is sometimes less than 40 acres, 80 acres, or 160 acres, as the case may be, and those sums having now passed into the Treasury, whereas under the former practice they remained in the hands of the registers and receivers to be repaid by them, can now only be repaid by a provision of law.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. MANN. As I understand this bill, it does not provide for the payment where there is fraud or attempted fraud——

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That express reservation is in the bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Where an entry honestly made can not for some reason be perfected, where the character of the land after examination has proven to be not such as to make it subject to entry under a given law, or the tract has been found to be covered by a prior claim, in those cases repayment will be made.

Mr. GRONNA. There are also cases where overpayments have been made.

Mr. MONDELL. I have referred to the fact of excess payments. That is one of the provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming requests that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and the bill be considered at this time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public laws.

CURRENCY QUESTION.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter on the currency question which I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] asks unanimous consent to print a letter on the currency question in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, from whom is the letter, about how long is it, and the date of it?

Mr. WEEKS. This letter is written by Mr. Morton Frewen, an Englishman, who has given a great deal of attention to this subject, who appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency the other day and made a statement which is very lengthy, and he has compiled a résumé of that statement in this letter which will be of interest to the membership of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The letter is as follows:

21 LAFAYETTE SQUARE,
February 12, 1908.

DEAR MR. WEEKS: I think that the account I gave to-day to your Committee on Banking of Mr. Goschen's plan of currency reform is much too long and elaborate to attract public attention; but if I can condense the Goschen proposal and apply it to your existing conditions a short letter on such lines might be of use.

You recall that Mr. Goschen was chancellor of the exchequer in 1891. The Baring crisis at that time had demonstrated the weakness of our system of finance. Much of the full legal-tender money—gold or gold notes—which, had it been in the reserves of the banks would have greatly relieved the strain, was and to-day is in the pockets of the people. The more acute the crisis the greater the tendency to increase this pocket and till money at the expense of the bank deposits. Such was the problem Mr. Goschen wished to solve. Himself a banker, he was also our greatest authority on international exchange; he was orthodox and monometalist; his mind was at its best, and he thought and spoke not hurriedly, but three months after the crisis, with that full sense of responsibility which attached to his official position. I mention this because the authority behind any currency proposal should be unquestioned and unquestionable. Mr. Goschen's plan was this: He proposed to subtract a sovereign ($5) per capita of the legal-tender gold money carried by our people in their pockets and tills and to place this sum in a central reserve, to be available at any time of crisis.

But how was he to get hold of these thirty millions of gold? By what method could he purchase it? There was no point clearly in buying gold with gold, nor would he buy it with legal tenders; that way, he saw, lay inflation, and inflation would drive gold abroad, and thus defeat his object. Mr. Goschen proposed to buy the sixty millions of half sovereigns which are in the pockets of our people, giving them a small "token currency" note for 10 shillings ($2.50), the legal tender of which was to be limited to 40 shillings. These notes were to be secured by silver bullion or coins. I hope I have made the point clear.

Let me recapitulate. Mr. Goschen wanted a large central gold reserve; he wanted to fill the void created by its subtraction with "token money," not with legal tenders. Thus he leaned to the side of currency contraction, because any expansion would raise prices of commodities, would thus increase our imports, throw the balance of trade against us, and drive out of the currency the very gold he wished to retain.

Such was the Goschen plan of 1891. It was worthy of its author—a careful banking measure to secure a new huge gold reserve, and thus to clear banking and speculation of some of their attendant risks. We in England buy silver at the market price (to-day 27 pence per ounce). We coin and issue to the public just as much as they will carry at 66 pence per ounce, so that to buy up the half-sovereign to-day and issue the small note secured by silver would cost 4 shillings for each half-sovereign (10 shillings).

The Goschen plan, announced in a speech at Leeds, January 28, 1891, was vigorously opposed by the "silver men" at that time. We regarded it as a "cowardly makeshift." We pointed out that prices were everywhere falling because of the shortage of gold in currency. Notwithstanding this our chancellor of exchequer proposed to contract the full legal-tender currency to the tune of some thirty millions sterling, or 25 per cent of our entire metallic currency, and to issue in its place "pocket-money notes" secured by silver, which, on the chancellor's own showing, would not in any way support prices. It was a proposal to contract the currency. It is to-day a proposal to contract the currency, but the compensating advantages are at this time so very great that the objections we then found no longer exist. To-day, owing to the immense new gold supplies, prices of commodities are rising with unprecedented rapidity, and a plan such as this under review, which would retard the rapidity of this rise, would find few objectors. It is the rise of prices which makes from time to time a currency stringency. As you here phrase it, much money is needed "to move your crops," and of course "dollar wheat" requires more money to move it than is required by 50-cent wheat.

I can not, within the limits of this letter, explain fully the adaptation of the Goschen plan to your needs. If you adopted it you would purchase two or five or ten millions of outstanding gold certificates each month, and issue in their place small "token-money" notes representing fractional silver, the legal tender of these notes—this is the essential point—limited to $10. I believe if you would make this plan a basis for proposals to our Government the proposals would be accepted with alacrity, and, perhaps, by Germany also. This would consummate fitly the Wolcott Commission of 1897.

The Goschen plan is much more valuable to this country than even to Great Britain. You need the security of a central reserve of, say five hundred millions of "free gold." The silver to secure the token-money notes would give employment and profit to your own mines, and far more important than even your financial security—immensely important though that is to your trades—the demand for silver to put behind these small notes would, even if spread over fifteen years, raise the price of silver bullion to a dollar an ounce. The effect of this rise in silver would be magical; it would raise all the exchanges with silver-using Asia; it would thereby greatly impair the ability of Asia to export to Europe such products as wheat, cotton, rice, timber, etc.—products which compete with your exports in European markets. And again it would build up your exports to Asia, which now languish with each fall in exchange—in other words, with each fall in the price of silver bullion. You are building the Panama Canal, amongst other reasons, to assist, your trades with the Orient. A rise of 30 cents in the price of silver bullion, while giving that profit to your mountain States, would, by raising exchange with Asia, pay, and probably many times over, the entire cost of the canal. But these are not arguments, you will recognize, which apply with equal cogency to Great Britain. It is a saying with us "take care of the imports, and the exports will take care of themselves;" and we know that cheap silver does stimulate our import trade, and does reduce the price we pay for wheat, cotton, and much raw material. Nor have we any silver mines to benefit. Again, the government of India which has made the coinage of rupees a state monopoly, and sells these rupees to-day at a profit of 30 per cent—the rupee is selling for 16 pence gold, its silver contents are worth 10 pence only—made a profit of $20,000,000 out of its seignorage during its last financial year. The Indian government coined no less than 227,670,000 rupees. In deprecating the proposals of the Wolcott Commission in 1897, which would have restored the rupee to its former exchange rate, the government of India said: "The sudden rise in the rate of exchange would kill our export trade for the time at least." All these are valid objections to the Goschen plan as applied to England, though I admit the balance of advantage of financial security and reasonable rates for money easily bring down the other scale in its favor.

I anticipate here one objection, and that the locking up of $500,000,000 of gold to confront a crisis which, given such a "war chest," is never likely to occur. Whether such a burden of insurance is too considerable, that is a matter for the decision of Congress. Perhaps one-half of the reserve might be loaned at call in Europe, under conditions which would make its immediate repayment secure. Possibly a portion might be loaned to your own railroads, and their bonds held as security for an emergency currency issue in case of need. Mr. Goschen apparently would have kept his reserve free and intact, and no doubt in such conservative methods is the more perfect safety.

Believe me,

Yours, very faithfully, MORTON FREWEN.

The Hon. J. W. WEEKS, Member of Congress,
Banking and Currency Committee, House of Representatives.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16882, the legislative appropriation bill, Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the Clerk will begin the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] does not desire more time for general debate on his side of the House, and there is no desire for debate on this side of the House, and I therefore ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will begin the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Senators, $47,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1, page 2, insert:

"Provided, That the mileage of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress shall hereafter be at the rate of 8 cents a mile instead of 20 cents, as now authorized."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. It changes existing law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I confess the amendment is obnoxious to the rules of the House and subject to the point of order.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Document room: For superintendent of the document room, $2,500; first assistant in document room, $2,000; assistant in document room, $1,600; assistant in document room, $1,440; clerk to superintendent of document room, $1,440; skilled laborer, $1,000; in all, $9,980.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that I notice there is an increase in the salary of the superintendent of the document room of the Senate, not an increase in salary, but an increase in appropriation over last year from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a decrease.

Mr. MANN. There are a number of other changes in salaries, mostly increases in the House and the Senate, over the appropriations of last year. May I ask the gentleman whether all of these changes are changes which have been made under or in accordance with resolutions adopted by the House or the Senate, or whether the committee itself has arbitrarily made any increases in salaries?

Mr. BINGHAM. The one change the gentleman first referred to was because of the decease of the experienced official formerly connected with the document room of the Senate. The Senate on their own recommendation fixes $2,500 as a salary in lieu of the $3,000 that had been given to the gentleman deceased. As to the other changes, we have accepted several changes of the Senate without demur, on the general rule that we could discuss them with the Senate in connection with their necessities. The other changes in the House come from the resolutions of the House which we have with us and can read to the gentleman. The resolutions of the House have been followed without change in every particular, conceding to the subordinate force of the House that which the House recommended they should receive.

Mr. MANN. Have there been any changes made by the committee itself regardless of any action taken by the House?

Mr. BINGHAM. None whatever, save those recommended in the bill, which can be debated when we come to them.

Mr. MANN. I mean in the House force.

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $5,000; hire of horse and wagon for use of the Clerk's office, $900, or so much thereof as may be necessary; Chief Clerk, $4,000; journal clerk, $4,000; stenographer to journal clerk, $900; two reading clerks, at $4,000 each; tally clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $3,000 each; file clerk, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $3,000; printing and bill clerk, $2,500; assistant to Chief Clerk, $2,500; distributing clerk, $2,250; index clerk, $2,300; assistant enrolling clerk, $2,200; docket clerk, assistant disbursing clerk, resolution and petition clerk, printing and document clerk, assistant journal clerk, stationery clerk, and assistant stationery clerk, at $2,000 each; librarian, assistant enrolling clerk, and superintendent clerks, document room, at $1,800 each; document and bill clerk, $1,800; assistant to printing and bill clerk, $1,800; bookkeeper, assistant in Clerk's office, assistant in disbursing office, two assistant librarians, and five clerks, at $1,600 each; assistant file clerk, $1,700; assistant index clerk, and one special employee in clerks' document room, at $1,500 each; document clerk, $1,600; locksmith, who shall be skilled in his trade, $1,200; telegraph operator, $1,400; assistant telegraph operator, authorized and named in resolution adopted January 15, 1902, $1,400; three telephone operators, at $900 each; three telephone operators, at $75 per month each during the session; one night telephone operator, $720; for services of a substitute telephone operator when required, at $2.50 per day, $450; stenographer to the Clerk, $1,200; assistant in stationery room, $1,200; one assistant in document room, and one messenger in file room, at $900 each; assistant in library, and two messengers in disbursing office, at $900 each; one page, $720; attendant in charge of bathroom, $1,000; three laborers in the bathroom, at $720 each; three laborers, page in enrolling room, and janitor in the library, at $720 each; messenger in Chief Clerk's office, $1,200; janitor in file room, $720; allowance to Chief Clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $500; in all, $117,170.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many new employees there are in any section of the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Three telephone operators, at $900 each; three telephone operators, at $75 per month each during the session; one night telephone operator, at $720, and for services of a substitute operator when required, $250.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If it is possible at this time, I would like the gentleman to inform the committee and myself how many new employees are authorized under this bill, if he has the information?

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from New Jersey mean in the entire bill?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. If he will look at the report accompanying this bill he will get the exact number.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], if he will get the report he can ascertain that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey, that there are twenty-seven. The net increase in the entire executive service here is only twenty-seven.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], that I have examined the report and I have that information, but I merely asked the question so as to lead up to exactly what I wanted to know—that is, how many of those new employees are in the actual service of the House and how many of them go to the new Office Building, if any?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is talking about two things. He asked first how many increases there were in the entire bill, including all the Executive Departments, and I stated twenty-seven. There are no new employees provided for the House at all, except the messengers in the Post-Office Department that have heretofore been authorized by the House. Now, the telephone operators we are not now paying, but we are paying the telephone company for eight operators, and it is proposed to appoint these operators direct and put them under the control of the Clerk of the House, so that he can control the service and the operators and pay them direct instead of paying the telephone company. So it does not amount to any increased compensation or increased expenditure at all.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. As I understand the gentleman, this bill does not carry any other appropriation for employees connected with the telephone except those referred to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Except those authorized.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: For Doorkeeper, $4,500; hire of horses and wagon, feed, and repairs, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary; assistant doorkeeper, $2,500; Department messenger, $2,250; one special employee, John T. Chancey, $1,800; one special employee, $1,500; superintendent of reporters' gallery, $1,400; clerk to Doorkeeper, $1,200; janitor, $1,500; twenty-five messengers, at $1,100 each; messenger to the Speaker's table, $1,200; fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll, at $1,260 each; twelve laborers, at $720 each; two laborers in the water-closet, at $720 each; ten laborers, at $720 each; one laborer, $600; ten laborers, known as cloakroom men, two at $70 per month each and eight at $50 per month each; female attendant in ladies' retiring room, $720; superintendent of folding room, $2,500; Chief Clerk, $2,000; four clerks, at $1,600 each; foreman, $1,800; assistant foreman, $1,200; messenger, $1,200; page, $720; laborer, $720; thirty-one folders, at $800 each; two night watchmen, at $720 each; two drivers, at $840 each; two chief pages, at $1,200 each; two telephone operators, at $1,200 each; forty-six pages, during the session, including two riding pages, four telephone pages, press-gallery page, and ten pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each, $12,650; horse and buggy for Department messenger, $250; superintendent of document room, $2,500; assistant superintendent of document room, $1,800; clerk in document room, $1,400; eight assistants in document room, at $1,200 each; and one janitor, $840; for the following for service in old Library portion of the Capitol (transferred from office of Superintendent of the Capitol), two attendants, at $1,500 each, and one watchman, $900; in all, $171,205.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the item for assistant foreman, in line 3, page 19; against the item two telephone operators on line 11, page 19; against the item forty-six pages, adding two, on line 12, page 19; against the item four telephone pages, instead of two, on line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand to what the gentleman raised the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. One assistant foreman, $1,200, is the transfer of an employee now in the folding room.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the words to which the gentleman raised the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. "Assistant foreman," on line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to reserve the point of order against the clause "twenty-five messengers, at $1,100" in lines 14 and 15, page 18.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that that is the current law and not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply desire to make the point of order on line 3, to which I have referred. That is a new position and a change of existing law. On line 11, there are two new positions of telephone operators created, changing existing law. On line 12 two pages added to the existing number, and in line 13 two telephone pages added. My point of order is that this is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman that the assistant foreman is simply a transfer of an $800 employee from the folding room to the new building, where it is their purpose to establish a folding room. It is the only change in connection with the entire folding room, and for your convenience.

Mr. MADDEN. I will withdraw the point of order against that. That is on line 3, assistant foreman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. As to the increase of telephone operators, the chairman of the committee will answer the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order lies to either one of these paragraphs—two telephone operators, at $1,200. One of these operators, on the Republican side of the House, was appointed by and under the authority of a resolution adopted by the House fixing the salary at $1,200 per annum. This bill simply carries that position at that salary in accordance with the resolution of the House. Now, the other operator, on the Democratic side of the House, has been detailed from another department, under the Doorkeeper, and is serving that side; and it is for the purpose of equalizing the compensation paid to these telephone operators, one serving on one side of the House and the other on the other side of the House. I may say that these two telephone operators are the two that attend to the long-distance business of this House for the individual Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what is the salary the resolution of the House authorized?

Mr. TAWNEY. The salary of the messenger transferred from the Doorkeeper's department to act as operator over here I am unable to state. I think, however, that it was only $900. The House having authorized one long-distance operator to serve the booth on this side of the House, and the same service being allowed to the other side of the House by a detail from the Doorkeeper's department, the Committee on Appropriations thought that it was only fair and just that both performing the same service should receive the same compensation; and the House itself having fixed the standard of compensation for that service on this side of the House, we have allowed the same on the other side.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe no law exists under which these two places can be appropriated for. It is true that at the close of the last session of the last Congress there was a resolution passed by the House recommending a certain employment of a certain man for a certain place, but I do not understand that that is a direction to the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate for these places. My opinion is that there is no existing law authorizing the appropriation for these places.

Mr. CURRIER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CURRIER. At this session, and only a few days ago, a resolution was reported from the Committee on Accounts authorizing the employment of a telephone operator at a salary of $1,200 to serve on the Republican side of the House. That was adopted, and the resolution was agreed to by the House, and constitutes an authorization for the employment of the man.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I take issue with the chairman of the committee on the question of the need of the employment of these men. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if we discharge nine out of every ten men employed in the service of the House that we will be doing a favor to the people of the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, he should take issue with the House of Representatives itself and not with the Committee on Appropriations, of which he is a member, for the House has already authorized the employment and fixed the compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. At all events, Mr. Chairman, I believe that we are employing many more men than are needed. We are employing men whose services are not required at all, and certainly there is no authority of law for the employment of these two men, even though there may be authority for one. If the Chair insists that there is authority of law for one, I shall insist upon my point of order as to the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that a resolution was adopted by the House authorizing the employment of one telephone operator, at a salary of $1,200 a year, and he also understands that a second telephone operator provided for in this paragraph——

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. If the Chair will pardon me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. On February 5 there was an authorization for one messenger in charge of telephones, and I wish to submit an amendment so as to authorize two instead of one.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment would not be in order while a point of order is pending. The Chair understands the second telephone operator provided for in this paragraph has not been authorized by any resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that is so. There has been no authorization for employment of telephone operator at that compensation; he is now serving as a detail from the department of the Doorkeeper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair therefore holds that there is no authority of law by which the House can now appropriate for two telephone messengers at $1,200 each.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the Chair rules I want to appeal to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, who makes the point of order, that it is manifestly unfair for him or for the House to discriminate in the compensation paid to two employees of the House who are performing identically the same service, and I hope, in view of the fact, that he will withdraw the point of order and allow the authorization to go through.

Mr. MADDEN. If the two men are to be employed regardless of whether they should be employed, the fact that one is being paid $1,200 and the other $900 I think would be an injustice, and, in consequence of my desire to do no injustice to anybody, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to renew the point of order on that special item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia renews the point of order, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Now, I want to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not now in order, as there has been a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois to the words "forty-six pages during the session," lines 12 and 13, page 19. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this creates two additional pages without any authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear any gentleman on the committee as to the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that this is an increase of two telephone pages, made necessary by the increased number of booths on the outside of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to concede the fact that there is an authorization for only forty-four pages.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the present bill carries forty-six pages, and the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how many pages were authorized by a resolution of the House?

Mr. GILLETT. I think, Mr. Chairman, I am mistaken, and that this is an increase of two.

Mr. MANN. Before the point of order is sustained, if my colleague will allow me——

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that this increase of pages is caused by the increase of service necessitated by the new Office Building. Of course there will be many messages back and forth between the Capitol and the new Office Building, which will of necessity call for an increase of force. If forty-four pages were necessary before, an increase of two is very small, because the services of more than two pages is required, on an average, between the two buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The next point of order is on the words "four telephone pages," in line 14.

Mr. MADDEN. That I maintain is also a change of existing law—I refer to the telephone pages on line 13, page 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to call the Chair's attention to authority under which this appropriation is made.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, that is not any change in the number of pages. That does not include any new places. It is simply including four telephone pages. We are changing the nomenclature, but not changing the number of pages or necessarily their duties. I think in an appropriation bill we have the right to designate them as we please, and call them telephone pages or anything else.

Mr. MANN. The forty-four pages have gone out.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; two of them have gone out.

Mr. MANN. But that includes the whole thing. There are no pages left at all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask for information of the Chair, whether, in making the ruling, the Chair ruled out two pages or the forty-six pages?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was raised to the words "forty-six pages," so that those words go out of the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They all go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The three words—"forty-six pages."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then we have no pages at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be amended so as to insert the language of the existing law.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, are there not points of order now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one point of order now pending to the clause "for telephone pages," lines 13 and 14. The Chair understands the gentleman in charge of the bill to state that there is authority of law for the appropriation for these four pages, that these four pages come under the forty-four pages authorized by law.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. The reason I make the inquiry is because it seems to me that no amendment is admissible until the points of order are all disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois to the words "four telephone pages." There is now pending a point of order reserved by the gentleman from Indiana to the words "twenty-five messengers."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, my point of order includes "twenty-five messengers at $1,100 each." I understand that it has been held repeatedly that a resolution of the House creating offices is a sufficient basis, of course, to authorize the Appropriation Committee to report an appropriation annually for the pay of those officers. The resolution fixes the salary of the officers. The resolution providing for messengers originally provided that there should be a certain number—I think fourteen, at $1,200 each, and fourteen at $1,000 each. That is the only basis in law for this appropriation. I believe it was in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] moved to strike out the appropriations that followed the resolutions that had been adopted by the House some time before, and to insert the provision that is carried in this bill, or one identically the same, providing for the payment of a certain number of messengers at $1,100 each. There is no resolution or law authorizing the payment or the employment of messengers upon a salary of $1,100. There are two classes, one a $1,200 class and one a thousand-dollar class; I think in two appropriations before this this provision has been carried, but of course it was simply for the ensuing fiscal year and does not constitute law in the sense of the rules of the House as applied to the question now before the Chair for consideration. I have little or no doubt that the point of order will lie, but I simply reserved the point of order to call the attention of the House to the fact that these messengers are serving here, that they are all necessary, and that they are serving at a salary of $1,100 each. Before the change was made a couple of years ago half of them, at least, were receiving $1,200 and the other half were receiving $1,000. The House decided to equalize their salaries in the appropriation bill. The messengers as a rule come from the interior of the country. They are not residents of the city of Washington; they come here and attend the sessions of Congress, and I submit that $1,100 a year is inadequate pay for efficient men to perform the sometimes rather delicate and polite functions that apply to the service of messengers of the House. I believe they all ought to be paid at the rate of $1,200 a year, and by insisting in the point of order I could secure that salary for twelve or fourteen of them. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] shakes his head.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that a simple resolution of the House has greater effect in law than an act of Congress passed through the House and Senate and signed by the President?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends upon the resolution and upon the character of the act of Congress. The appropriation bill only purports to be legislation for one year, so that the current appropriation bill will not be legislation after the current fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. But a resolution does not purport to be current law for as long as one year.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to complete my statement. The current appropriation bill ceases to be a law when this one takes effect. Therefore that kind of legislation is not law at all during the period that this bill is to operate.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman would not contend that a simple resolution of one Congress could bind a succeeding Congress?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not say it could bind a succeeding Congress. A succeeding Congress would have the right to deal with a resolution the same as a succeeding Congress would have to deal with any law. It can repeal a resolution or modify it, but I undertake to say that a resolution of either branch of Congress providing for its own internal affairs, affairs that are necessary for the administration of its business, constitutes law in the sense of the rule respecting appropriations. That question has been decided, and the Comptroller of the Currency, on one occasion in a decision, went into the philosophy of the proposition, and stated it to be that each House must of necessity be independent; that if each House had to depend upon the other branch for subsistence and appropriations to carry on its own affairs, it would not have that independence that is essential to a deliberative and independent legislative organism, and under the Constitution the Comptroller of the Currency practically decided that a resolution of this kind for this purpose is law in the general sense. And the decisions of the House, I think, are unbroken that it is law in the sense of the rules respecting the rights of the Committee on Appropriations to make appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman contend that a simple resolution of the Fifty-eighth Congress has any effect whatever upon this Congress?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Most certainly; a resolution for the domestic economy of the House of Representatives is the law of the House, like all other statutes, until it is repealed.

Mr. MANN. As long as that House continues in existence, but when it ends the law ends.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I differ with the gentleman. Resolutions creating officers of the House are law until they are repealed. I do not refer to resolutions respecting the parliamentary procedure; each House must have its own rules of procedure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me; it is true that there are a series of rulings of the Chair, which have been very fortunate for the House, upon which we predicate appropriations upon resolutions, but the same series of rulings apply to existing appropriation law, and if you can hang the present proposition on an appropriation bill to a resolution passed fifteen or twenty years ago that lost its force when that House adjourned sine die, you can hang the same proposition upon a law that is now in force. The gentleman, I think, makes a very fine distinction.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not agree with the gentleman at all in his interpretation of the force and effect of resolutions reported and regularly adopted by the House creating officers for the administrative work of the House. They run and continue, in the sense of the rules of the House, applicable to appropriations until they are repealed. It has always been held that a current appropriation bill does not afford legal basis to justify the same kind of an appropriation for another year. That is only law for one year. That is a settled proposition, and the other question is equally well settled the other way. The decisions there have been that way, but, Mr. Chairman, I only want to impress upon the House the fact that while I believe this provision is subject to the point of order, these messengers ought to be paid $1,200 a year, and in doing that I am in no way responsible for any one of the twenty-five. I have no constituent on that force, no one has been appointed to that force upon my recommendation, and I am speaking entirely in the interest of these faithful men, who have come from all parts of the country, and have performed this service at $1,100 a year. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to say just a word in answer to the gentleman's proposition. I move as an amendment to insert in line 12, page 19, the words "forty-four pages" instead of "forty-six pages."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 12, page 19, insert before the word "during" the words "forty-four pages."

Mr. GILLETT. And, Mr. Chairman, on that I wish to say a word to indicate the ground which the committee took upon the subject of which the gentleman from Indiana has just spoken. I do not wish to split hairs with him as to the relative weight of resolutions or an appropriation law, but the committee in this whole bill has taken the ground that this was not the time to raise salaries. The proposition was made for us to raise these messenger salaries to $1,200. We thought, regardless of the merits, that inasmuch as we had decided that this was a year when we should be economical and prudent and we were not increasing salaries at all, that it would not be wise to increase the salaries of the messengers of this House and not increase any other messengers throughout the service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman if the committee had in mind the fact that by this provision it reduced the salaries of twelve or thirteen of these messengers from $1,200 to $1,100?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the disputed fact. We followed here, as we did in all other cases, the instruction the House had given us before. The House last year fixed these salaries at $1,100, and we did in this instance proceed as we have done in every instance in the bill. We followed what the judgment of the House had declared in the previous Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 11, after the word "each," insert "messenger in charge of telephones, $1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. CHANEY. I desire to inquire if this simply provides for one messenger on one side of the House and not on the other?

Mr. GILLETT. The one on the other side is already provided for.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. This simply provides for one messenger in charge of telephones, and it was the intention of the Committee on Accounts that this messenger was to take charge of the telephones on both sides of the House, both in the Republican cloak room and the Democratic cloak room, and the Committee on Accounts was further informed by the Democratic members of the Committee on Accounts that they did not want this messenger on their side of the House.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, the man in charge of the telephones on the Democratic side of the House performs precisely the same service as the telephone messenger on the Republican side of the House, and he is getting about $75 a month on the Democratic side of the House, whereas on this side the messenger is getting $1,200. And I think it is fair that the messenger on the other side of the House should have $1,200. I therefore move to amend the amendment by making the salary of the messenger on the Democratic side of the House $1,200.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the amendment be reported. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment so as to read:
"Two messengers in charge of telephones, at $1,200 each."

Mr. CHANEY. One messenger in charge on the Democratic side and one messenger in charge on the Republican side.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I raise the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask that the original amendment and the amendment thereto be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] makes a point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY]?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question comes upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member and Delegate for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $594,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of one of the gentlemen in charge of this bill. Possibly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] can enlighten me. I observe on the back of the check which Members of Congress sign in obtaining clerk hire, the following legend, "If indorsement is made by mark (x) it must be witnessed by two persons who can write, giving their place of residence in full." I desire to ask of the gentleman from Massachusetts the necessity for this provision, and how many of the Members of this House, in his judgment, avail themselves of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that was adopted with any personal reference to the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] In fact, I understand it is on all Government checks, and it is put upon the checks that apply to this House as well as all others.

Mr. TAWNEY. As an administrative order. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction, mechanical equipment, electric lighting, and roofing of a stack of shelving for bound newspapers and books in the southeast court of the Library building, to cost not exceeding $320,000, $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve or make the point of order to lines 5 to 9, on page 34. I reserve the point of order for the present, if I may. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to the matter included in this paragraph.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would say to the gentleman I will ask my colleague to reply to him.

Mr. MANN. In the first place, the House now has over in the Congressional Library an old file in bound volumes, probably thirty or forty stacks, as I now remember. They were transferred over there a year or two ago, and it was expected they would be transferred to the new Office Building when that building was completed. The Library people are very anxious to get rid of them. They want the space they use for newspapers. There is plenty of room in the attic of the Office Building. It is simply a matter of having them transferred over there and having the proper cases erected to put them in. I suppose it would require metallic cases. I requested the Superintendent of the Capitol to make an estimate of what the expense would be. I do not know whether he has made the estimate or not. I have not asked him since. I do not know who would have jurisdiction over a proposition of that kind in the House. There ought to be some way, and I ask these gentlemen whether they can help me out and see how the money can be provided to erect the necessary shelves in the attic of the Office Building so that these House files may be transferred there. I do not know, but there might be a considerable additional amount of space in the attic used by the Library of Congress for other purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you know whether the House has any occasion to use the space in the attic in connection with the occupation of the Office Building by Members of the House other than the old files belonging to the House, which are now stored in the Library?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know what the attic may be used for as time goes on.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much space is there that would be available?

Mr. MANN. The full width of the building all the way around. The building is so constructed that as the membership of the House increases, if it should increase, it is possible to erect an additional story on the court side of the building. Of course that would cut through the attic; and at present, as I understand, it is the desire of the Superintendent of the Capitol that no permanent fixtures be put in the attic on the court side. But there is what you would call a walk down the center of it. For storage purposes of any kind I see no reason why it could not be utilized by the Library of Congress or any other departments under the control of Congress directly. There is an immense amount of space there. I do not know how much; I have not had it measured, but it is the full width of the building the entire distance around. There is some little machinery in connection with the exhaust fans that ventilate the building, but they occupy very little space. I went over there with Mr. Woods and some members of the special committee to see how much space would be required for the House files in the Library, and the amount of space required is nothing as compared with the total amount of space there.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the height of the ceiling in the attic?

Mr. MANN. It ranges from the edge of the attic, probably 4 to 4½ to 5 feet, and in the center of the attic, why, it is 15 feet or more in height.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose of my inquiry, Mr. Chairman, is: I understand that the Librarian desires this additional space primarily for the storage of newspaper files that are accumulating very rapidly in the Congressional Library. The question in my mind was whether the space now occupied by these newspapers could not be utilized for book space and book shelves if the newspapers were transferred to the attic of the Office Building. That is the only purpose of my inquiry.

Mr. MANN. The space now occupied in the subbasement of the Library by the House files, as I understand, is desired for the storage of newspaper files in part. Mr. Wood and Mr. Boyd, the assistant librarian, and all of us who examined the matter were fully of the opinion from what we know of the attic that it was a simple matter to erect the necessary cases for the House files and to erect cases that would provide the necessary space for use in other respects.

I do not know whether it is practicable to put an item in this bill that would cover the matter or not. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to pass this paragraph to see whether we can insert an item, which they would agree to, so that these files may be transferred over, if we can get at the amount of cost. As far as the point of order is concerned, I withdraw that. I have no desire to insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois does not make the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, if the gentleman withdraws the point of order, I am perfectly willing to see what we can do about the matter he suggests. This is the first time it has occurred to me. I think if it had been brought before the attention of the committee we would have been glad to cooperate with him, for it strikes me as a desirable object, and I am perfectly willing that the gentleman may draft an amendment, or, perhaps, on consultation, we can draw something which will allow this to come up, by reverting back to some proper place in the Library appropriations, to put on such an amendment.

There is one thing that occurs to me, and that is that the gentleman will remember that one of the reasons why the files of the House were moved to the Library was that it was discovered that a great many valuable autographs had been cut out from the papers and that the files had been tampered with, and the purpose was to put them in some place where they would be safe and under careful protection. Perhaps that could be properly arranged.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman on that point that Mr. Woods and I went over to the building the other day, and we figured that by erecting metal cases for these files and then building around them a wire screen, with a lock upon it, the key of which, I suppose, would be in charge of the Clerk of the House, nobody would have access to the files except the employee of the House who was responsible for them, and nobody else could get to them.

Mr. GILLETT. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the committee may at any time revert to the proper clause in the appropriations for the Library for the purpose of making such an amendment as the gentleman may draft.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is not that this paragraph be passed without prejudice?

Mr. GILLETT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the committee may, at any time during the consideration of the bill, return to the paragraph with reference to the Library, for the purpose of inserting an amendment such as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. If an agreement can be devised by which this space can be utilized in the new Office Building for these newspaper files, will not that eliminate the necessity for an appropriation for this book stack?

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman can tell me how large a space these files now occupy in the Library. I have not the least idea how much that will relieve the Library.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know, but it seems to me if not only the document files but a number of these newspaper files could be stored in the House Office Building it might be possible to defer the commencement of this work, about which there is some difference of opinion.

Mr. GILLETT. That depends entirely on the amount of material, as to which I am absolutely ignorant.

Mr. McCALL. I believe there are some 35,000 bound volumes of newspapers. They are very frequently consulted. They are now located in the basement and are reached with a great deal of difficulty. It requires quite a strain upon the force to get these volumes and bring them up for the use of those who go to the Library desiring to make use of them. Of course it would be very inconvenient, even more inconvenient than it is at present, if these newspapers were put into another building like the House Office Building. It would take more time to get them; it would involve more labor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state what kind of newspapers are bound and stored away in the files of the Congressional Library—how many daily newspapers throughout the United States?

Mr. McCALL. They have restricted the number of newspapers now that they bind. I think now they are binding only at the rate of 150 newspapers a year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do they take the Sunday papers and bind everything that comes in the paper—the funny sheet, the advertisements, and everything else?

Mr. McCALL. I do not know whether they bind the funny sheet or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, they do.

Mr. McCALL. I think it is very important that there should be some collection in the United States of the newspapers of the United States. As Lord Macaulay says, "The newspapers give the current history of the times." The British Museum, which has a marvelously great collection of books, preserves all the local newspapers of Great Britain. Some time ago it was suggested in Parliament that the newspapers of certain localities be sent to libraries in those localities, which would have relieved the strain a good deal upon the British Museum, only keeping the most important newspapers bound there. But it was voted down in Parliament, and a separate building was constructed in which to store them. Newspapers are very much used by men who write history, more so now than ever before. Of course they must read them with a good deal of skepticism and a good deal of care.

In addition to the demand for extra shelving space for newspapers, there is a very imperative demand for extra shelves for books. The Committee on the Library have been considering this matter for a number of years, and the plan which is now proposed, for which the Superintendent of the Library has made plans and specifications, seems to secure altogether more for the money than any other plan, and that is to put a lid on one of the courts that is not seen by the public, practically surrounded almost entirely by administrative parts of the Library, such as is proposed in this bill; simply by putting a lid on, stacks can be secured there which will increase by 60 per cent the entire shelving capacity of the Library.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a member of the Joint Committee on the Library?

Mr. McCALL. He is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two years ago, I think it was, $2,500 was appropriated to obtain plans and estimates for whatever enlargement was necessary of the Library. My information is that that has not been done. I would be glad to see the work postponed until the gentleman's committee has an opportunity to present those plans to the House. Does not the gentleman think that that would be wise?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I would rather that the gentleman should complain that we have not spent the $2,500 than to express approval that we had. In the first place, I do not understand that the $2,500 was to be spent under the direction of the Committee on the Library. In the next place, I think the expenditure is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not expressed surprise that the gentleman's committee did not spend the money. I am anxious about the plans.

Mr. McCALL. The proposition was that if this plan should be approved by the joint committee, that much might be expended to secure plans. I do not know of any more capable man in the world to prepare plans than the man now paid $5,000 to superintend the Library building or a more accomplished gentleman in his line. He was connected with the work before the building was put up, and he has done his work remarkably well. He has prepared plans, which I hold in my hand, and specifications, and I believe they are as good as can be prepared by any architect.

Mr. BURLESON. And will save the Government over a million dollars.

Mr. McCALL. Yes; it will save the Government a vast sum of money. The Committee on the Library is satisfied that this is a good plan to adopt. They do not believe that the two west courts should be invaded or used for any such purpose, but there can be a roof put upon this court that I speak of. It was suggested by a former colleague of the gentleman from New York, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Littauer. It is an admirable suggestion, and it will increase the shelving capacity of the Library by 60 per cent and will only cost about 5 per cent of the cost of the building. From an economic standpoint it seems to me a very desirable thing to be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are these plans which the gentleman refers to the plans originally made, the plans first prepared, or the plans last prepared, or plans that were prepared between the two?

Mr. McCALL. I can not tell when they were prepared.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I asked the question because I have heard it said by Members who have investigated that there practically have been three plans prepared by this gentleman of whom the gentleman from Massachusetts speaks. It occurred to me that the committee of which the gentleman is a member should make a careful investigation of this matter.

Not only that, but the estimate of the cost has gone up, as I understand, from $100,000 to $150,000, and then to $180,000, and now $320,000. If it is going to continue in that way, I agree with the gentleman that we had better adopt it now before it gets any higher, and I hope the gentleman's committee will make that thorough investigation that was contemplated, so that the House can act intelligently on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I would like two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCALL. Certainly the Committee on the Library has not been informed that there has been such a variety of plans made by Mr. Green to accomplish this particular result.

There was a scheme originally to carry up the roof so as to have two or three stories, and another to build out a separate structure. Perhaps the gentleman refers to these as plans, but I am not aware, and I think the gentleman is not aware that any plans have been made more than this one set for utilizing the stack in the way it is now proposed to utilize it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I agree with the gentleman. I think this suggestion is entirely different from the other two that were made to the Committee on Appropriations emanating from the same source, and it is just possible that in view of the fact that each year has seen a new scheme suggested, next year there may be a different one proposed.

Mr. McCALL. Of course we are liable to change our minds.

Mr. BURLESON. The new scheme was suggested because of the increased necessities of the Library.

Mr. McCALL. It does not seem possible to suggest a plan that will accomplish so much. This has been talked of for years.

The Clerk read as follows:

For three Commissioners, at $4,000 each; chief examiner, $3,000; secretary, $2,500; assistant chief examiner, $2,250; two chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three examiners, at $2,000 each; seven clerks of class 4; fourteen clerks of class 3; twenty-four clerks of class 2; twenty-nine clerks of class 1; twenty clerks, at $1,000 each; ten clerks, at $900 each; five clerks, at $840 each; one messenger; engineer, $840; one telephone switch-board operator; two firemen; two watchmen, one elevator conductor, $720; three laborers; and three messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $175,410.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order on the item providing for seven clerks, page 26, line 9, and on line 10 fourteen clerks, line 10 twenty-four clerks, line 11 twenty-nine clerks. I just desire to reserve the point of order on this for the purpose of ascertaining whether the chairman of the committee can give me some information about it.

Mr. BINGHAM. What was the point of order? This was current law.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; this is increasing the number of clerks very materially over current law.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is simply the increase of work that runs through the entire bill. If the gentleman's point stands, it will strike out every increase because of increased work recognized throughout the bill. It is just simply the natural increase of work in all Departments of the Government, using exactly the same verbiage.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there a sufficient increase in the work of this Department to warrant the employment of so many additional clerks?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I can assure the gentleman that there is. I think this one fact will indicate it. The gentleman knows that the rural carriers have recently been put under the civil service, which is a very large increase of work in itself. They are now I forget how many months behind, but several months.

Mr. BINGHAM. Six months.

Mr. GILLETT. I think there are 19,000 blanks they have not yet been able to examine, and they asked for many more clerks than this gives them. Personally, I think they ought to have more than this.

Mr. BURLESON. We did not give them as many as they asked.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For compensation of the Secretary of State, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $6,000; Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $5,000 each; chief clerk, $3,000; two assistant solicitors of the Department of State, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, at $3,000 each; law clerk, and assistant, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State, to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively; two chiefs of bureaus, at $2,250 each; six chiefs of bureaus, at $2,100 each; two translators, at $2,100 each; additional to Chief of Bureau of Accounts as disbursing clerk, $200; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary of State, $1,800; fifteen clerks of class 4; fourteen clerks of class 3; twenty-three clerks of class 2; thirty-six clerks of class 1, two of whom shall be telegraph operators; fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each; sixteen clerks, at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; five messengers; twenty-two assistant messengers; messenger boy, $420; packer, $720; four laborers, at $600 each; one telephone switch-board operator; one assistant telephone switch board operator; carpenter, $1,000; for emergency clerical services, to be expended by the Secretary of State in his discretion, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $248,900.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, beginning in line 3, providing for the increase of the salary of the Assistant Secretary from $4,500 to $6,000; also to the increase of the salaries of the Second and Third Assistant Secretaries from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the point of order against the portion of this paragraph, lines 6 and 7, on page 38, "to be appointed by the Secretary of State," and in lines 8 and 9, on the same page, "to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State."

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas reserves the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I observe in looking over the bill that in the State Department the salaries of three Assistant Secretaries of State have been increased, the First Assistant from $4,500 to $6,000, the Second and Third from $4,500 to $5,000 each; and in the Treasury Department the salaries of the three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury have been increased from $4,500 to $6,000 in all cases. In the War Department the Assistant Secretary of War's salary has been increased from $4,500 to $6,000, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy has had his salary increased from $4,500 to $6,000. In the Interior Department the First Assistant Secretary's has been increased from $4,500 to $6,000, and an Assistant Secretary's from $4,500 to $5,000. In the Post-Office Department the three assistants have each had their salaries increased from $5,000 to $6,000 in one case, and $4,500 to $5,000 in two cases, and in the Department of Commerce and Labor the Assistant Secretary has been increased from $5,000 to $6,000. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman the basis upon which that was done?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to increasing the salary in any of these cases. I think probably they ought to be increased, but what I want to call attention to is the fact that there has been no increase of salaries in the Department of Justice. The Solicitor-General's salary has not been increased, none of the assistant attorneys have been increased, and yet they were estimated for by the Attorney-General and his testimony was taken before the committee. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, conceding that these salaries ought to be increased, as I do, that it is manifestly unfair that any discrimination should be made between these assistant secretaries and the Solicitor-General and the Assistant Attorneys-General in the Department of Justice. The Solicitor-General ought to be and is a lawyer qualified to meet the best lawyers in the United States. He is occupied almost every day in arguing cases of large importance in the Supreme Court of the United States. We all know that the Attorney-General, to a large extent, has ceased to be anything but a Cabinet officer. Almost the entire administration of the Department, in so far as court business is concerned, falls upon the shoulders of the Solicitor-General, and it does seem to me this is making a very unjust discrimination. Now, for instance, you have increased the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, whose business it is to attend to revenue matters. Now, the time of one of the Assistant Attorneys-General is almost exclusively devoted to attending to those matters at the instance of this Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It seems to me it is unfair to draw this distinction between them. These gentlemen are lawyers, professional men, qualified to attend to professional matters and, as I have already said in the case of the Solicitor-General, called upon to meet the best legal talent in the United States in defending the interests of the Government, and while I do not object to these increases of salary of the assistants in the various Departments I do hope that if this point of order be not sustained and these salaries be allowed, that when we come to deal with the Department of Justice the committee will do justice to the Solicitor-General.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I state to the gentleman that the Solicitor-General now gets $7,500 and the next man below him $7,000——

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We made this promotion a year or two ago, and we did not think it was necessary——

Mr. DALZELL. I have read the testimony of the Attorney-General before the committee, and it seems to me that he makes out quite as good a case, and in my judgment a little better, with respect to his subordinates than is made out for any of these Assistant Secretaries in the Treasury, Department of State, or Navy Department, and I hope that justice will be done all around. If you are going to cut down these salaries, well and good. If you are going to advance them—and I am perfectly willing you should—let us deal justice alike to all of them.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows that the salaries for these Assistant Secretaries are the salaries that have been provided by law for a long time, except for the Department of Commerce and Labor, whereas the assistant to the Attorney-General was just created two or three years ago, and the salary then fixed was based upon modern salaries, I suppose. Now, does not the gentleman draw a distinction between a salary fixed twenty-five or thirty years ago and a salary fixed by Congress two years ago as to the desirability of an increase?

Mr. DALZELL. I should think, of course, a salary fixed two years ago would be more nearly just than one fixed twenty-five or thirty years ago, but I would say, intrinsically, that the salary of the Solicitor-General is not a fair salary for a lawyer of his necessary attainments, and I believe anyone familiar with the work of the present Solicitor-General would be willing to testify that he is well qualified to perform all the duties he is called upon to perform.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right in that respect, undoubtedly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest, if my colleague will permit me——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, one moment. Your committee reached the conclusion that the present compensation of the Assistant Secretaries who might be called upon to perform full service during the absence of the Secretary should receive a larger compensation and that Assistant Secretaries who are not either so authorized under the law or authorized by the President should receive, perhaps, less salary than the one who would act during the absence of the Cabinet officer or Secretary.

Therefore, without regard to the Solicitor-General, we rated them as consistent at $6,000. We gave the three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, who can be designated by the President to act in the absence of the Secretary, $6,000. All other secretaries who do not act in the absence of the Secretary shall receive $5,000. We have been consistent. The fact that the Solicitor-General receives $7,500 per annum, while there may be lines of work that he may do in the absence of the Attorney-General, we allowed to remain just as it was. It did not impress the committee as an immediate necessity. Congress having increased the compensation of all the secretaries of the Departments from $8,000 to $12,000, we concluded a reasonable increase would be accepted by the Congress, and therefore fixed the $6,000 and $5,000 allowances as fair and just for the assistant secretaries acting as I have submitted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not think the criticism made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is a good one. If he will turn to page 140 of the bill, he will see that the Solicitor-General gets $7,500. Now, then, the assistant to the Attorney-General, which stands in place of the first assistant in any of these Departments, who, under law, is authorized to act for the head of the Department, only gets $6,000, while this man's assistant gets $7,000. Now, we have raised the salaries of those that can not act for the head of the Department from $4,500 to $5,000. If you will notice on page 141, line 2, you will see five Assistant Attorneys-General are raised to $5,000. The Assistant Attorneys-General that are designated or detailed to the several Departments stand at $4,500. I think his committee has been extremely liberal with the Department of Justice.

Mr. DALZELL. If my friend will allow me, I do not think there is any increase of the salaries of the Assistant Attorneys-General.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not in this bill, but, as I said a moment ago, two years ago we made these salaries sufficiently high not to be affected now in this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. The Assistant Attorney-General gets $7,500. He is more than a $7,500 lawyer. Any lawyer can get $7,500 in a country town, and here is a lawyer engaged every day of the week in arguing cases in the Supreme Court of the United States with the best legal talent in the country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This is above the average that lawyers get as officials of the United States—$7,500.

Mr. DALZELL. I am sorry for them, then. I do not know where they are.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. He has had no difficulty heretofore in getting a good lawyer at $7,500.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know any Assistant Secretary in a Department of the Government, capable as they are, whom he would be willing to have take charge of the legal end of the Government in the great legal work that is now going on?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No.

Mr. MANN. That is very likely, but that probably does not apply to the Assistant Attorney-General or to the Solicitor-General. While I apprehend no increase can be made in this bill, and I certainly have no criticism of the committee, I think, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] remarked, it is true that as long as the Government is carrying on legal work against private talent paid at the rate of $25,000 to $200,000 a year or more, the Government ought to be willing to pay for services in the Supreme Court of the United States more than $7,500 a year and obtain talent that corresponds. I think, however, the talent corresponds now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think that is not only true with the Department of Justice, but it is true with the Post-Office Department, with the State Department, with the War Department, and the assistants in the War Department were not put there with the view of controlling the Department. If the head of the Department is competent, it does not make a great deal of difference as to who his assistants are. If he is competent, then I admit that the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] comes with a great deal of force.

Mr. DALZELL. The Solicitor-General is not an assistant. He is virtually the head of a Department.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Solicitor-General is not the head of the Department. The Attorney-General is the head.

Mr. DALZELL. Nominally the Attorney-General is the head of the Department. He is a Cabinet officer. I mean to say that while the Attorney-General has in a number of cases gone into the Supreme Court, the Solicitor-General in all the cases during the last two or three Administrations has done all the court work.

Mr. MANN. Not all. Attorney-General Moody frequently appears in the Supreme Court.

Mr. DALZELL. In almost all. He is recognized as in charge of that particular work.

Mr. MANN. There is no comparison in experience between the Solicitor-General and any secretaries of any Departments that I know of.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am willing to admit that.

Mr. MANN. The secretaries are comparatively young men, usually appointed without any great deal of experience, educated in the Department at the expense of the Government, and make very good secretaries. The three secretaries of the Department of State—why, they do not have many more than three clerks. There is not a great deal of work possible to be done, properly divided. It is not the character of ability that is required on the part of a man as a law officer representing the Government in the Supreme Court against these great lawyers employed by private corporations. You can not expect to win cases in the courts unless you have the best ability to present the cases.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word upon the point of order we seem to be discussing. The duties of the Solicitor-General are prescribed by statute. He is authorized to assist the Attorney-General in the performance of his duties and, in case of vacancy in the office of the Attorney-General, or his absence, to have power to exercise all the powers of his office.

Mr. DALZELL. Nominally.

Mr. GILLETT. But I agree with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said about increase of salary for the higher offices of the Government. That applies, in my opinion, not only to the Solicitor-General, but to all the other offices and to all the Departments. My opinion is that the higher officers in our Government are underpaid. I think the whole force of the Government, clerical and administrative, ought to be reclassified and their salaries revised. I think in the last Congress, when we increased our own salaries, there was a general expectation in the executive force that in this Congress their salaries would be revised. I shared that expectation. I think the service ought to be reclassified. When we came to make up this bill we had the estimates of the different Departments making increases, but the committee concluded that under the present financial and industrial conditions we should not be justified this year in bringing in a bill that would accomplish that object. Therefore this bill has scarcely any increases. I think it should consistently have none. The committee has brought in a few increases, but I think that there are many more just as justifiable as those. I shall feel it my duty, believing, as I do, that this is not the time for increases, to make the point of order against any increases such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, against this pending now?

Mr. GILLETT. I shall not make the point of order against anything the committee has adopted, whether I approved it or not; but when any new amendment is offered, I shall feel it my duty to make the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order. I am opposed to this class of legislation; this manner of increasing salaries. If any of the various officers of the Government are not receiving salaries sufficiently large to maintain themselves upon, then there ought to be a systematic effort made on the part of those in charge of the conduct of the Government to have the salaries increased to an amount sufficient to sustain them; but they ought to be increased by direct law and not upon appropriation bills. I do not believe it is right to pay one officer a certain salary, and another, equally meritorious and efficient, a different salary. I think salaries ought to be equalized, but I do not think they can be equalized upon an appropriation bill. If I happened to be upon a committee, and I had a personal friend at the head of one of these Departments, he could appeal to me, perhaps, in a different manner from that employed when dealing with a stranger, and I might use such influence as I had with my colleagues upon the committee and encourage an increase of my friend's salary, when some one in some other branch of the Department equally as meritorious as my friend, equally as capable as he, equally as worthy of increased pay as he, would not receive an increase because he did not have a friend on the committee. I insist that this is not the proper way of increasing salaries, and for that reason I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I want to add one other thought, which is that the country is not in as good condition financially this February as it was last February, and therefore this is no time for raising salaries. We have undergone a severe panic, which has shaken nearly every interest of the country from one end of it to the other, and we ought to stay close to the shore for a while.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand the gentleman to insist upon making the point of order throughout the bill?

Mr. MACON. I do.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman what his point of order is? As I hear it made, it applies to the secretary, or does it apply to some of the clerks? As to them, I do not think his point of order can be sustained, and therefore I would like to know to what he addresses his point of order.

Mr. MACON. I will not insist upon the point as to the increased number of clerks, because I do not know whether they are needed or not. I have no desire to cripple the public service in any way. If they are needed, they ought to be provided for in this bill. Existing law warrants that. So I make the point of order against the increase of the salaries of the three assistant secretaries only.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order against the increase of the salary of the assistant secretary, $6,000, and the second and third assistant secretaries, $5,000, in lines 3, 4, and 5. The Chair understands that to be the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask any member of the Committee on Appropriations if he can refer to any law which will support or sustain the increase carried in the bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any such. I think the point of order is well taken, if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had a point of order, upon page 38, commencing with line 6, against the words "to be appointed by the Secretary of State," and also commencing with line 8, "to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State." It changes the law as to the method of the appointment of these officials.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. This changes the provision as to the method by which these officials are appointed. The law now provides that these officials may be appointed under the provision of the civil-service act, through the civil-service regulations, where they are covered into the civil service, and gives to the President the right to put them into the classified service, to be appointed from the eligible list. This changes that law, and provides that these officials shall be appointed directly by the Secretary of State. It is a change of the existing law upon that subject.

Mr. BINGHAM. In reply to the gentleman, I will state that we have used the exact verbiage in the bill that has been used for years past, and I understand the facts to be just the reverse, that these officials are exempted, under the rulings of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MANN. Whether they are exempted or not under the rulings of the Civil Service Commission, it is by Executive order. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is by Executive order.

Mr. MANN. But the Executive order may be changed at any time under the civil-service law. Now, if they are exempted under the civil-service law, why does the gentleman want to put it in here? I say the purpose of the item is to change the law. The law now leaves them to be appointed in accordance with the civil-service rules, and the fact that this is in the current law makes no difference. The same matter precisely was ruled upon a few days ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's suggestion to strike it out. The fact is, it remains in effect the same.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. I do not care anything about that.

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to suggest that the point of order is against a phrase which has been used year by year for these same clerks or officials. The point of order accomplishes nothing, because at present they are exempt from the civil-service rule, and therefore it makes no difference whether the words are in or not. I confess that it appears to me that technically the gentleman is right; that technically the use of the words "to be appointed by the Secretary" does change existing law, and, inasmuch as it makes no difference practically, it is quite indifferent to the committee how the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. On the face of the proposition, unless the gentleman can state something specific, the Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, on page 38, line 3, in lieu of $6,000, I move to insert $4,500; and in line 4, in lieu of $5,000, I move to insert $4,500, and I offer that amendment to correct the verbiage of the bill, under the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the first word "dollars," in line 3 on page 38, insert the following:

"Assistant secretary, $4,500; second and third assistant secretaries, at $4,500 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WASHBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4922. An act providing for the platting and selling of the south half of section 30, township 2 north, range 11 west of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, for town-site purposes;

S. 4541. An act to authorize the sale of 640 acres of the lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency and the Arapahoe School, Oklahoma, and the use of the proceeds thereof;

S. 4289. An act for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Okla.;

S. 4260. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906;

S. 3778. An act for the relief of the Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company;

S. 3726. An act to authorize the Twin City Power Company to build, operate, and maintain two dams across the Savannah River, above the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia;

S. 3342. An act to construct and place a light-ship opposite the entrance of St. Johns River, Florida;

S. 2886. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late firm of Lapene & Ferre;

S. 652. An act to create the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts;

S. 389. An act for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico; and

S. 5155. An act authorizing the exchange of lands for the enlargement of maneuvering grounds.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For books and maps and periodicals, domestic and foreign, for the Library, $2,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that the reading of the paragraph with reference to the State Department had been completed, and I ask permission to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the investigation made into the needs of the State Department showed that three additional clerks of class 2 and two of class 1—one additional clerk, at $900—were found to be necessary to keep up the work of the State Department. There appears on page 38 of the bill, commencing at line 21, an item providing for twenty-three clerks, when last year there were only twenty-one; in the same line an item for thirty-six clerks, where last year there were but thirty-four; in line 22 an item for fourteen clerks, when last year there were but eleven; in line 23 an item appropriating for sixteen clerks, when last year there were but fifteen. While I do not wish to make a point of order on this matter, I would like to know from the members of the committee who made the investigation whether they are perfectly satisfied that the work of the State Department has increased so much as to require this increase of clerks.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman that throughout the entire bill it is reported after a thorough investigation and is the best judgment of the committee to make certain lines of increase. Now, in connection with the statement of the gentleman in reference to the State Department, they now have 167 clerks, and they asked for 187, an increase of 20. We gave an increase of 9 wholly on the ground of necessity, because of an increase of work in that Department. That is the answer to the gentleman's line of criticism that will apply throughout the entire bill. It is the judgment of the subcommittee as well as the judgment of the general committee.

Mr. MADDEN. It did not seem to me that the work of the State Department had increased enough to warrant this additional expenditure. While I was not a member of the subcommittee that made the investigation as to the needs of the Department, my knowledge of the Department, I think, is sufficient to warrant me in believing, at least, that to add to the already great amount appropriated for the conduct of this Department is to increase the extravagance that is practiced in that Department.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Illinois is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and is familiar, doubtless, with the methods of the committee's investigation of these questions. I am not a member of that committee. I would like to know if it is the practice of the Committee on Appropriations to report appropriations to this House for its consideration that the committee does not regard as necessary or proper?

Mr. MADDEN. I would not think that was the disposition of the committee, and it is doubtless the policy of the committee to report only what a majority of the members believe to be just, fair, and right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I asked the question as an innocent bystander. I have been in the habit of accepting the report of the Committee on Appropriations with a good deal of assurance, but in view of the unusual question asked by the gentleman from Illinois, whether the committee really thought the appropriation was necessary, I did not know but possibly it might be the habit of the Committee on Appropriations to report things to the House that it did not regard necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. The fact that certain members of the committee do not believe in the necessity of a certain appropriation is no evidence that each member of the committee is not conscientious in making the report and in the performance of his duty.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not it is the custom of the subcommittees of the general Appropriation Committee to make reports and bring appropriation bills into the House for the consideration of the whole committee without submitting them first to the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is not; they are all submitted to the full committee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then the gentleman had an opportunity to see this bill before it came in?

Mr. MADDEN. No; not to the extent I would like to see it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the subcommittee prepare large bills like this and have them brought in here for consideration without first giving the members of the general Appropriation Committee the opportunity of examining them?

Mr. MADDEN. The work of the subcommittee in this instance was submitted to the full committee for a cursory examination. The examination to which the whole committee was admitted consisted of less than two hours. I want to submit that it is impossible for members of the committee to consider important questions involved in a bill of this magnitude in two hours.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his facts. The report of the subcommittee was made to the full committee, and the examination by the full committee lasted from half past 10 to 12 o'clock and from 2 to nearly 4 o'clock in the afternoon. In the meanwhile the full report of the subcommittee was before the whole committee. The whole matter was gone over in detail. Every member of the full committee had ample opportunity for criticism and such investigation as he pleased. The time that is occupied in examination of the bill does not depend on the subcommittee, but upon the full committee.

I am very sorry to hear, to my surprise, a member of the full committee criticising the subcommittee for what it seems to me they are not at all responsible for.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply wish to say in reply to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts that all the members of the full committee may have had ample opportunity to consider this question——

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This paragraph has been read and passed, and I do not see the usefulness of this discussion.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I object to going back to the section.

Mr. MADDEN. It is too late now. I submit that the objection to go back to this paragraph should have been made earlier.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Nothing was submitted, Mr. Chairman, and there have been two succeeding paragraphs read.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, can we not have a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say in connection with the opportunity which was afforded to the members of the full committee to be heard in the consideration of this bill: I received no notice of the meeting that was called to consider this bill. It was said that a notice was sent——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if he will submit to a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want the gentleman to state to the House whether or not it is not a fact that he was personally notified of the meeting on Saturday, three days before the meeting was held?

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is not.

Mr. TAWNEY. In addition to that, the gentleman's notice was mailed at 11 o'clock on the day before the meeting.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not a fact, and I do not know whether any notice of the meeting was ever mailed to me, but it is a fact that I never received any notice of any kind, name, or nature, except a telephone message after the committee was in session. Some one called me at the Office Building at about 11 o'clock in the morning and informed me that the committee was considering this bill, and I arrived at the committee room as soon after the message came to me as was possible. I complained about the fact that I had no notice of the meeting. I would not have complained about this but for the fact that a previous meeting was held without any notice, and I thought that it was a studied effort to keep certain members away from the committee, and I complained to the chairman and to the other members of the committee that I did not think fair treatment was being accorded to me as a member of the committee. It was said that a notice was mailed at 12 o'clock the day before the meeting was to be held. It was discovered upon investigation that the notice, which was said to have been mailed twenty-four hours before, was found in my mail box in the post-office twenty-four hours afterwards, an hour after the meeting of the committee was in session. This bill was reported with not more than two hours' consideration, as far as my best judgment enables me to make a correct statement of the case, and I submit that two hours' consideration of the important matters contained in this bill is not sufficient to give the proper light upon the subject to the members of the committee who are charged with the responsibility of reporting the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Did the gentleman, at the time, wish for more time?

Mr. MADDEN. I suggested to the committee that I would object to a number of items in the bill because I did not have an opportunity of considering them, and I think the gentleman will agree that I said that.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And I am objecting to them now because I did not have that opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $6,000 each; clerk to the Secretary, $2,500; stenographer, $1,800; three private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; Government actuary, under control of the Treasury, $2,250; examiner, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; four clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; four messengers; and one laborer; in all, $58,970.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language used in lines 3, 4, and 5, page 40, "three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $6,000 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 3, after the word "dollars," insert: "Three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $4,500 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14766. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Cox Building, 1709 New York avenue: Three watchmen-firemen, at $720 each; and one laborer. For the following now authorized and being paid from the appropriation for repairs of the Treasury building: One plumber, $1,100; one painter, $1,100; one skilled laborer, $840; in all, $195,410.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice all through the bill items like the one at the top of page 41, "one clerk, $900. (In lieu of one clerk at same salary, transferred from office of Director of the Mint.)" Now, I suppose this is to pay a clerk regularly in the office of the Secretary, or office of the chief clerk or superintendent, who used to be in the office of the Director of the Mint and who has been trasferred to the office of the superintendent.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Is there any clerk in the office of the Director of the Mint replacing the clerk who was transferred?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; he is dropped, and that is consistent all through the bill.

Mr. MANN. Where a transfer has been already made you drop the clerk transferred and you show you make the necessary reduction in the other place.

Mr. BINGHAM. Throughout the bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the next to the last word, to make an inquiry. On page 41, line 22, the bill provides for three laborers at $420 each, and then provides for eighty-seven charwomen. Are these three laborers men or women?

Mr. GILLETT. In some cases they are men and in some cases they are women, depending upon the exigency of the service. We can not tell just which they are. They are to do the most menial class of work around the office—they take care of the toilet rooms, etc.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And then you have here charwomen. What do they get?

Mr. GILLETT. Two hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why do you not provide salaries for them here?

Mr. GILLETT. It is provided for in the general law, so we do not have to specify.

Mr. MANN. It is provided for in the general section; and while on this subject, here are eighty-seven charwomen for the Treasury building. I was told the other day by the Superintendent of the Capitol—taking care of the new Office Building—that he was doing the work over there with twenty charwomen. I suppose that building is as large or larger than the Treasury building. While I do not have anything to say about the number of these women I have no doubt, I want to say, while I am a very ardent believer in the civil-service law, that under it there creeps in an immense number of superfluous employees in the charwomen force and elsewhere, and that probably half of these charwomen are carried on the roll simply to give pay and without actually performing the service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the committee passed page 37, or rather was considering page 37 and the item of the rural-carrier examining board, I was diverted at the time by one of the Members coming to my desk and talking to me about a matter of business, and the committee passed that item. I now ask the indulgence of the committee to say this, which would have been pertinent for me to have said at the time the committee was considering that item: On the 24th day of January I introduced the bill H. R. 15117—"a bill to allow the transfer of carriers from rural to city and from city to rural postal delivery service," which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That persons employed in the rural delivery service may, without further civil-service examination, be transferred into the city postal delivery service; and persons employed in the city delivery service may, without such examination, be transferred into the rural delivery service.

SEC. 2. That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to make all proper and necessary rules to execute this law.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that and the reason why I allude to it to-day is—I desire Members of Congress to think about it—is to give the country boy who wants to come to the city and enter the postal-carrier service a chance to do so by swapping places with the city carrier who possibly is tired of working in the city and wants to get the fresh air of the country to restore his health, etc. Now, the country boy coming to a city can, in my city—Nashville—go to the night school, an institution that did not obtain in that great city until about twelve or thirteen years ago, perhaps. I have received a number of letters, I may say, from rural carriers all over my district, and I have many outside of the district, each and every one of the letters commending the proposition. I submit the matter with this comment, and in the future I will go before the committee, if I can get a hearing there; if not, I will fully discuss the matter and read some of those letters to the House for the purpose of having such a proposition ultimately enacted into law.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that on page 41, line 23, there is no provision made for the amount of money for eighty-seven charwomen.

Mr. GILLETT. There is a general law that provides that every charwoman shall be paid $240.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. There is no appropriation for that here.

Mr. GILLETT. There is a section in the bill that fixes it. The purpose of that is that charwomen are named in many sections of the bill, and so to save repeating each time a certain salary we say at the close of the bill, "All charwomen shall receive $240 a year."

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of appointments: For chief of division, $3,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; executive clerk, $2,000; law and bond clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3 (including one transferred from division of mail and files); five clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; three assistant messengers; in all, $43,900.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a correction of the total on line 22. In lieu of the word "nine" insert the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22, page 43, insert "eight" instead of "nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Supervising Architect: In the construction branch of the Treasury: For Supervising Architect, $5,500; assistant to Supervising Architect, $3,250; superintendent of drafting and constructing division, $3,000; superintendent of computing division, $2,750; chief of law and records division, $2,750; chief of accounts division, $2,500; chief of inspection division, $2,500; chief of division of equipment, $2,500; chief mechanical and electrical engineer, $2,750; six clerks of class 4; six clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; contract clerk, $2,000; foreman duplicating gallery, $1,800; four technical clerks, who shall also be skilled stenographers and typewriters, at $1,800 each; four inspectors, at $2,100 each; one inspector, $1,800; five messengers; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $82,300.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on page 46, line 17, to the language "five thousand five hundred dollars," it being an increase in salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman in charge of the bill on the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BINGHAM. In line 17, page 46, "5,500" should be changed to "4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, line 16, after the word "Treasury," insert "for Supervising Architect, $4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for War Department: For Auditor, $4,000; Deputy Auditor, $2,500; law clerk, $2,000; six chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; twenty-four clerks of class 4; additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty clerks of class 3; seventy-one clerks of class 2; eighty-three clerks of class 1; twenty clerks, at $1,000 each; fourteen clerks, at $900 each; skilled laborer, $900; three clerks, at $840 each; one messenger; five assistant messengers; and twelve laborers; in all, $391,280.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of submitting this observation. This is the office of the Auditor for the War Department. I do not propose to offer an amendment at this time to increase his salary, because it is very evident it would meet a point of order. The auditing of the Panama Canal work is now in the office of the Auditor for the War Department. It involves a great deal of responsibility and an immense amount of work, and it seems to me that so long as that work is in that office the salary of that official ought to be slightly increased. The auditing of the Panama Canal work is equal, practically, to the auditing of any of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman think, however, that in view of the fact that this service is performed entirely on account of canal expenditures, the increase, if it is made, ought to be made so that the amount paid in consequence of that increase is paid out of the appropriations made for canal expenditures?

Mr. MANN. Well, I should be inclined to think that that would be the proper method and the proper place in which to put the item.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this very increase was discussed, and the members of the subcommittee were unanimously in favor of it, but concluded to permit it to take the course suggested by the chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the force employed in redeeming the national currency (to be reimbursed by the national banks), namely: For superintendent, $3,500; teller, $2,500; bookkeeper, $2,400; assistant teller, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; seven clerks of class 2; twenty-five clerks of class 1; fifteen expert counters, at $1,000 each; twenty-one expert counters, at $900 each; one messenger; four assistant messengers; and three charwomen; in all $128,440.

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 53, after the word "each," in line 13, there has been dropped out of the print of the bill a line or so, as follows:

Twenty-one expert counters, at $800 each; eleven expert counters, at $700 each.

Those words should come in there. In the sum total it is all right, but the printer left out these words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, after the word "each," in line 13, insert:
"Twenty-one expert counters, at $800 each; eleven expert counters, at $700 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Arizona: For governor, $3,000; chief justice, and four associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary $1,800; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all $20,300.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee or some member of it, what is allowed by law to the chief justice and associate justices of the Territory?

Mr. GILLETT. I think it is $3,000, the amount allowed in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If my memory serves me right, I think it is $3,600. That, however, can be seen. But be it as it may, I offer an amendment on line 11, page 79, to strike out the word "three" at the end of that line, and insert the word "five," and on line 14 strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. MACON. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until the amendment is reported. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, line 11, at the end of the line, strike out the word "three" and insert "five," so as to read "$5,000;" and in line 14, strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty," so as to read "$30,300."

Mr. MACON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. MACON. I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Arkansas to reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If I can have the attention of the committee a moment I will be very much obliged. I hope to have the attention of my friend who makes the point of order especially against me, and trust he will see fit to withdraw it after my statement. The judges of the court of Alaska get $5,000, and with not one-fourth the work to do that the judges of Arizona have.

Mr. MANN. And considering where they have to live.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And considering where they have to live, as the gentleman says, to which I take no offense.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the other judges.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The judges of the courts of Arizona are not only judges of nisi prius, but also judges of the supreme court, a condition anomalous enough in itself. You can not wonder that we are everlastingly trying to get rid of Territorial government. Now, the judges there are trying cases involving hundreds of thousands of dollars—some cases have involved millions of dollars—and while the bench is a fair bench, some of the judges extraordinarily good lawyers, they are reduced to the pitiful sum of $3,000 a year, which no man that keeps a respectable house to live in can possibly survive on. The result is that the Federal judges of necessity are forced to levy a tax for themselves, virtually, on the people of Arizona.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am informed that our counties pay the judges for going to the counties, supply them with places to live, give them money out of the county treasury, in order to keep them out of debt; and yet you hold them down to $3,000 a year, when the judges in Hawaii get six and seven thousand, and in Porto Rico as much, and in Alaska five thousand a year, while Arizona and New Mexico only get $3,000. There is no justice, there is no fairness, in it. And this committee ought to agree to permit these men to be decently paid.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. I suggest that the proper forum is the Committee on the Judiciary, and if they should report in favor of a change in salary, then we would be glad to follow out the course that they decide on.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am glad that the gentleman has made that suggestion. Why do you apply this rule to my amendment alone? Why did you not take that course with the other increases that you have made?

Mr. GILLETT. Because these increases were for clerks.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But why do you raise their salaries without submitting it to some committee having jurisdiction?

Mr. GILLETT. Because the law practically allows our committee to make them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why was not the point of order raised by you gentlemen against those clerks as well as against these judges?

Mr. GILLETT. They have been made to various items in this bill which have been stricken out.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are these judges required to give all their time to their official duties?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Absolutely; and then can not get through.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are there inferior courts in those courts?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They are the same judges.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are there inferior courts? There are courts with special jurisdiction.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These courts have jurisdiction under the statute of all Federal cases arising in the district and circuit courts of the United States. They have jurisdiction, general jurisdiction, as trial judges for the trial of every case in the Territory, and the organic act of most of the Territories permits the Territory to have no other judges or other court of general jurisdiction.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question? Does not the Territory of Arizona contribute something toward the salaries of the judges?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I say they have been forced to do it. That is what I am contending against. The judges, I have no doubt, would much prefer to have Congress provide a living salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I do not think the gentleman from Arizona understood the question. He says the counties have been forced to do this. There is no contribution made under any existing Territorial law. What he means, I think, is voluntary contributions on the part of the people in the counties in which these courts are held.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A good share of the work of the courts there is local in its nature, is it not—deciding controversies arising under Territorial laws—so that the people of the Territory would perhaps, equitably and justly, be required to pay?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is impossible for me, with the confusion around me, to hear exactly what the gentleman from Indiana is saying; but catching enough of it, I will make this explanation: This is a Federal court, exercising Federal jurisdiction, both district and circuit. It is a court of general jurisdiction, having under it all cases arising in any ordinary nisi prius court or court of general jurisdiction of a State—a trial court. In addition to that they are the judges of the supreme court of the Territory, the inhibition being only that the judge who sat in the case below shall not sit in the case above on appeal. Now, these duties are on these men every day. The dockets are crowded, and $3,000 a year is all that Congress allows them, while all other judges of the United States, everywhere else on earth, with one-half the duties, get twice the amount of salary.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I agree with the gentleman that $3,000 is not an adequate compensation for judges performing the important duties that these judges perform; but a substantial portion of the work is in the determination of controversies under the Territorial law.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true. And in order to meet that, I have a bill before Congress now permitting us to elect our own judges, and giving them jurisdiction of our own cases. We want to pay them ourselves, if we can get the privilege of choosing them ourselves.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Only a small portion of the work of these judges is done in the United States courts.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A very large amount.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But if Arizona was a State, there would be only one Federal judge instead of five. You would have to pay four of them out of your State funds.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We are perfectly willing to do that. We would gladly pay our own judges and leave the Federal Government to pay hers.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You can do it now, can you not?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What does the gentleman mean by the interrogatory? Is it possible that I have not made myself understood?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that these judges eked out their salaries now by receiving voluntary contributions in addition to the salaries fixed by the Federal statutes. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arizona if that is the case.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We have a county government in the Territory, as you have in some of the States. The board of supervisors of the county levy and collect the taxes of the county. Each county has a county treasury. Every claim for an expense in the government of the county is collected through these boards of supervisors, and out of the taxes collected a certain per cent is sent to the Territorial treasury for the expenses of the Territory. Now, out of the funds collected from these taxes the boards of supervisors have been allowing a compensation that I said was voluntary. It has been allowed by these boards of supervisors to the judges of the United States district courts, and the reason, as suggested by my friend a moment ago, is because of the coming of the judges to the different counties to try the cases. We have no other court system except that. A compensation of $5,000 a year by the Federal Government will not more than pay these men what they should have. We should not be required to pay when Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii are not required or forced to pay for the very same service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You have inferior courts, haven't you?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know what the gentleman means. We have justices of the peace and probate courts, of course.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is the jurisdiction of your justices of the peace?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Three hundred dollars.

The time of Mr. SMITH of Arizona having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have no personal reason for pressing this. The injustice that appears on its face from a mere statement of the facts seems to me enough to convince. The men ought to have enough to live on, and this is the only way they can get it. The gentleman should appreciate the condition of a Delegate on the floor. If I am relegated to any committee to get a matter out increasing the salary, my only means of getting it is by unanimous consent, and the gentleman knows that I will never get that done at this session of Congress. I have no other means of appealing to this House except by amendment of this bill. Unarmed and helpless as we are, I can only appeal to the justice of the Members of the House to do to these people what they have done to every other Territory in the United States of America. We do not ask you to give as much as you have given to others. These men are each doing more work than any other five judges in the other courts of our territorial possessions.

I ask that this amendment be adopted, and I hope that my friend from Arkansas will withdraw his point of order. It is an easy matter to strike my amendment down by raising the point of order, but it is hard on those against whom it will fall.

Mr. MANN. Are these contributions which are made by different counties made in pursuance of law in any way?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I believe they are in violation of law; that is my opinion.

Mr. MANN. They are certainly in violation of law unless they are in pursuance of law; and in violation of morals for a judge to accept money outside of his salary unless it is in pursuance of some law.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the very matter I am calling to the attention of the House. In this particular instance I see no reason for casting severe criticism on these judges. They have to travel long distances; county seats are 100 miles apart or more; they have to travel back and forth and hold court three weeks or a month away from home—sometimes nights and days—at this pitiable salary.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to criticise these men. The criticism would be on Congress, and possibly, primarily, on my friend from Arizona for not having brought it to the attention of the Committee on Territories. And yet, I have never found him lacking in zeal in anything that pertained to the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think the Committee on Territories would have jurisdiction of the salaries of judges. I have now had referred to committees five or six or seven bills, and if I get one through I shall be delighted. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I live in as good a State as is the Territory the gentleman lives in. I know the supreme judges of our State are as high grade of lawyers as any judges who ever sat on a Territorial bench in Arizona.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many have resigned from that bench?

Mr. MACON. About one out of twenty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who were they?

Mr. MACON. Judge Hemenway was one and Judge Cockrell was another.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did they resign?

Mr. MACON. Because they were offered partnerships that guaranteed them salaries of at least $10,000 per annum. These Territorial judges would do the same thing even if their salaries were raised to $5,000. But, Mr. Chairman, in the State of Arkansas, where we may be benighted, may be parsimonious, may be behind the times, we have managed to get along very well and have had a first-class supreme bench all the time. Any lawyer who will take the trouble to digest the thoughts that have been advanced by the judges of the supreme court of Arkansas as disclosed by their learned decisions will admit that our judges have been high-class lawyers. They have been receiving a salary of $3,000 a year. They have not resigned because they could not live on $3,000 per annum, but because they were offered better paying positions, just as a certain Senator resigned last year because he was offered a more lucrative position, and just as Members of this House have resigned since I have been here, because they were offered positions that enabled them to make more than their salaries here.

While I would be glad to better the condition of every man, woman, and child in this world, if I could, I can not consistently go about the task by permitting increases of salaries of some of them on appropriation bills, while the others bear the extra burden caused thereby, but receive none of the benefits.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I would ask my friend if the consistency of his course is so unbending and unyielding that he would feel the absolute necessity of enforcing it even in a case of mercy, in the case of something that appeals to him as a man—if consistency to an objection that he has the power to use will not yield to something that addresses itself to every man, as I know it sometimes addresses itself to him through the charity of his feelings, even though there be justice in the cause, if it will not appeal to him where there is urgent necessity? Here is a case where I am trying to do something that it is impossible to obtain in any other way; and although I recognize the greatness of the courts of Arkansas, yet when we compare the salaries received by the judges of courts in Porto Rico and in Alaska and in Hawaii and the Philippines and down here on the Isthmus, where they are getting twice as much——

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will have to ask the gentleman to make his speech in his own time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, well, if I had known that I was interrupting the gentleman I would not have made any remarks.

Mr. MACON. While the gentleman appeals to me, still he does not convince me that I ought to surrender the position that I occupy, nor does he convince me that the judges in Arizona can not live comfortably on $3,000 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to say that if they can they are the only men who can do it.

Mr. MACON. Why, Mr. Chairman, I will guarantee that there are many thousands of men in the Territory of Arizona who have not an annual income of $3,000. I know there are many of them in every State of this Union whose incomes do not even approach the sum of $3,000. Again, as long as I know that first-class lawyers do occupy the positions they do in my own State and live on $3,000 per annum, I can not help but believe that the judges in the Territory of Arizona can live comfortably upon $3,000 per annum. The gentleman compares Alaska with Arizona. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if it were left to me to go to Alaska to try to live on $5,000 per annum or to Arizona to try it on $3,000, I would give something to boot in order to go to Arizona instead of Alaska. Why, sir, the fuel in Alaska and the extra clothing would more than consume the difference in the salary. I can not reconcile that kind of a comparison at all, and I therefore insist upon my point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I always listen with a great deal of pleasure to what my good friend from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] says in this House, and I always listen with pleasure to what my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] says; but I did not hear all the gentleman from Arizona said, though I tried hard to do so—but what I thought I heard shocked me profoundly, and hence I speak. I heard it said by some one on this side that voluntary contributions were made by the people to these judges to help them along. Mr. Chairman, that, I repeat, shocked me very much, as it did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], for above all departments, State and national, our courts should be kept above even the suspicion of accepting gifts under any circumstances, unless they are gifts of actual charity. Here is a system which it seems has grown up in that little Territory, where the judges are so "hard up," to use a short expression, that it appeals to the people who may be litigants in the court, and they, out of their kindness of heart, are actually helping to take care of the judges who enforce the law of the land—the laws that we make, the laws for that Territory, and the Federal laws. Yet Congress sits here and permits that condition to continue! Suppose we had that condition with the Supreme Court of the United States or in the States? I believe there are prohibitions against the President and other representatives of the American Government—words in the Constitution—against accepting gifts from foreign nations. Certainly, the people over whom a court presides should not be permitted to hand gifts to the court. It makes no difference how kindly it may be intended, they should not be permitted to give gifts to the judges, except those of actual charity in dire distress, where it is known as an act of charity. Centainly that system should not obtain or continue. Yet we are confronted here to-day with what seems to me is that condition, and it shocks me, heart and head, and I am satisfied that if my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] had clearly heard the statements made that this was about the condition in this Territory before he took the firm position that he has taken in this matter, he, with his keen sense of justice—for he is a just man, one of the most watchful men in this body or that ever was in it, and as honest a man as the day is long—would not insist upon that position. Here we are sitting to-day—and he now is to blame—and I want to call his attention to that fact, and I hope I will have the gentleman's attention——

Mr. MACON. I am listening.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We are sitting here to-day and continuing that system in that great Territory that we voted to make a State of this Union only a few months back.

Mr. MACON. And I will vote to do it again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And why? Because of a carpetbag government, to be short, out there, a carpetbag system, the best we can have in a Territorial government, and yet this condition in that great struggle was not developed. I have never heard of it before until it fell from the lips of my faithful friend and patriot the statesman from the great Territory of Arizona [applause], MARCUS A. SMITH—a man who is incapable of doing wrong, as much so, I believe, as any man who lives. [Applause.]

I hope if it is the unwisdom of the Republican party—I do not want to mix politics with this—to keep that little Territory out of the Union that MARK SMITH will live a thousand years and cheat you out of an opportunity to keep him out of the United States Senate. [Applause.] I do not know a man in Arizona but MARK SMITH. I know some of my unfortunate constituents had to go to that salubrious climate to try and regain their health, and they found enough fresh air and enough hospitable people to help take care of them and send them back restored in a great measure to health.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that the usual custom, to go out there for their health and get $3,000 additional? Is not that good pay?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was speaking of victims of consumption who went out there. I say, sir, that $3,000 is not enough, if these statements are to be believed. It is not an agricultural country, as I understand it, and the cost of living is very high. If it is not enough for those judges to live on, Mr. Chairman, and work as long as they do—and the people of the Territory must help them out, whether it is a house they let them have, or something else—I say to my friend from New York, whose judges get about $17,000 yearly, and sit upon the bench for fifteen years, I say to him and to this great committee, that it will be a sad commentary upon the American Congress that we let the sun of heaven go down this evening because of a mere technicality and continue that system that will reflect upon the judiciary and reflect upon this magnificent body of lawmakers. [Applause.] I appeal to my friend from Arkansas to withdraw the little technicality that so often defends virtue and not let what seems to be a vice continue out in the little Territory of Arizona.

Mr. MACON. I want to say, sir, that I am using no technicality——

Mr GAINES of Tennessee. Well, then, a rule.

Mr. MACON. I am keeping within my prerogatives here as a Representative, occupying as lawful grounds——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that, sir.

Mr. MACON. And I want it understood that it is not upon technical grounds——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I understand that——

Mr. MACON. But I am doing it because I believe it is right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a mere rule, and by withdrawing your objection, by taking down your hand as it were, this can be passed, and I am satisfied that this body sitting here, appalled by this condition in Arizona, will vote to put the proposition in the bill. I appeal to the gentleman now to withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, it is strange to me that a Representative can not undertake to discharge his duties as he sees them, when he keeps himself clearly within the pale of the law and the rules of the House, without some one feeling called upon to lecture him about what he is doing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to assure my friend I was not trying to lecture him. The gentleman knows there is nobody in this House who thinks more kindly of him than I do and believes that the gentleman's sense of his obligations to his duties is as high as anybody's could be.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, flowers never take the place of food. Bouquets may be beautiful to look at, but they are not substantial enough to exist upon, and hence to throw a bouquet at me in one breath and criticise my course in another does not appeal to me perhaps as the gentleman would like for it to do.

Whenever I seek to violate the law of the land or the rules of the House, or trample upon the prerogatives or rights of other Members upon the floor, then gentlemen can criticise me for it, but when I have pursued a consistent and legal course concerning matters of legislation here, I deny gentlemen the right to lecture me upon the subject of my duties as a Representative. I do not treat them that way, and I demand as fair treatment from them as I accord to them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am afraid that a false impression has gone out and that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] has not understood that this pay of the judges, coming through the taxing power of the Territory, is very like the pay of judges coming through a State transacting its business through the taxing power of the State. It is not like receiving alms or charity so much as it is a recognition by the Commonwealth of the necessity of preserving its good order and trying to have it done without throwing the judge in debt on his job.

Therefore, I make this explanation, in order that no false impression may go forth as to that. The judges in receiving those contributions from the counties, passed by the board of supervisors, are receiving it from exactly the same source that the sheriff received it who waited on the court or that the clerk of the court received it from; and it naturally strikes one, as it struck my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], with the impression that they were receiving information that would shock the sense of morality.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to inquire whether these payments made from the treasuries of the counties are made in pursuance of the law of the Territorial legislature?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, sir; and I do not think those payments are legal, my friend.

Mr. KEIFER. I was trying to get at it and see if they were. But you have county commissioners?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Boards of supervisors.

Mr. KEIFER. Do they pass a law, or do they have a power to pass a law, or rule, by which they pay this money?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They have no power to do it at all. They fix the rate of taxation and draw warrants on the taxes collected for payment of all just claims against the county. If they pay the judges anything there is no law for it that I know of.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no Territorial law authorizing them to do that?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, sir. I think the national law, if I am not mistaken, prohibits it.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair has not been called to any law which would authorize the appropriation called for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona. As he understands there is no such law, the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: For rent, messenger, postage, stationery, fuel, lights, printing, and incidental expenses for secretary's office, for pay of members and officers of the legislative assembly, mileage, rent of rooms for the legislature and committees, furniture, stationery, printing, binding, fuel, lights, and incidentals, $24,250.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is not often, Mr. Chairman, that I feel impelled to rise for the purpose of saying anything in defense of the Territory of Arizona in the presence of the very distinguished gentleman who so well represents that Territory. But it seems to me that the committee in reporting this bill has made an undue discrimination against the Territory of Arizona. There are in the bill three items for Territorial legislatures, one for Arizona, one for New Mexico, and one for Hawaii. And I notice that under the appropriation for Hawaii there is provided expenses of telephone; that under the appropriation for New Mexico there is provided expenses of telephone service, but that in Arizona there is no expectation of the use of telephone service, and I am sure that that is a discrimination which ought not to be permitted. Nay, more. In Hawaii there is provided expenses for ice and water; in New Mexico there is provided expenses for ice and water, but in Arizona it is not expected that the Territorial legislature will indulge in the use of either ice or water, and whatever may be the fact in reference to the legislature, it does not seem to me proper to put it in the law and call attention to the fact that the Territorial legislature of that Territory does not use water in its deliberations. And it seems to me that, if we provide money to pay for water and ice in Hawaii and money with which to buy ice and water in New Mexico, we ought to do the same in Arizona. Aye, further; although the appropriation for Hawaii does not include the pay at all of the legislative body, they provide the amount of $30,000 for the expenses of the legislature, while in the Territory of Arizona, including the pay of the legislature, they only provide the sum of $24,250. I am sure that the expenses of the Territorial legislature of Arizona, with the immense distances that the gentlemen have to traverse in order to reach the capital of that Territory, with the great work that they have in hand, ought to be as great as the expenses of the legislature of Hawaii. And in order to assist my friend, and not require him alone and single-handed to fight all the battles of this great Territory, I raise my voice in protest against this discrimination.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I do not know, but I appreciate it all the same, from what source my friend's kindness flows. It is only when you excite his appetite that he gets eloquent. We are willing out there to supply the water and ice and whatever else we want. Those are things we care very little for. We learned to do without it when you gentlemen were sitting in your quiet homes amid all the blandishments of civilization. These men learned to go days without it. No wonder we have good strong men out there—when you know through what they have gone—and when this Committee on Appropriations leaves them without any ice or water we care little about it. This presence will bear me witness that from the time I have been here—now nearly twenty years—I have been constantly attempting to increase the salaries of those judges, as well as the amount paid our legislators, and trying all that time to make the Committee on Appropriations give officers, at least, the amount allowed under the law—the salary which is provided. They do not even allow the officers the amount allowed by law. We have a law allowing the governor of the Territory $3,600. That is the statute, and this committee allows him $3,000, and will not give him any more. The gentleman speaks of telephones. I will only give you an idea on this same question of telephones. We are not behind in any function of progress. Do you know that in that vast area I can sit in my office at Tucson and talk over the telephone to nearly every town of importance and nearly every county seat in that Territory, which is as great in area as Indiana and Ohio and half of Illinois added. That is a development of their own. They have paid for every cent of it, and yet, while the Government has never given it, Arizona, a nickel, it has received millions of dollars from it. They have never paid back a cent, but they stand with a flaming sword at the door through which we are trying to enter into some portal of justice and right.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of War, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $6,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $2,000; stenographer to the Secretary, $1,800; clerk to the Assistant Secretary, $2,100; clerk to the chief clerk, $2,100; disbursing clerk, $2,500; appointment clerk, $2,000; four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; superintendent of buildings outside of State, War, and Navy Department building, in addition to compensation as chief of division, $250; chief telegrapher, $1,800; four clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; fourteen clerks of class 2; eighteen clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, $900; one clerk, $720; one foreman, $1,200; carpenter, $1,000; chief messenger, $1,000; one carpenter, $900; one skilled laborer, $900; six messengers; seven assistant messengers; one telephone switch-board operator; one assistant telephone switch-board operator; two messenger boys, at $360 each; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; one fireman; four watchmen; five watchmen, at $660 each; eight laborers; two laborers, at $470 each; hostler, $600; two hostlers, and one watchman, at $540 each; one messenger boy, $480; two elevator conductors, one at $600 and one at $470; four charwomen; in all, $144,060.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the increase of the Assistant Secretary's salary, on page 82, lines 3 and 4, from $4,500 to $6,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, on page 82, line 4, change the print from $6,000 to $4,500.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, after the word "dollars," insert "Assistant Secretary, $4,500.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary of the Navy, $6,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; disbursing clerk, $2,250; four clerks of class 4; stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 3; three clerks of class 2; four clerks of class 1; stenographer, $1,200; one clerk, $1,100; four clerks, at $1,000 each; telegraph operator, $1,100; two copyists; carpenter, $900; four messengers; five assistant mesengers (including one transferred from Bureau of Navigation); one laborer; three messenger boys, at $600 each; one messenger boy, $420; one messenger boy, $400; one telephone switch-board operator; one assistant telephone switch-board operator; in all, $69,260.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "six thousand dollars," in line 14, page 95, it being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer the following amendment: On line 14, page 95, strike out "six thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 95, line 13, after the word "dollars," insert "Assistant Secretary of the Navy, $4,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Naval Records of the Rebellion: For chief clerk, $2,000; one agent, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the late Confederate navy, $1,800; three clerks of class 2 (including one transferred from Bureau of Yards and Docks); two clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; two copyists; copyist, $720; one assistant messenger; necessary traveling expenses for collection of records, $100; in all, $15,740.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, on page 96, after the word "Docks," in line 16, I move to insert the words "one clerk of class 2, indexer."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 16, after the word "Docks," insert "one clerk of class 2, indexer."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I will give a brief explanation of that amendment. There has been for years detailed from the Government Printing Office to the Navy Department a man who has done the work of indexing the Navy and Army rebellion records, as they are called. He receives his appointment from one arm of the Government and does his work in another. The Bureau has recommended the adoption of the amendment. In a conversation with the President of the United States, he thought, as I do, that this man's place ought to be rendered stable and, I understand, suggested substantially this amendment. The man who has been doing the work was a man whose work was known to him very well during the term of his service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the object of the amendment is to give the man responsibility in the Department where his work is.

The committee did not adopt the recommendation, because I think it was not sufficiently insisted upon, but I hope the committee will not object to it now. Of course I know it is subject to a point of order if the point of order should be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, in order to make this right, on page 96, line 20, the total of $15,700 should be changed to $17,100. Of course the transfer of this man from one arm to the other increases the aggregate of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 20, strike out "$15,700" and insert "$17,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to change all totals in the bill incident to any amendments that are made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to change the totals to correspond with the action of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a monthly Pilot Chart of the North Pacific Ocean, showing graphically the matters of value and interest to the maritime community of the Pacific coast, and particularly the directions and forces of the winds to be expected during the month succeeding the date of issue; the set and strength of the currents; the feeding grounds of whales and seals; the regions of storm, fog, and ice; the positions of derelicts and floating obstructions to navigation; and the best routes to be followed by steam and by sail; including the expenses of communicating and circulating information; lithographing and engraving; the purchase of materials for and printing and mailing the chart, $2,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. There is no provision of law, although that has been the custom, authorizing the publication of the monthly Pilot Chart of the North Pacific Ocean. If there be a provision of law requiring the Government to publish a bulletin telling the directions and forces of the winds to be expected during the month succeeding the date of issue, it is very important legislation, because, if we could, by legislation, ascertain what the direction and force of the winds would be next month, it would be of great value to us all; also, if the regions of storm, fog, and ice during the next month could be determined by law, that would be of exceedingly great value. I think there is no provision of law for it. It is a useless publication. It may have been of benefit at one time, but the routes to be followed by steam and sail vessels have long been laid out, and do not require to be published every month.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriation which has been in the bill year after year. The exact usefulness of it I am not prepared to enlighten the gentleman about; but as to the point of order, this is a monthly chart which has been published for several years. It is a regular Government publication, a work now in progress, and it seems to me that the continuation of it is proper upon an appropriation bill. I suppose the gentleman will not deny that it is a work which we have had year by year, which is now being published, and that this is a mere continuation of what is now going on.

Mr. MANN. I will not deny that this monthly pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean has been published for a good many years, but I do not think that requires that it shall be continued. It is not a work in progress. It is ended each month when it is published. That is the end of that month's work. Certainly that would be a very broad definition of a work in progress. The necessity for it has long since ceased, or I would not make the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. As to the necessity of it, I am not disposed to argue, for I do not know about it.

Mr. MANN. Of course that has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. No, that has nothing to do with the point of order; but the Hydrographic Office is in existence, which is appropriated for upon the two preceding pages. There is a large force of clerks. There is an appropriation of $100,000 for this office. This appropriates for publishing results worked out by this office, and as a mere publication of results of the work of this office, it seems to me it is in order.

Mr. MANN. The Hydrographic Office is engaged in quite another work. It is engaged in important work. This is not a necessary part of the work of the Hydrographic Office at all.

Mr. GILLETT. I think I can cite a statute authorizing this, if the Chair desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have his attention called to that, because the Chair will state frankly that he hardly thinks the appropriation is authorized on the ground that it is a continuing work in progress.

Mr. GILLETT. I call the attention of the Chair to section 432 of the Revised Statutes, as authorizing the publication.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 432 is as follows:

SEC. 432. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause to be prepared, at the Hydrographic Office attached to the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department, maps, charts, and nautical books relating to and required in navigation, and to publish and furnish them to navigators at the cost of printing and paper, and to purchase the plates and copyrights of such existing maps, charts, navigators, sailing directions and instructions as he may consider necessary, and when he may deem it expedient to do so, and under such regulations and instructions as he may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Permit me to call your attention to the fact that this entirely changes the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in that regard, and requires him to publish a chart giving particularly the directions and forces of the winds to be expected during the month succeeding the date of issue, the set and strength of the currents, the regions of storm, fog, and ice, which is not provided for in the law, but entirely overrules his discretion, and hence is a change of existing law.

Mr. GILLETT. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, although the law does not set forth all the details, the law makes a general provision and does not compel the Secretary to publish the chart, but simply makes an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. It does compel him to publish it.

Mr. GILLETT. It appropriates for a monthly chart; it does not compel him to publish it.

Mr. MANN. It compels him, if he does publish it, to do something without his discretion; he has to insert something new. This takes away the discretion he has under the law and compels him to show certain things which it is impossible for anybody to know.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman calls attention to that portion relating to the direction and course of the winds to be expected during the month succeeding the day of issue. It is a well-known fact that on the ocean there are certain winds to be expected at certain times of the year, and a study of those subjects gives these officers an opportunity to draw very good conclusions as to what winds are to be expected during the succeeding month.

Mr. MANN. Do these winds change each year? Does the information have to be published every year telling what the prevailing winds are?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The idea is that these officers, from what they observe the preceding year, get new ideas, and these should be brought to the attention of the navigators.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending paragraph appropriates money for the publication of a monthly pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, which, if published, is to include certain things specified in the paragraph, thereby seeming to the Chair to limit the discretion which is vested in the executive officer by section 432, to which the attention of the Chair is called. The Chair thinks it would be possible to appropriate money for publishing a monthly pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, but in making the appropriation the directions set forth can not be embodied. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to main building, $5,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee determined to rise, and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16882, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4922. An act providing for the platting and selling of the south half of sec. 30, T. 2 N., R. 11 W. of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, for town-site purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 5155. An act authorizing the exchange of lands for the enlargement of maneuvering grounds—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 389. An act for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 652. An act to create the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2886. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late firm of Lapene & Ferre—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 3342. An act to construct and place a light-ship opposite the entrance of St. Johns River, Florida—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3778. An act for the relief of the Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4260. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4289. An act for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Okla.—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

S. 4541. An act to authorize the sale of 640 acres of the lands of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Agency and the Arapaho school, Oklahoma, and the use of the proceeds thereof—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 14766. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 15669) to provide for the construction of dams, canals, power stations, and locks for the improvement of navigation and development of water power on the St. Lawrence River at or near Long Sault Island, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., was changed from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. BINGHAM (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Elijah Warren against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Henry Davis against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Paris P. Henderson against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Abby C. McNett, widow of Andrew J. McNett, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mary L. Scott, widow of Pleasant S. Scott, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Jane H. Haynes, widow of Charles H. Haynes, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Margaret Bloom, widow of Andrew S. Bloom, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for equipment of coast artillery, organized militia—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service submitting an estimate of appropriation for expenses of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service submitting an estimate of appropriation for maintenance of the leprosy hospital, Hawaii—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the president of the Civil Service Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relating to enlarged accommodations for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16964) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona providing for the erection of a court-house and jail at Yuma, in Yuma County, Territory of Arizona, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 899), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McCALL, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 124) authorizing the presentation of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 900), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 17) that the statue of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, presented by the State of Alabama, be accepted in the name of the United States and the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the same, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 901), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10413) granting a pension to Ferdinand P. Larkin—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10899) granting an increase of pension to John Miller—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17136) to make October 12 in each year a public holiday, to be called "Columbus Day"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 17137) relating to conspiracies, restraining orders, injunctions, contempts of court, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17138) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station in Monroe County, State of Illinois—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 17139) to establish a fish-hatchery and fish-cultural station in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 17140) to provide for approval and ratification of sales of certain lands in partition suits in the Quapaw Indian Agency, Ottawa County, Okla., and deeds made therein—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17141) to accord to enlister men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and their wives, the right of burial in any national cemetery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DENBY: A bill (H. R. 17142) to amend an act approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act creating a United States court for China, and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GILL: A bill (H. R. 17143) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Light-House Board to purchase and to establish lighted buoys at the entrance of the Chesapeake Bay—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17144) providing for the restoration of the motto "In God we trust" on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States—to the Commitee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 17145) authorizing States and Territories to select lands in lieu of lands included within forest reserves—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17146) providing for the compensation of States and Territories for lands included within forest reserves—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WILEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHANEY: Resolution (H. Res. 238) for the payment of an additional messenger in charge of the House telephone—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 17147) granting a pension to John Lilley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: A bill (H. R. 17148) granting an increase of pension to Adam Allen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17149) granting an increase of pension to Freeman Burk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 17150) granting an increase of pension to William H. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 17151) for the relief of heirs of John W. Stallings, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOWERS: A bill (H. R. 17152) for the relief of heirs of John W. Ford, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 17153) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Taylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17154) granting an increase of pension to Michael Wilkey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17155) granting a pension to Louiza J. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 17156) granting a pension to Jacob L. Crim—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 17157) granting an increase of pension to Elijah Tharp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17158) to pay the estate of Anna Irons, deceased, for beef cattle furnished United States Army during the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17159) to pay the heirs of Mrs. E. L. Eblin, formerly Mrs. E. L. McElrath, for the rent of a saw and grist mill from January 1, 1864, to June 30, 1865, rented for the use of and used by the Federal forces in McMinn County, Tenn., the sum of $21,200, with interest from the said last-named date at the rate of 6 per cent per annum—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17160) granting a pension to John T. Biggers—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 17161) for the relief of Julia Ryan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 17162) granting an increase of pension to John Dammer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17163) granting an increase of pension to Henry Phelps—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 17164) for the relief of the heirs of W. D. McDowall, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 17165) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nertz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17166) granting a pension to Sadie Doan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 17167) authorizing the Woodlawn Cemetery Association, of St. Maries, Idaho, to purchase not to exceed 40 acres of land from the United States—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 17168) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 17169) granting a pension to Providence S. Ludlam—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McGAVIN: A bill (H. R. 17170) granting an increase of pension to Edward Mackin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 17171) for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 17172) for the relief of R. F. Pippin, of Putnam County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17173) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Boyers, née Soloman—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17174) for the relief of the heirs of Edmund Floyd Greenwood—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 17175) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Godsey—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17176) granting an increase of pension to John Townsend—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17177) granting a pension to A. H. Sympson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17178) granting a pension to James H. Gilley—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17179) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Clark—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17180) for the relief of John J. Sewell—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17181) to correct the military record of C. W. I. Pugh—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17182) to correct the military record of Nelson Joseph—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAW: A bill (H. R. 17183) granting a pension to Elizabeth Steele—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17184) for the relief of Peter Claude—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE: A bill (H. R. 17185) for the relief of heirs of Zebudee Slaton, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17186) for the relief of heirs or estate of Andrew J. Casey, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 17187) granting a pension to Ellen Waters—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 17188) granting an increase of pension to Timothy C. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17189) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 17190) granting a pension to James F. Flynn—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McGUIRE (by request): A bill (H. R. 17191) to confer jurisdiction, legal and equitable, upon the Court of Claims in the matter of the claims of certain Shawnee Indians to be enrolled as Cherokees, under treaty of July 19, 1866, agreement of June 7, 1869, the act of October 1, 1890, and decrees of the courts thereunder, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 17192) granting a pension to Harry W. Albeck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17193) granting a pension to Everett M. Letts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17194) granting an increase of pension to William J. Stewart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17195) to restore the pension of J. Boyd Robinson, late a sergeant of Company G, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17196) granting a pension to Daniel L. Barnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McMILLAN: A bill (H. R. 17197) granting an increase of pension to Augustus Goeller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17198) granting an increase of pension to Minor H. Greene—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 17199) for the relief of the estate of John W. McKissock, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17200) for the relief of the estate of David H. Hays, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 17201) granting an increase of pension to Adna T. Cushman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 17202) granting an increase of pension to Elias D. Carnahan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17203) granting an increase of pension to James M. Reed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 17204) granting a pension to Thomas M. Bellomy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17205) granting a pension to John M. Hyden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17206) for the relief of Almareen Owens, sr.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPIGHT: A bill (H. R. 17207) for the relief of heirs or estate of T. H. P. Morton, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17208) for the relief of estate of Mrs. Jerusha Harrison, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STURGISS: A bill (H. R. 17209) granting a pension to John Todd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17210) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Benjamin F. Clayton captain of infantry in the Army and to place him on the retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALLACE: A bill (H. R. 17211) to validate a military bounty-land warrant location made by Horace E. Bemis—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 17212) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert M. Everham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HIGGINS: A bill (H. R. 17213) granting an increase of pension to William Coombes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUFF: A bill (H. R. 17214) for the relief of Harry Kimmell, a commander on the retired list of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, Local No. 11, Buffalo, N. Y., for construction of battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of John W. Stallings—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of Musicians' Protective Association, No. 103, of Erie, Pa., for recognition of civilian musicians in United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Cigar Makers' Union, No. 107, of Erie, Pa., for building battle ships in United States navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Keystone View Company, of Meadville, Pa., for amendment to copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of Portsmouth, Va., for building battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Pattern Makers' Association of Erie, Pa., favoring building battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of A. H. Mahle and Eli Barton, of Corry, Pa., for a national registration law for automobiles—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: Petition of Ware County Medical Society, for laboratories by United States for study of criminology—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOWERS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of John W. Ford—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Auburn, Me., against use of mails for distribution of advertising matter for intoxicating liquor—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURTON of Delaware: Petition of Pilots' Association of the Bay and River Delaware, for H. R. 6169—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of John B. Creighton, favoring H. R. 4375 and 4377, for pensions for widows and children of Doctors Lazear and Carroll—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of National Funeral Directors' Association, against custom of burial at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CHANEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Louiza J. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: Petition of Dawson Grange and citizens of Fayette County, Pa., for S. 3152, protection of dairy interest—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of D. R. Reynolds, in favor of Kittredge copyright bill (S. 2900)—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Farmers' Institute of Somerset County, Pa., against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of W. T. Powell and Grand Army of the Republic Association, of Philadelphia, against abolition of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: Petition of mass meeting of citizens of Indiana Harbor, Ind., for appropriation to improve the harbor of that place—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of A. Orth Behin et al., of Lafayette, Ind., for a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Resolutions adopted by the National German-American Alliance, relative to immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorial of Merchant Tailors' National Protective Association, indorsing H. R. 534, relating to industrial education—to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of Michael Cook Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Faribault, Minn., for the Lafean bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, for forest reservations in White Mountains and southern Appalachian Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DAWSON: Petition of 223 citizens of Clinton for a system of pensions for aged persons—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturaliztion.

By Mr. DUNWELL: Petition of Frank E. Pearsall, against amendment of copyright bill inimical to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of T. B. Walker, for currency legislation—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DUREY: Petition of J. C. Worley, of Ballston, N. Y., against amendment of copyright law as regards photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of National Funeral Directors' Association, for legislation to prevent burial at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Downtown Taxpayers' Association, for construction of a battle ship at Brooklyn Navy-Yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of George Rawlings—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Samuel Lyda, Catharine Lyda, and Frances L. Ferguson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of George W. Irvin—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of David M. Wiswander—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of New York Post-Office Laborers' Protective Association, for increase of pay—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Paint Manufacturers' Association of the United States, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRAFF: Petition of Edward H. D. Couch, for travel pay as an officer of the United States Volunteers for war service in the Philippines—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of Companies I and L, First Infantry, and Company E, Second Infantry, Connecticut National Guard, favoring H. R. 14783, for promotion of efficiency of the militia—to the Committee on Militia.

Also, petition of Germania Lodge, Sons of Hermann, of Norwich, Conn., against prohibition or interstate-commerce liquor measures now before Congress—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Business Men's Association of Willimantic, Conn., against any changes in the present parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charles K. Payne, jr.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUFF: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Harry Kimmell, to be placed on the retired list of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: Petition of Army and Navy Union, of Erie, Pa., for increase of pay of officers and enlisted men in Army and Navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KELIHER: Petition of women of Boston, for legislation providing for a 1-cent 2-ounce general letter post and for a cheap rural post—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of W. B. Clark Company, of Boston, against increase of census clerical force save in compliance with civil-service rules—to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, against change in immigration laws—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of East Asiatic Society of Boston, for joint resolution No. 90, relative to consular establishments in China, Japan, and Korea—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of W. G. Mendeville, of Lowville, N. Y., against amendment of copyright law as regards photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LEE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heir of James Freeman—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Petition of Samuel H. Harrington and others, for pension legislation granting $30 per month to all Union soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Ellen Waters—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Ambrose M. Phelps—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTERSON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mathew Ready, jr.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Mount Pleasant Baptist Church—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REEDER: Petitions of Homer Calvin et al. and Milo Robinson et al., for the Sherwood bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: Papers to accompany bills for relief of James Powell, Daniel Snively, and John McNevin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPIGHT: Papers to accompany bills for relief of estate of Jerusha Harrison and estate of T. H. P. Morton—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STERLING: Papers to accompany H. R. 16851—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STURGISS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William D. Graham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of John Todd, Isaac D. Caldwell, Nelson Hendrick, Charles H. Keefer, R. A. A. Collins, John C. Dearing, and John M. Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of George Murphy, against amendment in copyright bill inimical to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WALLACE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Horace E. Bemis—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WOOD: Petition of Mrs. C. B. Dickinson, for restoration of motto "In God we trust" to the coins—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of G. G. Green, against amendment to pure-food and drugs act of June 30, 1906—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of G. G. Green, against H. R. 11762, prohibiting distribution of advertising matter in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 15, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the deep and abiding patriotism which characterizes the American people and which insures the perpetuity of our Republic; that we are not unmindful of those who sacrificed themselves on a thousand fields in the service of their country. We are reminded of the brave men who, ten years ago to-day, went down to death on the ill-fated Maine.

Grant, O God, that their sacrifice may be an inspiration to the living; that our country is not only worth living for, but, if need be, it is worth dying for; that vigilance is not only the price of liberty, but it is the price of everything worth while.

Help us, therefore, to be patriots in times of peace and in times of war; and we most fervently pray, O God, that war shall never come to us again, but that we may live in harmony with each other and in peace with all the world; and Thine will be the praise, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a document a communication addressed to me by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General relative to the attitude of the Department toward second-class mail.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire if the document is concerning Erastus Moore?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all. I have had many inquiries, as other Members have, relative to the new rules of the service affecting the second-class matter, and this document will enable Members to fully advise in regard to it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If I understand, this has reference to the rule which prescribes that in case of a daily paper, if the subscription is not paid within a certain specified time, the subscriber's name shall not be counted in the general make-up of the numbers of bona fide subscribers.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I may say that it covers the entire subject of second-class matter of postage; it gives a full review of the cases—those that have appeared in recent months—and the new rules which have been promulgated.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say that it covers that, and others as well.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman this question. Some of us are very anxious to know, and a number of the constituents of many of us are anxious to know, the authority of the Postmaster-General to make these rules. Is that also conveyed in this communication?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The entire subject, I repeat, is treated in this communication, and it is prepared with a view of furnishing full and exhaustive information on that subject.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, in the event the House or Congress should be of the opinion that the rules, one of which I have referred to, are not proper rules in that regard, what relief is there for the people from such a rule?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Any relief which requires legislation would have to be considered by Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that, but the gentleman is the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and if these rules and regulations are binding then the real relief must come through the committee, so far as this House is concerned.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment this communication, which I ask shall be printed as a document, carries sufficient information to enable the gentleman from Georgia, as well as others, to satisfy themselves concerning what is the rule and what is the policy of the Department, and then they can take such steps as may seem best to them for any relief which they may think may be wise.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am glad to have the information, and I am satisfied the press of the country and the people generally will be glad to know by what authority these rules have been adopted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to couple with my request for unanimous consent for printing as a document that 5,000 copies be printed. I may say that 5,000 copies can be printed, or about five times as many as the limited number that would be printed if no requests were made, for about $133. I think that will cover the entire expense of the 5,000 copies of the document.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman where these extra copies will go—to the Members or to the document room?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection, just so this is printed and they can be available. I have no objection to coupling with that the request that the documents be distributed through the folding room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, does that assign to each Member a particular number?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that is a very wasteful way of distribution.

Mr. McCALL. In the other way a few Members would get them all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not like that method of distribution, because I regard it as exceedingly wasteful. If every Member took his quota out of the folding room, it would be a different proposition, but there are train loads of documents piled up in the Capitol building that have never been called for.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the recent joint resolution the Committee on Printing controls the total amount printed, and the full number is not printed unless the demand justifies it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents in the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than Members of Congress" shall be filled by the appointment of Charles F. Choate, jr., a citizen of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCALL a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16882), the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee is in the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes. When the committee adjourned last evening the committee was considering the bill under the five-minute rule and had reached line 4, on page 104. The Clerk will now resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 102 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I will ask to have read from the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to page 102 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 102, in lieu of that stricken out on point of order, insert the following:

"For a monthly pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, showing graphically the matters of value and interest to the maritime community of the Pacific coast, including the expenses of communicating and circulating information, lithographing and engraving, the purchase of material for and printing and mailing the chart, $2,000."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order until I make a brief statement with reference to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserve his point of order?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am willing for the gentleman to make a statement if he desires to do so, but I object to returning to any part of the bill save that to which the committee has already conceded.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman can make a statement when the next paragraph is reached under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. When I make my statement here I do not believe that there will be any objection to my amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is a waste of talk; we are not going back to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, when this matter came up on yesterday it was a proposition that had been in the bill for a great many years, and no question had been raised on the floor of the House with reference to it, and I will frankly state I did not know anything about the importance of this matter, and therefore I did not propose my amendment on yesterday. This morning I called at the Hydrographic Office to inquire with reference to the matter, and I find that this chart has been prepared every year since about 1882 or 1885 and that it is considered by the Office of the very greatest value, especially to the maritime interests on the Pacific coast. The pilot charts are compilations of observations made by something like 2,000 voluntary observers of the Department, and they show the results of those observations for twenty or thirty years.

There are great demands for this chart, especially by the maritime interests, by the navigators, and also by the schools, colleges, and public institutions of the country, and it seems to me that it is a matter that this House ought not to cut out, especially as it has been used for twenty-five or thirty years. As I say, they have something like 2,000 voluntary observers who send in their reports to the Department, and these charts are simply a compilation of these reports, and that is all there is to it. They will show the experience of navigators with the currents of water and the prevailing wind and all that sort of thing for twenty-five or thirty years. From these observations they are able to determine pretty fully and accurately what they may expect in the future. The Department considers this of the very greatest importance. Eighteen hundred copies of this North Pacific chart are issued monthly, and practically all are sent out. The provision I have sent has been carried in the bill here for twenty-five or thirty years and there ought not to be any objection to it. I have eliminated the objectionable features upon which this matter went out on the point of order yesterday and have simply carried the general proposition and appropriated what they already have had, and I hope there will be no objection to going back for the purpose of adopting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nautical Almanac Office: For the following assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, namely: Three, at $1,600 each; two, at $1,400 each; three, at $1,200 each; two, at $1,000 each; one copyist and typewriter, $900; one assistant messenger and one messenger boy, $420; in all, $15,240.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for a few minutes on a matter that is not, perhaps, germane to the bill before the House, but I will not occupy much time. I will read only a part, and insert in the RECORD the rest, of an article which appears in this morning's Washington Post. Briefly stated, it gives an account of an assault and robbery of a white lady at 6 o'clock or thereabouts yesterday afternoon near the British embassy, or gardens of the British embassy, on Connecticut avenue, one of the most fashionable, best lighted, and best protected avenues in the city of Washington.

This is one of twenty-one of these robberies from the person that have taken place since the 25th of September. There is to-day virtually a reign of terror among all those white women who are compelled to go upon the streets of Washington at night unattended and unprotected. Matters are getting worse instead of better. I am informed, from what I regard as a reliable source, that there are more policemen in the District of Columbia than in any city of like population in the United States. In addition, there are the watchmen in the public parks and public grounds who have police powers. In addition, there is a regimental post of United States cavalrymen——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman's criticism to the effect that there is not a sufficient number of policemen, or is it because of inefficient administration?

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentleman will gather from my remarks what is intended when I get through. Within telephone call is a regiment of soldiers at Fort Myer. At the navy-yard a marine company is on guard. There seems to be enough armed protectors and preservers of the peace within telephone call to prevent anything that can be prevented by police protection, if efficient.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, having read these instances of robbery, I do not believe it is possible to entirely prevent their occurrence with less than a policeman upon every block. They are not committed by professional pickpockets. Those professionals rob you without letting you know it, and leave you, at least physically, without injury. These robberies are in every instance, so far, by negroes, who begin the robbery by vicious assault upon the unprotected and unaccompanied white woman. Her purse is snatched. Murder has been committed since the 25th of September in one instance, but the victim was a man.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are we to do about it? An increase of 100 policemen might prevent some of these occurrences. I do not believe it possible that a hundred policemen can prevent all of them. A negro or a white man watching for an unprotected woman whose purse he may snatch is also watching to see that no policeman is within sight. The robbery is committed in an instant, and the culprit gets away, and there is no means of identifying him. The report of the major of police shows that there was reported an increase of 3,000 arrests in the District of Columbia for the last year. The report says that these were due to increase of population and vigilance of the police.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to account for the increase of crime at that rate by increase of population. The population of the District of Columbia is not increasing at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, but crime is, and crime of this character is on the increase, and I will tell you the cause, and I will tell you the remedy.

The cause is that there is coming to Washington City more and more of the very class of idle criminals who commit these crimes, and they are going to remain here as long as present conditions are here, and will increase. Why is it? These criminals are of a low order and not professionals. They are the hangers-around and frequenters of saloons, filled with vile stuff that they can buy for 15, 20, or 25 cents a pint. As temperance legislation has closed the saloons in so many places throughout the States near Washington, this criminal element has flocked to Washington. A segregation of the saloons of the city of Washington accelerates instead of prevents these crimes. We can not prevent it by an increase of police. The police, by increase of vigilance, may prevent part of it, but if you want to stop the blood of helpless women from flowing in the District of Columbia, if you want to prevent the capital city of the United States being held up to the nation as being utterly unable to defend white women as early as 6 o'clock in the evening, close your $800-license saloons, and not one of these cases will occur.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. An analysis of the arrests shows a vast number due to disorderly conduct, and it shows that while the negro population of the District of Columbia is not over one-third of the whole, the arrests for disorderly conduct among the colored people were double that among the whites during the last year reported.

These arrests for disorderly conduct are almost in every instance due to some stage of intoxication. Get rid of these "criminal-creating establishments," and there will not be half the number of arrests, and we will not need more than half the policemen you have now, and it will be a rare thing that one of this kind of crimes will be committed in the District.

We may have professional pickpockets afterwards; we will have some disorderly conduct; we will have some assaults; but we will reduce them to an extent that they will appear as nothing compared with the present. Now, we will be driven to this course by the fact that the States have closed the saloons in so large a part of the contiguous country, and by that means have caused a great many of the criminal element to come to Washington from those places. Say what you please, if Washington is to be a model to the country in morals and in the execution of the laws, it will have to be a model in morality and in moral institutions, and we will have to have here, however much you may dislike it, not simply regulation of saloons in the District of Columbia, but eradication. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Can the gentleman state what kind of vagrancy law there is in the city?

Mr. SIMS. I can not tell you specifically, and therefore will not undertake to answer the inquiry.

Mr. WEBB. If the city had a strict vagrancy law, carefully enforced, in my opinion in less than ten days 10,000 worthless negroes and trifling whites would leave the city.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman's statement may be true, but the best law that we can enact is one to get rid of the business that makes vagrants and fosters vagrancy. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. I agree with you in that.

Mr. SIMS. I here insert the article, as follows:

[From Washington Post, February 15, 1907.]

THUG ATTACKS GIRL—NEGRO KNOCKS DOWN AND ROBS MISS MAY MULLAN—NEAR BRITISH EMBASSY—CONNECTICUT AVENUE RESIDENT IS THE LATEST VICTIM—TWENTY-FIRST CASE OF THE KIND SINCE LAST SEPTEMBER—FAMILY APPREHENSIVE THAT SHE MAY NOT RECOVER—NAVY PAY INSPECTOR M'GOWAN AND OTHER CITIZENS TELL OF ASSAULT—UNIDENTIFIED MAN GETS AWAY WITH CASH AND CHECKS.

Knocked down and brutally beaten by an unidentified negro, who had been hiding in the gardens of the British embassy, at Connecticut avenue and N street NW., Miss May Mullan, of 1310 Connecticut avenue NW., proprietress of a laundry at 1134 Connecticut avenue NW., was robbed last night of her pocketbook containing about $75.

Miss Mullan, in falling, struck her head against the fence which encircles the grounds of the embassy and sustained a deep gash over the right eye and contusions of the face and head.

The attack upon Miss Mullan was perhaps the most daring of its kind that has occurred in the city. She is the twenty-first victim of negro desperadoes since last September.

Miss Mullan is suffering from shock, and is confined to her bed. Her condition was such last night that members of her family are deeply apprehensive concerning her condition.

BRILLIANTLY LIGHTED THOROUGHFARE.

Connecticut avenue is one of the most fashionable thoroughfares in the United States, and it is brilliantly lighted near the British embassy. It is doubtful if any street in the city is better illuminated. Many of the embassies and residences of men eminent in political and social life are located in this street. Members of the British embassy had entered the house a few minutes before the attack was made. A number of persons living in the embassy rushed out and assisted in caring for Miss Mullan. They insisted that she be taken into the house, but, after temporarily recovering, Miss Mullan asked that she be taken to her home, a short distance away.

Immediately after the attack was made a crowd gathered. Several persons were on the opposite side of the street, but, owing to the fog which enveloped the city last night, they did not realize what had happened until they saw the negro disappear through N street. A car was passing at the time. The lights from it illuminated the surroundings and gave those aboard and persons on the street an inkling of what had happened. There is a large arc light on the corner of Connecticut avenue and N street, but the rays from this were dimmed by the fog.

LOOKED OVER CHECKS.

Miss Mullan left her place of business shortly after 6 o'clock. It is her custom to leave at 6 o'clock, but, having some important matters to attend to last night, she was a little late. She had received some checks, in payment for work that had been done, during the day, and these she placed in her pocketbook. She was going to take them home and place them in the bank in the morning.

HIT HER ON THE HEAD.

The negro did not get the pocketbook when he first grabbed for it, and, becoming angered, lifted his right fist and hit Miss Mullan on the head as she was attempting to rise. Miss Mullan again fell to the ground unconscious. The negro grabbed the pocketbook.

TWENTY-ONE VICTIMS OF ROBBERS.

The following women have been attacked and in most instances robbed by footpads in the streets of Washington since September 25:

September 25, 1907.—Miss Mamie Esher, 609 Florida avenue NW., knocked down and robbed of a pocketbook containing $2.80.

October 8, 1907.—Mrs. Julia Priest, 1706 S street NW., robbed of pocketbook containing $2

October 19, 1907.—Miss Edna Sheckels, 1300 Tenth street NW., robbed of pocketbook containing $5.80.

October 26, 1907.—Miss Louisa Lewis, robbed in front of 1325 Q street NW., of pocketbook containing $13.

October 29, 1907.—Miss Clara Helf, 2118 Eighteenth street NW., pocketbook containing $5.85 snatched.

October 29, 1907.—Mrs. S. N. Vail reported attempt made to snatch her pocketbook by two negro boys.

November 1, 1907.—Mrs. Mary Hickman, 918 Second street NE., robbed of hand bag.

November 9, 1907.—Mrs. Catherine Baer, 1115 Fifth street NW., pocketbook snatched by two colored boys.

November 18, 1907.—Bessie Smith, colored, knocked down and robbed of hand bag by colored man.

November 21, 1907.—Mrs. Robert Hickman knocked down and robbed of money, watch, and pin.

December 12, 1907.—Mrs. Jennie Williams, of Maryland, hand bag snatched by negro.

December 14, 1907.—Mrs. Alwine Perkins, 1935 Thirteenth street NW., hand bag containing gold watch snatched.

December 28, 1907.—Miss Tyler, 1337 L street NW., knocked down and robbed of purse and car tickets.

January 3, 1908.—Miss Fawkes, 1836 Fifteenth street NW., knocked down and robbed of a hand bag and $1.

January 9, 1908.—Ellen Upshur, 305 N street NW., negro attempted to snatch her hand bag in N street NW.

January 14, 1908.—Miss Kelly knocked down and robbed in front of Portland apartment of bag containing $19.

January 26, 1908.—Mrs. Margaret Welch, 626 B street SW., knocked down and robbed of pocketbook containing $8.

February 7, 1908.—Mrs. Xanten, Twelfth street SE., robbed of pocketbook containing $11.

February 17, 1908.—Miss Sadie Dick, 605 L street NW., robbed of $10 by negro while at Eleventh and F streets NW.

February 12, 1908.—Miss Anna Schaeffer, 1216 Eighteenth street NW., knocked down and robbed by negro at Twenty-third street and Pennsylvania avenue NW.

February 14, 1908.—Miss May Mullan, 1310 Connecticut avenue NW., knocked down and robbed of pocketbook containing money and checks.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $12,000; First Assistant Secretary, $6,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; assistant chief clerk, $2,500; and to the chief clerk and assistant chief clerk there shall be distributed by the Secretary the duties prescribed by law for the chief clerk and such other duties as the Secretary may direct; additional to one member of Board of Pension Appeals, acting as chief of the board, $500; twelve members of a Board of Pension Appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; eight special inspectors, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to be subject to his direction, and whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the Department of the Interior, at $2,500 each (in lieu of one special land inspector and five special inspectors, at $2,500 each, and six Indian inspectors, at $2,500 each, heretofore provided for in the Indian appropriation act); chief disbursing clerk, $2,250; clerk in charge of supplies, $2,250; clerk in charge of mails, files, and archives, $2,250; four clerks, at $2,000 each; private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500; thirteen clerks of class 4 (two clerks of class 4 transferred to Indian Office and one transferred to General Land Office); sixteen clerks of class 3; twenty-one clerks of class 2 (three clerks of class 2 transferred to Indian Office and two transferred to General Land Office); twenty-four clerks of class 1 (six clerks of class 1 transferred to Indian Office, three transferred to General Land Office, and two omitted); returns office clerk, $1,200; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; three clerks, at $1,000 each (three clerks, at $1,000 each, transferred to General Land Office); five copyists (seven transferred to Indian Office); switchboard telephone operator; nine messengers; seven assistant messengers; eighteen laborers; two skilled mechanics, one at $900 and one at $720; two carpenters, at $900 each; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; one laborer, $600; six laborers, at $480 each; one packer, $660; two conductors of elevator, at $720 each; four charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,200; forty watchmen; additional to two watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; seven firemen; one clerk, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him, his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $283,090.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the language "six thousand dollars" in line 4, page 109, and "five thousand dollars" on line 5 of the same page.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. The Chair can dispose of one thing at a time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas? If not, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I have several points of order I wish to make. I reserve the point of order upon the whole paragraph. To line 6, page 109, I make the point of order on that or I will reserve it; on the language "for assistant chief clerk, $2,500; and to the chief clerk and assistant chief clerk there shall be distributed by the Secretary the duties prescribed by law for the chief clerk and such other duties as the Secretary may direct."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think there is an explanation of that which certainly appealed to the committee, and I hope will appeal to the gentleman from Illinois. The Secretary of the Interior asked of us a great many changes to reorganize his force. Now, I think the Committee on Appropriations is quite as much opposed to any changes or reorganization as any Member of the House, because it interferes seriously every year with our comparison of the appropriations with the preceding year and makes it very difficult for us in each year to keep track of the bills; and therefore we are naturally conservative and opposed to changes. The Secretary of the Interior impressed me, and I believe every Member upon the subcommittee, with the fact that the reorganization that he had in view would very much increase the efficiency of the Department and was very much to the advantage of the public service. He asked at this particular place to which the gentleman makes the point of order, instead of the appointment of chief clerk and assistant chief clerk, the appointment of two undersecretaries, his purpose being that the duties now performed by the chief clerk and another clerk should be taken up by these two undersecretaries, who should have control over, as I remember it, the buildings and supplies, and accounts of the Department, the clerical force, the two acting together and having together control over the whole administrative functions of the Department, subject, of course, to the Secretary. He made it clear to the committee that that was a very advantageous and desirable proposition, and convinced us that it would result in great saving to the Government and efficiency to the Department. But we did not like to introduce into the bill this new phrase, "undersecretary." We thought the same could be accomplished by the phraseology which we have used, and that we could accomplish this desirable object by having a chief clerk and assistant chief clerk and allowing the Secretary to distribute between them this class of duties which I have described.

I think it would be very much to the advantage of the work of the Department if he were allowed this legislation, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. In addition to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I desire to direct his attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior stated that it would effect a saving, as he confidently believed, of about $300,000 a year to the Government if he was permitted to reform the force.

Mr. GILLETT. That was by the whole plan of reorganization.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his point of order; and my reason for that statement is the fact that this particular paragraph is involved in, and is an essential part of, reorganization of the Interior Department. The committee felt that it was warranted in approving that part which will result in better administration and effect economy.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has said the estimates as submitted by the Department to the committee contemplated the entire reorganization of the Interior Department. That is true; but it was not deemed necessary to effect or approve the entire reorganization in order to bring about the economy and better administration which the Secretary contemplates will result from the reorganization.

There is one particular fact in connection with this reorganization I want to call attention to. Under the old organization there was in the Interior Department an intermediate division; that is, a division to which the work of the bureau went before going to the Secretary. These intermediate bureaus were, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, absolutely unnecessary, and, in his judgment, better results could be obtained by their elimination, holding the bureau chiefs responsible for their work and letting whatever work they performed requiring his approval come to him to his office direct. That is one of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior which the committee has approved and recommends to the House.

The forty-odd employees that have heretofore been employed in the intermediate division have been distributed to the several bureaus in the Interior Department whose work has been in areas, and the work of these bureaus is now being brought up current as the result of changing these employees who heretofore have been employed in the intermediate division.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior who, when he appeared before the committee, made a very clear and convincing statement as to the beneficial results of this organization, claimed that he wanted two undersecretaries, who should perform generally under his supervision the duties now devolving upon the chief clerk and the chief of the appointment division of the Interior Department, so that the physical property belonging to the Government under the control of the Interior Department could be placed under control of one of these undersecretaries, and the supervision of the personal accounts, etc., could be placed under the control and supervision of the other undersecretary.

The committee, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, did not believe that it was for the best interests of the service to have a divided responsibility there, and did not favor the creation of officers designated as "undersecretaries" contradistinguished from assistant secretaries. The committee thought it was for the purpose of giving somebody a high-sounding title, regardless of what the duties of the office might be; therefore the committee kept as close to the existing organization as possible, providing for a chief clerk and an assistant chief clerk, which will enable the Secretary to have the service of these two officers under his control in his office and perform all the services which, in the judgment of the Secretary, are necessary for the best administration of his Department and in addition to such services as are now required by law of the chief clerk of that Department.

If this paragraph is eliminated, then, of course, that involves an entire recasting of this particular paragraph and of providing for the office of the Secretary of the Interior Department along the lines of current law. I might say, as the result of that reorganization, the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied, and the committee so thought, that he would effect economies aggregating over two or three hundred thousand dollars a year in the administration of his Interior Department.

Every member of this House who has paid any attention at all to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill knows that there is no Executive Department of the Government so much in need of reorganization as was the Interior Department. I want the gentleman from Illinois and the Members of the House to understand that the ideas of the Secretary have not been adopted and are not recommended in full by the Committee on Appropriations or by the subcommittee reporting this bill to the whole committee; only those recommendations which appealed to the committee as being in the interest of better administration or greater economy in the prosecution of the business of that Department have been recommended by the committee.

And if the gentleman insists upon making this point of order he ought to be able to justify his action on the ground that the proposed reorganization will not effect economies and will not result in better administration. If the statement is made, as I heard it a moment ago, that this change is for the purpose of taking care of somebody in the Interior Department, I want to say that there is no foundation for that statement at all. No information that the committee could elicit from the Secretary of the Interior indicated that there was a particle of personal favoritism involved in the recommendation of the Secretary, and certainly it is not the intention of the committee in recommending this provision to encourage or approve of any favoritism in the Interior Department or in any other Department. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Illinois, before insisting upon his point of order against this paragraph, will consider the question whether or not this reorganization, so far as we have approved of it, will be of less advantage than the organization under the current law. One or the other must necessarily be adopted, and if this paragraph goes out it involves a recasting of all the provisions for the Interior Department, and for that reason I sincerely hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Minnesota seriously insist that this whole appropriation for the Interior Department depends upon whether this particular man is taken care of in the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no particular man to be taken care of.

Mr. MANN. Well, this position?

Mr. TAWNEY. I say that if you change this, take out this paragraph and return to the old plan——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is referring to the whole paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am referring to the effect that it has on the entire paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order on the paragraph because there are several things in it which I propose to make the point of order upon, but the point of order that is now pending is against nothing but the assistant chief clerk. Does the gentleman seriously contend——

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order not only relates to the assistant chief clerk, but also refers to the language which gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to require these officers to do certain duties in addition to those provided by law, and that is one of the vital points in the proposed reorganization in so far as the committee has approved it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it may be true, though it will take a great deal more than even the eloquence of the gentleman from Minnesota to convince me, that putting in a new officer at $2,500 a year will save $300,000 a year expense in the management of the Interior Department. I think that the statement itself bears on its face sufficient evidence that it is ridiculous, so that the gentleman from Minnesota would not for a moment insist upon it. I understand it is true that the Secretary of the Interior, for whom personally I have great admiration, endeavored to promote a scheme of reorganization in his Department, which would save a number of officials in the Department; but that it saves $200,000 or $300,000 I do not understand. I understand the contrary to be, that in order to reorganize the Department economically it requires more money to carry it on, and that is the usual case when all of these propositions come in to us. I am perfectly willing to reorganize any Department of the Government upon a more economical basis, or upon a more expensive basis if there be reason for it; but I undertake to say that the proposition that was submitted to the gentleman's committee did not propose a reduction in expenses, but proposed an increase in expenses, if you take out the men who are dropped from the Pension Office because they have not sufficient work to employ them. I ask the gentleman if that is not true?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is not true. The Secretary of the Interior, upon my personal request, filed a statement with the committee showing in detail where these economies would be effected, and what they would aggregate, independent of the reduction in the Pension Office.

Mr. MANN. Most of them were in the Pension Office. Now, if they desire to have an assistant chief clerk, as they have in the Treasury Department, I have no objection. They have more bureaus in the Treasury Department than they have in the Interior Department, but if they need an assistant chief clerk in the Interior Department, I have no objection. But I object, when we have several assistant chief clerks under the Government at lower salaries, to fixing this one at $2,500 for a specific individual, and then I object to changing in this the law which provides——

Mr. TAWNEY. Who is the specific individual that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am naming no names.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has more information on this subject regarding the personnel in the Interior Department than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that that is not the first time that has happened. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I am speaking of the personnel of the Interior Department.

Mr. MANN. I am speaking of the personnel also.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have all the acquaintance we desire.

Mr. MANN. It is not the first time. The Committee on Appropriations does great service, and I have the greatest respect for them, but they do not extract all the information that is in the minds of men who appear before them, nor do they obtain all knowledge upon the subjects which come before them. Now, the gentleman has given, and can give, so far as I believe, no reason for changing the law in reference to any division of power given under the law to the chief clerk. I can see no occasion for putting in such a provision as this, that these people shall perform such other duties as the Secretary may direct. He may send them to California upon some duty of his own, he may send them to New York, he may put them in the Indian Service, he can do anything with these two people that he pleases under this provision of law. They are not confined to the duties now provided for a chief clerk, they are not confined to the duties ordinarily conferred on chief clerks, but he may have within his power the discretion to put upon them such duties as he may direct. There is no such provision in the law anywhere in reference to officials which are created, and it is a vicious principle of law, which undoubtedly passed by the Committee on Appropriations without due scrutiny.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. MANN. I will permit the gentleman anything.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman contend on this floor that it is vicious to give to the superior or head of a Department the power to require services that he deems for the interest and benefit of the Department? Does the gentleman characterize authority in the heads of the Departments to control their subordinates as vicious?

Mr. MANN. I characterize as vicious the principle, where you provide that a clerk shall perform certain duties, that you shall give to the Secretary power to say that he shall perform such other duties as the Secretary may direct.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a very common provision in relation to all the public service.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is not my observation nor experience.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am not interested except in a general way in this paragraph, but I should like to ask my friend this question. Supposing this paragraph is stricken out under the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, and the Senate reinserts it, which in all likelihood will happen, because this paragraph has the support and influence of a great Department behind it. Then the bill will come back to the House, and having the support of the Committee on Appropriations. What will happen then? Will these paragraphs against which points of order are being made not finally go into the bill and will the House not, by doing business in this way, deprive itself of the benefit of the influence it might otherwise have in initiating beneficial changes in appropriation bills? We here observe the rule religiously—we say there shall be no legislation on appropriation bills; but when the bill goes to the Senate these same amendments are inserted, in fact we here are being told, if we want a change of this kind, an increase of salary or whatever it may be, to go over to the Senate in order to secure it. Then these bills come back here, and the House usually concurs, and what is the result? The Members of the House deprive themselves of the credit which through changes and modifications of this kind would otherwise accrue to them, and the only men who have any standing with the Departments as influential enough to effect legislation are the Senators of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Well, that would not be the case if the gentleman would stand by the action of the House. It very often happens that the Committee on Appropriations, when it is defeated in this House on a point, through some underground method obtains the insertion of the item in the Senate, or perhaps the heads of Departments do. I do not hold myself responsible to follow either the Committee on Appropriations or the Department. I try to perform the functions of my office. They endeavor to perform the functions of their office.

If in the end they have their way, that is their good luck; if I have my way, that is my good luck. Sometimes I do.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, the purpose of the few remarks I submitted was to call attention to the fact that the House should insist upon its rules, even if the bill comes back from the other House. Then, there would never be any legislation upon an appropriation bill, and the Senators could not derive any special credit at the expense of the House. If possible, at such a late date, I desire to see the parity of the two Houses and their membership reestablished, and I hope the majority will concur in this view.

Mr. MANN. I am very glad the gentleman called attention to that fact. We ought not to need anybody to call our attention to that fact. The Committee on Appropriations ought to stand strong, like a stone wall, against these legislative items being put in by the Senate. I think they do pretty well about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. You are referring to these two positions. I see in the note on the bill, which I hold in my hand, that the two undersecretaries were recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in lieu of a chief clerk at $3,000 and one clerk, now chief of a division, at $2,250. Now, the salaries which were recommended for the two undersecretaries were $3,000 each. The chief clerk is now receiving $3,000 and the chief of the division, who by this provision is made assistant chief clerk, is receiving $2,500, so we are not creating any new places and we are not increasing any salaries.

Mr. MANN. You are increasing salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; we are not increasing salaries.

Mr. MANN. You are not only increasing salaries, but paying a higher salary in this case to the assistant chief clerk than is paid anywhere else by the Government. You do that in this very item.

Mr. TAWNEY. The appointment division is abolished; there is no provision made for it.

Mr. MANN. In this identical bill you have no assistant chief clerks at any such salary as this. I have said I have no objection to providing for the place at the ordinary salary, but——

Mr. TAWNEY. The salary the assistant chief clerk is to receive is the salary now paid to a man filling a position that is dropped, namely, the chief of the appointment division, $2,500, and the salary of the chief clerk remains the same as it is now, $3,000. The important part about this is enlarging the scope of the Secretary's control over the actions of these two men so that he may divide the responsibility of the chief clerk and an Assistant Secretary of the Interior, giving to the one control over the physical property under the control of the Interior Department and to the other control over the personnel and the accounts and supplies. It is involved in the whole reorganization.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to my colleague, Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, that the labor of these two men is divided in this way under his recommendation. One looks after the personnel of the Interior Department and the other after the business transactions which come up in the Department, and the salaries added together are just the same that they now draw. There is no increase of salary.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can offer his amendment as he pleases in regard to it. I make the point of order commencing in line 6 with the word "assistant" down to the word "direct" in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the chair that the language upon which the gentleman from Illinois raised the point of order is clearly legislative. The chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the further point of order upon line 13, beginning "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior"——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry——

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until the gentleman from Illinois has finished making his point of order.

Mr. MANN. On the words in line 13, "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior." The same in line 15, "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to be subject to his direction."

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman make the point of order as to the limitation placed upon their employment? That is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. I understand it is.

Mr. TAWNEY. And to be consistent the gentleman ought to make a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will define his own consistency. I do not make the point of order upon your bill on everything subject to the point of order. If I did you could not recognize a single page of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to mix up in this controversy. I always, with the greatest uniformity, stand by my committee whenever I can. [Laughter.] And I am with the committee now, and I wanted to find out from the Chair, or from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whether he proposes to go through this paragraph with points of order against parts of it, and when he gets through insist upon his point of order against the whole of it?

Mr. MANN. I do not, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEIFER. Then he withdraws his point of order against the paragraph, as I understand it?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph.

Mr. KEIFER. The two things are inconsistent. He must insist upon his point of order against the paragraph or waive it before going to the other.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order in order to let the gentleman explain the paragraph. If it will suit the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] any better, I will withdraw the point of order against the paragraph and make the point of order, and that will end this discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say——

Mr. MANN. I wish to make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to have one-hundredth part of the time for five minutes—just a one-hundredth part of the time for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has insisted that I make a point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; I did not. I insist that you should not.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] will permit, the Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has made a point of order to the language "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior," lines 13 and 14, and also to the language "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to be subject to his direction," in lines 15 and 16.

Mr. MANN. And on page 111, line 8, "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois can have the floor all the time and take anybody off his feet?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and is entitled to make his point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. He did not have it, though, except to answer my question.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor to the gentleman, although he was endeavoring to take me off the floor.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to make a suggestion in connection with one of these points of order. I understand that the language from line 14, page 109, down to line 24 is new legislation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that this is new legislation only in this sense. At the present time in the current law the authority exists for the appointment of twelve inspectors, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior without any limitation whatever. We reduced the number from twelve to eight, leaving the authority for the appointment where it exists to-day under the law. But we do place a limitation upon their employment, while heretofore they could be employed for the purpose of inspecting anybody and anything. And the Secretary of the Interior suggested to the committee that he would be perfectly satisfied to have their employment limited to the inspection of the outside offices of the Interior Department, so that the limitation here is all that is really new. The other is a reduction from twelve to eight inspectors, leaving the authority for their appointment just as it is at the present time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Upon that hypothesis these eight inspectors would seem to be authorized for the purposes expressed in the clause, the limitation for this particular purpose, and it would seem to me that the balance of the clause standing without any objection being made to it, or any point of order being made against it, this being only a portion of it, it will be like an amendment to an amendment, against which a point of order would lie. The only question that could be made upon that would be whether it would be germane. If an amendment should be offered to a bill, and no point of order is made against it, although it might be new legislation, then any amendment that is germane to that would be in order. Now, if this provision is subject to a point of order, this whole clause, it would seem any portion of it would be in order if it is germane to the clause. And I submit that observation to the Chair for his consideration in ruling upon the particular point of order—that the whole clause is subject to a point of order, and the objection to a particular part of the clause on the ground that it is new legislation does not lie. It would stand exactly upon the same basis as an amendment proposed to an amendment that is not in order, but, no point having been made to it, the objection can not be taken advantage of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois as making the point of order to the language "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior," in lines 13 and 14. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois also makes the point of order against the language "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to be subject to his direction and." The Chair sustains that point of order. What was the other point of order?

Mr. MANN. On page 111, line 8, "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair also sustains that point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the Chair to the fact that these inspectors are now, under existing law, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. If this provision be stricken out, then who will appoint and who will direct these inspectors?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not for the Chair to determine. The Chair asked the gentleman in charge of the bill if he desired to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I made the statement a moment ago that these inspectors were appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under existing law, that there were twelve of them serving under those appointments, and we merely reduced the number to eight.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, then, was acting under a misapprehension and will hear the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Allow the Chair to withdraw the ruling on the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois to the language in lines 15 and 16. The Chair will then hear the gentleman upon that point.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision of law in reference to these except the civil-service law. The same provision, exactly in the same language, was stricken out of the Indian appropriation bill last week on a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was a new provision.

Mr. MANN. No, it was not; it had been carried in the appropriation bill for years.

Mr. TAWNEY. These men are now in the employ of the Government.

Mr. MANN. And they will remain.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). Under existing authority in the current legislative appropriation act, and we only reduce the number from twelve to eight; but that does not change in any way the authority under which these men have heretofore been appointed.

Mr. MANN. The matter is very clear, Mr. Chairman. These Indian inspectors who were carried in this bill, I am inclined to think, are also carried in the Indian appropriation bill which we have passed. Under existing law they are appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. That is in the existing appropriation law only, which expires on the 30th of June next. The existing law in reference to the appointment of the officials of the Government is the civil-service law, which authorizes the President to cover all these employees into the classified service and have them appointed by the Civil Service Commission. If they are not covered into the classified service, then the law has provided that they shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provision that they might be covered into the classified service. That is the law. It was in the appropriation law. The fact that it is in the appropriation law for last year does not make it in order upon this bill, because that only applies to that appropriation year. If there is any desire to have these people appointed different from the classified service, all the Secretary has to do, and he has the nerve to make the request if it is proper, is to ask the President to except these employees from the civil-service law, and let the President take the responsibility of putting them out of the classified service instead of shoving that responsibility upon Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, there are twelve of these inspectors now, and we will reduce the number to eight. The fact exists all the same, notwithstanding the gentleman from Illinois, that they were appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under the present law, and it is a law which carries with it their appointment by the Secretary and under his direction. That is all there is in it, and when the gentleman undertakes to say that an act of Congress, though it be an appropriation act, is not a law and can not be binding, he contradicts every proposition upon which these points of order have been made in this House. They go out because they were not in the last appropriation bill. Then it is a change of law, and is the basis of law determining and settling that question. Now he comes and crosses it over and says because they are in the law now and the Secretary has the right and power not only to appoint but to direct them, it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if there is any other authority for the appointment of these special inspectors by the Secretary of the Interior than that contained in an annual appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the Chair I know of no other authority for the appointment of these twelve inspectors except the authority of existing law, which authorizes their appointment and which carries the appropriation to compensate them for their services.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no other law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not admit that the current appropriation is not law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be impossible to get the Committee on Appropriations to understand the distinction which is made in the rulings in regard to what is in the current appropriation act.

The rulings are to the effect that the creation of an office in the current appropriation act authorizes a provision in the bill, covering the same thing; but a legislative provision in the current appropriation act expires at the end of the current fiscal year and does not authorize anything beyond that. While that is a purely arbitrary ruling, originally made probably without any logical reason, the rulings exist as a precedent, and they have been followed, and I hope that the Committee on Appropriations will study these decisions and learn in the course of time what these rulings are.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to understand the illogical rulings which the gentleman from Illinois has just referred to. We have not that mental facility which the gentleman possesses that would enable us to understand illogical parliamentary rulings in this House.

Mr. MANN. I got that illogical facility in following the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair can learn, these inspectors have been appropriated for from year to year, and their appointment provided for in the current appropriation bills, and that is the only legislative authority which it is claimed makes this provision at the present time proper. The Chair understands that the rulings formerly made are to the point that an item or a provision in an appropriation bill only makes law for the current year, and can not be made the basis for future appropriations when the point of order is raised. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, on page 109, line 4, I move to insert the words "first assistant secretary, $4,500; assistant secretary, $4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 109, after line 3, insert "first assistant secretary, $4,500; assistant secretary, $4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of that officer or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; two law clerks, at $2,200 each; three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; two chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; nine chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two law examiners, at $2,000 each; ten principal examiners of land claims and contests, at $2,000 each; two examiners of mineral claims and contests, at $2,000 each; thirty-eight clerks of class 4 (including one transferred from Secretary's office); sixty-four clerks of class 3; sixty-nine clerks of class 2 (including two transferred from Secretary's office); seventy-two clerks of class 1 (including three transferred from Secretary's office); sixty clerks, at $1,000 each (including three transferred from Secretary's office); sixty copyists; two messengers; ten assistant messengers; six skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; sixteen laborers; one laborer, $480; one packer, $720; one depositary acting for the Commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; librarian for the law library of the General Land Office; in all, $572,100.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, on line 5, page 112, on the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." That relates to the Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office. I know of no provision of law authorizing that. So far as I know, he is the only assistant anywhere in the Government appointed by the President. Why should this be?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been the uniform custom and practice for years. The Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office has been appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate. The gentleman from Illinois seems to be having a private conference with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who was formerly the Assistant Commissioner, and I hope he will give the committee the benefit of it.

Mr. MANN. Until the gentleman from Minnesota interfered, I was about to withdraw the point of order, and now since he has interfered, I will withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman whether he withdraws his point of order in consequence of private information which he has received from the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MANN. While I do not wish to divulge any private information I have received, I may say that the only information I have received was from the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and I did not withdraw the point of order on account of any information received from the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 7, on page 114, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to designate an officer or employee of the General Land Office to act temporarily as an Assistant Commissioner of that Office during the absence of the Assistant Commissioner or in case of a vacancy in the office of such Assistant Commissioner, or when such Assistant Commissioner is acting as Commissioner, and all acts performed by any officer or employee while acting under such designation shall have the same force and effect as if performed by said Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner."

Mr. GILLETT. I see no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 114, in line 6, after the word "office," insert "one thousand dollars."

Mr. MACON. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BINGHAM. This does not make any increase. It is to make a correction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following paragraph at the close of the amendment just adopted:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to designate an officer or employee of the General Land Office to perform the departmental duties of recorder of that Office in the absence of that officer, and in case of a vacancy in the office of such recorder the acts of such person so designated shall have all the effect of an act so performed by the recorder."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has reported a bill covering the two amendments which he has just offered. I suppose that he desires them to be permanent law, but in the manner in which they are presented here they will only be law for the fiscal year in which the appropriation is made.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman was of the opinion that this would be a permanent law.

Mr. MANN. Then I venture to put my opinion against the opinion of the gentleman. The ruling is that unless you use the word "hereafter" it only relates to the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made. I see no objection to making it permanent law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I move to amend my amendment by inserting the word "hereafter" after the word "That."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming modifies his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "That" in the first amendment which I offered and which was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment heretofore offered and agreed to by inserting the word "hereafter" after the word "That." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: For the Commissioner of Patents, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner, who shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of Commissioner as may be assigned to him by the Commissioner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,500 each; 3 examiners in chief, at $3,000 each; examiner of interferences, $2,500; examiner of trade-marks and designs, $2,500; 42 principal examiners, at $2,500 each; 58 first assistant examiners, at $2,000 each; 68 second assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; 78 third assistant examiners, at $1,600 each; 100 fourth assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; financial clerk, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, $2,000; 6 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 3 assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; 9 clerks of class 4; 9 clerks of class 3; 15 clerks of class 2; 90 clerks of class 1; skilled laborer, $1,200; 3 skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; 85 clerks, at $1,000 each; messenger and property clerk, $1,000; 106 copyists; 100 copyists, at $720 each; and during the fiscal year 1909 classified laborers in the Patent Office may be appointed copyists at $720, but may not be further promoted unless they shall have passed the civil-service examination; 3 messengers; 25 assistant messengers; 14 laborers, at $600 each; 15 laborers, at $480 each; 39 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $1,131,310.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to page 120, commencing at the word "and," line 15, down to the word "examination," in line 19. This gives apparently an unlimited authority to employ classified laborers as copyists, without any limit to the number or anything else. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. GILLETT. The purpose of the provision is that there are in the Patent Office thirty classified laborers. They are on the roll as laborers, but they are doing the work of copyists.

Mr. MANN. They are there now?

Mr. GILLETT. They are there now.

Mr. MANN. Well, there might be sixty next year.

Mr. GILLETT. We dropped them as laborers and put them in as copyists.

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation on this at all. If this goes through, there will be many Members who will want one of these clerks. When we provided copyists a few years ago in this same Department—twenty-five of them, I think—they divided them up at a Cabinet meeting. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. The intention of the committee was to provide for only those that are now employed. I am quite willing to put in as an amendment the words "now employed."

Mr. MANN. "During the year 1909 classified laborers now employed."

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; that would remedy the gentleman's objection, and that was our purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Now I offer an amendment that, on line 16, page 120, after the word "laborers," the words "now employed" be inserted.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education: For Commissioner of Education, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; statistician, $1,800; specialist in charge of land-grant college statistics, $1,800; translator, $1,800; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; specialist in foreign educational systems, $1,800; specialist in educational system, $1,800; two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; seven clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; six copyists; two copyists, at $800 each; copyist, $720; two skilled laborers, at $840 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; three laborers, at $480 each; laborer, $400; in all, $57,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language "five thousand dollars," in line 19, page 121, it being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order to the words "five thousand dollars," in line 19, page 121, on the ground that it is a change of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 121, after the word "Education," insert: "For Commissioner of Education, $3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: For Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, $5,000; chief clerk $2,000; chief electrical engineer, $2,000; draftsman, $1,000; assistant draftsman, $800; one clerk, $1,400; stenographer and typewriter, $1,200; foreman, $1,500; compensation to disursing clerk, $1,000; one messenger; person in charge of the heating of the Supreme Court and central portion of the Capitol, $864; laborer in charge of water-closets in central portion of the Capitol, $660; seven laborers for cleaning Rotunda, corridors, Dome, and old library portion of Capitol, $660 each; two laborers in charge of public closets of the House of Representatives and in the terrace, at $720 each; in all, $24,720.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "one thousand five hundred dollars," in lines 6 and 7, on page 123, it being an increase of salary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he will reserve his point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is not one of the matters the gentleman has had in mind, with which I largely agree with him. This is the foreman under the Superintendent of the Capitol. He has had his work very largely increased on account of the new Office Building, and while I have nothing to do with the matter of increasing his salary, it is not great at the utmost, and I really think that with the work that is now put upon him it is not possible to keep a man there at a salary of $1,200 a year who does the work that he does. I only say that because on account of the work I have had in connection with the new building I have more or less come in contact with this foreman, and he is an exceedingly bright man.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, it being specifically known that this employee's services have been increased I have no desire to make a point of order against his salary, because if his services have been increased, his compensation no doubt should be. For that reason I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of offices for surveyor-general, pay of messenger, stationery, printing, binding, drafting instruments, typewriters, books of reference for office use, furniture, fuel, lights, and other incidental expenses, $2,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask if the chairman can state about how much the Government is paying now in rentals in the city of Washington?

Mr. BINGHAM. About $400,000 a year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $7,000; in all, $9,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, page 125, after "Arizona," strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BINGHAM. My recollection is that for thirty-two years we have run that appropriation at $2,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think I have the floor. I have not yielded it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, it is true that they have been doing that very thing, and that is the shame of it. The law gives them $3,000, and the committee gives them $2,000. No point of order can lie on that account. Besides, during this time, I will say to the chairman of the committee, there has been other compensation than the mere salary. Now, that has been all cut off, and the amount allowed in this bill is clearly insufficient. But I shall not detain the House on that, for every one of the States having surveyors-general are interested in this, and the gentlemen representing those States must see the necessity of this amendment. I have already occupied more of the time of the committee than is necessary, and I shall be very glad to have this amendment agreed to, because I can see that the amendment to all these surveyors-general ought to go as this goes. Therefore I insist upon the amendment, and yield the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that not only does section 2210, Revised Statutes, provide for the payment of $3,000 per annum for the surveyors-general of most of the States, but the estimates submitted to the committee this year by the Department provides for the payment of $3,000.

Now, $3,000 has never been too large a salary. I do not know why the salaries were gradually reduced during a series of years unless it was because these officers were receiving fees in addition to their salaries, but finally they were all placed upon a plane of $2,000. These offices are exceedingly important. They are certainly as important as the offices of registers and receivers of the land offices, and those officials receive $3,000. These men have charge of all the public-land surveys in their respective States. They are under a bond of at least $30,000 for the faithful execution of those surveys. They have the letting of all contracts for all the public-land surveys. They pass on all the public-land surveys, and their action in that regard is final save in and alone for the final indorsement of the survey by the General Land Office. Now, there is another reason why these salaries should be increased at this time, and I call attention to the fact that in the note on page 106 of the Book of Estimates attention is called to the fact that the surveyors-general have heretofore been allowed to collect certain fees for copies of records in their office. The Commissioner of the General Land Office considered this matter and concluded that it was not in the interest of the public service to have those fees remain in the hands of the surveyors-general, so by a recent order those fees now flow into the Treasury. Just how much surveyors-general obtain in the way of fees it is impossible for us to determine at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question on that point?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the law provide whether the surveyors-general shall be allowed to retain those fees?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I assume that there is no mandatory provision of law on the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. The point I want to get at is, I do not see how the Commissioner of the General Land Office can determine that. Either those fees belong to the surveyors-general legally or they do not. If they do not, and they have been taking them wrongfully in the past——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman lives in a public-land State, and I presume he is acquainted with the practice that formerly prevailed in the offices of registers and receivers, under which clerks in the office, after hours, made plats for those desiring them, retaining the funds so received. I assume the Department has the authority which it exercised whereby all fees received by offices of surveyors-general now flow into the Treasury. Now, as I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, I am not able to say to what extent surveyors-general have profited by this long-established custom. I inquired of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in regard to that, and he said he had no information on the subject, but that it was undoubtedly a considerable sum in many instances, and he called attention to the fact that the salaries now received by those men, in view of the importance of the duties they perform and the character of the men required for those positions are altogether too small.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MARSHALL. This paragraph of the bill provides for clerks in the office to be paid $7,000. Does the gentleman know how these clerkships are farmed out, or who fixes the salary, or by what law or discretion they are made so?

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, I will not be positive about that, the salaries of these clerks are fixed by regulation.

Mr. MARSHALL. If the gentleman will permit, these employees of the Surveyor-General's office are all under civil-service regulations. The chief clerk receives about $1,600 and the rest are graduated from that down.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman inquired how the compensation was fixed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why are they not provided for specifically instead of giving them a lump sum?

Mr. MONDELL. That has been the practice for years.

Mr. MANN. It is fixed by the Secretary and the Land Commissioner——

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MONDELL. I would be pleased to.

Mr. MACON. You say existing law provides that these surveyors-general shall be paid $3,000?

Mr. MONDELL. It does as to most of them.

Mr. MACON. Well, these particular surveyors-general?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MACON. That being the case I do not see how an objection could be proper. I think it would be an act of injustice to not appropriate the full amount of a man's salary employed by the Government when the law directs that he shall receive that amount.

Mr. MONDELL. We feel that it is, particularly in view of the fact that a considerable revenue heretofore enjoyed by the surveyors-general has now been cut off.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman say that the law provides for this particular surveyor-general?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. BONYNGE. In section 2210 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. MANN. What duties do these surveyors-general perform?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret I have not the law before me, for the law very clearly outlines them.

Mr. MANN. I would much rather have the gentleman's opinion in general language than the law.

Mr. MONDELL. The surveyors-general have charge of the execution of all of the public-land surveys within their respective States. They let all the contracts for public-land surveys. The lump-sum appropriation for public-land surveys in the public land States is apportioned by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under the law to the various States in accordance with their needs and the demands of the service, and within that lump-sum appropriation the surveyor-general is authorized to enter into contracts, after advertisement, with deputy surveyors to survey the public land. There is a corps of clerks in the surveyor-general's office who makes the original plats, who transcribe the original notes, and who make the original records of all these surveys which are finally filed in the General Land Office and become the foundation of the record of the survey of the public lands. The surveyor-general supervises all of this work.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the Department here orders some portion of land in Arizona surveyed?

Mr. MONDELL. The Department here does not do that.

Mr. MANN. The Department here can do it. Congress frequently does it.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if the Department would have authority to do it, but the Department, at any rate, never does it.

Mr. MANN. Who determines, then, whether a piece of land shall be surveyed?

Mr. MONDELL. The surveyor-general determines what land shall be surveyed, and when——

Mr. MANN. We pass an act of Congress requiring a piece of land to be surveyed——

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, we pass acts of Congress authorizing the resurvey of lands. We never pass an act of Congress providing for the survey of a piece of land unless it be an Indian reservation.

Mr. MANN. I was going to say we have passed a good many acts since I have been here, opening up Indian reservations, that provided that they should be surveyed.

Mr. MONDELL. I excepted the Indian reservations. They are not public lands.

Mr. MANN. Does the surveyor-general act in reference to this on his own motion?

Mr. MONDELL. As to Indian reservations, I will say to the gentleman, they are surveyed in accordance with specific provisions of law, and the appropriation for those surveys is ordinarily made in the bill providing for the opening of the reservation, and that appropriation can only be used for the survey of that particular tract.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to get at was——

Mr. MONDELL. And the surveyor-general must proceed to the survey of those lands. But what I intended to refer to was the public lands generally.

Mr. MANN. I suppose there is a large amount of unsurveyed land in Arizona yet. Who has the responsibility of determining whether any of this land shall be surveyed or not?

Mr. MONDELL. The surveyor-general.

Mr. MANN. Of Arizona?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And he receives an apportionment of the total appropriation for that Territory?

Mr. MONDELL. He does.

Mr. MANN. He spends that as he pleases?

Mr. MONDELL. He does.

Mr. MANN. And makes the contracts with whom he pleases?

Mr. MONDELL. He does, after advertisement—not with whom he pleases, but with the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. MANN. Unfortunately not the lowest responsible bidder in many cases under the provisions of the law. He is the one who is responsible for the whole surveying business in the Territory?

Mr. MONDELL. He is.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that is not true as a general proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. It is, absolutely.

Mr. KEIFER. It is, within the amount of the appropriation that is assigned to him, but, to take it broadly, that answer is not accurate.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course he can not make contracts for a sum in excess of that in his hands.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will ask the gentleman if the surveyor-general can not let contracts in excess of the amount in his hand?

Mr. MANN. This is the total amount appropriated, and this is apportioned.

Mr. KEIFER. He enters into contracts to the extent of the surveys he shall make.

Mr. MANN. And the extent of money that he can use.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; that is the measure of it.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add to the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming as to the duties and responsibilities of the surveyor-general. In addition to those recited by him he is custodian of all the records of all the surveys that have ever been made in the State. He is therefore placed under a very heavy and expensive bond for their safe-keeping.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word as to the extent of the duties of the surveyor-general. And that is that he is charged with all mineral surveys in the mining States, and it is under his direction that surveys are made upon which all mining patents are issued, and upon which he incurs a great deal of responsibility in passing on their being in proper form and shape.

I will also add that in all the surveys that are made in the surveying of the public lands it is the duty of the surveyor-general to pass upon the character of the lands, as to whether they are mineral lands or whether they come in other various classes; and at times he exercises practically a judicial authority in passing upon these matters. It requires a man of a good deal of knowledge on the subject, and he must be competent to fill that position. I indorse this amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman from California has referred to the fact that mineral surveys are also under control of the surveyor-general. There are a great many surveys executed on deposits made by mineral claimants and not chargeable to the public funds. In every mining State these surveys are executed, and they are very complicated. It is a very important interest.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona if he knows the man who is now surveyor-general of Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know that I do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman if the present surveyor-general of Arizona is a duly admitted surveyor or engineer?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, you have me there. As to the surveyor, I suppose I have met him; I knew the former surveyor-general, but I do not know the present surveyor-general so as to know whether he is qualified. I think that he is a qualified man, but I am not able to speak of that thoroughly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is he a professional engineer and qualified to make these surveys?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If he is not, he ought to be.

Mr. MONDELL. Most of them are.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are these surveyors qualified as surveyors and engineers?

Mr. MONDELL. Many of them are. The surveyor-general in the State of Wyoming is one of the best in the West.

Mr. DRISCOLL. My information is that the surveyors-general in many of these States are only ordinary men, without qualifications, who have gone out there and by politics have got a job of $2,000 a year, and they are not qualified to do the work they are required to perform, and that they have been becoming less and less competent for many years.

Mr. MONDELL. I know the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement. The fact is, that while some of the States may not recently have expended as large a sum as formerly for the survey of lands, the average amount that is expended for surveys is now larger than formerly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Who makes the surveys?

Mr. MONDELL. They are made by deputy United States surveyors, and under contracts made with the surveyor-general.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They are real surveyors?

Mr. MANN. They ought to be, but often it is guesswork, and very poor guesswork at that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Wyoming stated a moment ago, if I understood him, that the surveyor-general of Wyoming was the best land surveyor in that State?

Mr. MONDELL. One of the best.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does he not do a great deal of work outside his duties as surveyor-general as surveyor for other people?

Mr. MONDELL. He does none at all; and if I understand the law correctly, the surveyor-general is prohibited from doing so. I never heard of a surveyor-general doing any outside work.

Mr. MARSHALL. I will say that there is not a line in the law that makes it necessary that the surveyor-general should be a surveyor, and it is not necessary that he should be, in order to perform his duties properly. I think I have a right to speak on this subject, because I have been familiar with the workings of the surveyor-general's offices in North and South Dakota for thirty-five years, having worked in person for many years under one or the other; and I would say that the responsibilities of the surveyor extend far beyond that of merely running a line. I want to say that there is absolutely no justification for the statement that these surveys are worse than guesswork. Years ago there were more or less frauds in the Government surveys, but the service has improved from year to year, and the fact is to-day that not one single mile of Government survey is accepted, much less paid for, until it has undergone the rigid inspection of a representative of the General Land Office, and the service never was in such good condition as it is to-day.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman read the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the last year?

Mr. MARSHALL. I have not.

Mr. MANN. I thought not.

Mr. MARSHALL. But I know this much, that there has not been a mile of survey accepted that has not been accepted in accordance with my statement. The report may apply to surveys that were made years ago, but I doubt very much if there is any criticism of recent surveys.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is not a proposition alone to increase the salary of the surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, but to increase the salaries of fourteen surveyors-general of the United States. There are fourteen in all. Their present salary was fixed thirty-two years ago, and I am satisfied that the responsibilities of their office are no more now than they were thirty-two years ago, when their compensation was fixed at $2,000 a year. And inasmuch as this committee has not approved of a single increase in salary from the beginning of the bill down to the present time, I trust that the committee will continue to carry out its policy of adhering to existing salaries and existing compensation for the service employees of the Government are required to do. If we are going to commence here at this end of the bill to increase the salaries of all these surveyors-general, as is now proposed, we ought to return to the beginning of the bill and make increases in compensation where stronger arguments can be made in favor of increases than have been made in favor of this proposed increase.

This office is purely administrative. It does not require any technical skill, knowledge, or education to be a surveyor-general. I have in mind a surveyor-general whom I know personally, whose appointment was made, as I feel almost certain most of them have been made, because of political influence. This surveyor-general knows no more about surveying than I do, and for six years he has used his office as a private office. He has discharged absolutely no duties with respect to the service, except the mere supervisory duties that are performed. I submit that it is not in keeping with the policy of the Committee of the Whole, in respect to the question of salaries, for us to begin here at this end of the bill to increase the salaries of the surveyors-general throughout the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not a fact that this is simply a proposition to appropriate the salary provided by law, and not a proposition to increase the salary?

Mr. TAWNEY. That proposition doubtless was made upon this floor at a time when the Government was far better able to pay the salary fixed by law than it is now or than it will be during the next fiscal year. The salary fixed by law has not been followed by Congress for thirty-two years, and I submit that it is rather a poor time to commence increasing the salaries of these surveyors-general, especially in view of the fact that in every succeeding Congress the Land Office proposes to abolish a number of them because they have become of absolutely no consequence and the work of the office is being completed.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman for my own information, and I think for the information of the House, whether there is any doubt about the statement heretofore made in this discussion that the surveyor-general is prohibited by law from performing any other work except official work of his office?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether he is prohibited or not. The surveyor-general to whom I referred a moment ago has conducted his business all the time he served as surveyor-general. I do know he is not a surveyor.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TAWNEY. I now yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. HOWELL. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that the honorable Commissioner of the Land Office has certified to the fact that by giving the salary to the surveyors of the General Land Office that heretofore prevailed, it is in effect a reduction, for he has issued an order prohibiting them from taking the perquisites which they have heretofore enjoyed?

Mr. TAWNEY. The principal reason for the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to this increase is put on a comparative basis between the salaries paid to the surveyor-general and the salaries paid to the registers and receivers of the General Land Office, and also a comparison of the inspectors and special agents. It is not put upon the ground that because the Executive order or administrative order perquisites heretofore enjoyed by these surveyors-general have been taken away. It is true the Commissioner of the General Land Office refers to that fact, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office, through the Secretary of the Interior, has made a great many recommendations for increases of salary in his Department, none of which has the Committee on Appropriations approved or recommended. If we had done so, none of them would have met with the approval of the Committee of the Whole. As I said from the beginning of this bill down to the present time, not a single increase of salary has been allowed. Even when the proposed increase was to bring the salary up to the maximum fixed by law the increase has not been allowed to pass the scrutiny of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and other gentlemen who have carefully guarded against any increases of salary. I will now yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BONYNGE. I want the floor in my own right after the gentleman is through.

Mr. JONES of Washington rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not a fact that every other salary has been paid to these men where it is fixed by law except to the serveyors-general?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; there are a number of salaries in this bill that are less than the maximum fixed by law, and in determining the question whether or not we would follow the recommendations of the heads of Departments who recommended increases of salary, we were not governed by the amount allowed by law. We were governed primarily by the amount which these employees have heretofore received, and by the fact that under existing conditions of our public revenue we are not justified in making the increases of salary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What particular official in this bill is there where the salary is fixed by law that is not receiving the amount the law fixes?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not recall now definitely, but nearly all the officers in the Territory have greater salaries fixed by law than are carried in the bill, and greater than Congress has heretofore allowed. I want to remind Members that these salaries were fixed thirty-two years ago, and Congress has never seen fit to increase them prior to this time, and that this is no time to begin an increase of salaries.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman says these salaries were fixed thirty-two years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. They were reduced to $2,000 thirty-two years ago.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How were they reduced?

Mr. TAWNEY. From the amount authorized by law.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You mean that when Mr. Randall went through and cut down appropriations without any reference to the service. You have got them all back except those referring to the Territories.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Arizona for giving to the Committee on Appropriations the indorsement of that distinguished man who served as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. If the Committee on Appropriations reduced these salaries to $2,000 thirty-two years ago because of the then existing conditions of the public revenue and Congress since that time has not seen fit to increase them to the maximum fixed by law, I say that this would be a very poor time to depart from the precedent established by Mr. Randall and all succeeding Congresses for thirty-two years.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I would like him to state to the House whether there has been any complaint to the committee that if these salaries were not increased above $2,000 there would be any vacancies in the office?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, this is not a proposition, and I want to impress it upon the committee, for any increase in the salary of any officer. The statute expressly provides in the case of nine surveyors-general, and not fourteen as the gentleman has stated, that the salary shall be $3,000 per year. The section is 2210 of the Revised Statutes, and it reads:

> The surveyors-general of Colorado, New Mexico, California, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, and Arizona shall each receive their salary at the rate of $3,000 a year.

I do not believe that the gentleman is correct, either, in his statement that the salary has been fixed at $2,000 for the past thirty-two years. In a letter directed to Mr. MONDELL by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated January 22 of this year, the Commissioner states:

> The foregoing salaries relating to those now provided for by the statute were gradually reduced in the appropriation acts—

Not by one reduction from $3,000 to $2,000, but—

> Were gradually reduced in the appropriation acts until the passage of the act of March 2, 1895, since which date no salary at over $2,000 per annum has been provided for these offices, and several of them have been allowed but $1,800.

So that instead of being for thirty-two years, the Commissioner of the General Land Office gives the authority and refers to the statute, 28 Statutes at Large, 799, when the salary was fixed at $2,000. But, Mr. Chairman, we are not asking for any increase, either in the amount fixed by statute or compensation heretofore paid to these officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman not asking for an increase of the amount appropriated from $2,000 to $3,000?

Mr. BONYNGE. But not that fixed by statute.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is not proposing now to increase the maximum allowed by law, but he does propose to increase the amount they are receiving for their services from $2,000 to $3,000.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; as I now propose to show the gentleman, and to give the reason why we are not proposing to increase their compensation. The amount appropriated by the bill that is reported to the House in effect is a reduction in the salary of these officers, and not an increase. It has already been stated in this debate that these officers have been receiving heretofore certain fees for the preparation of maps and plats. In my State the surveyor-general wrote me and stated that the annual amount that he received for such certified copies and maps amounted to from $750 to $1,000, so that heretofore he has been receiving compensation at the rate of $3,000 or thereabouts per annum, $2,000 appropriated by the Appropriation Committee and the other $750 or $1,000 that he received from these certified copies. Now, because of the order made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office only a short time ago—and it is because of that order that the Commissioner chiefly based his recommendation for the increase—these officers have been deprived of that other source of revenue. So that if we now appropriate only the sum of $2,000 per annum we are at this time in effect reducing the compensation that these officers have received for their services, and not in any way increasing—not only not increasing, but not giving them the same compensation that they have heretofore received.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has any one of these officers in all these long years attempted to get his lawful salary?

Mr. BONYNGE. I can not answer that. I am glad the gentleman asked the question, for I have no doubt that when the Appropriation Committee brought in in the first instance the allowance of $2,000 they used, undoubtedly, the argument against these officers for not appropriating the entire amount that they were receiving this additional compensation by way of fees that they received for the copies of plats and maps, and I have no question in my own mind that originally that was the reason the Appropriation Committee did not appropriate the entire amount allowed by statute for their compensation. Now that you have taken from them this additional compensation, we are simply asking you to give them the same salary that they received heretofore.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that it is usual when the Appropriation Committee appropriates a sum of money less than the salary allowed by law it is conditioned upon their accepting that in lieu of the salary allowed by law.

Mr. BONYNGE. Very well; but they were at that time, when you did not appropriate the entire amount allowed by statute, receiving these additional fees and allowances with the full knowledge and consent of their superior officers.

Having cut them off from that emolument we are now asking you to simply do them justice and give them the salary the statute authorizes. This is no time, I submit to the gentleman from Minnesota, to commence reducing salaries of these officers who have not had an increase. Some gentleman asked some time ago if there was any danger of there being a vacancy in these offices if the salary should not be increased to the $3,000. I have not any idea, Mr. Chairman, that if we do not appropriate the full $7,500 compensation for the Members of the House that there would be any trouble in filling the office of Representative in the district from which the gentleman hails who asked that question——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. At $2,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Your proposition is to increase these salaries to $3,000 a year on the basis we have taken from these men certain emoluments. Have you any evidence to show that these emoluments even approximate $1,000 in any other district or State except your own?

Mr. BONYNGE. I can not answer for any district or State except my own.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think it would be good business sense for this committee to proceed upon the theory that because these emoluments given in your State amounted to $700 a year it would amount to the same in other States where possibly they were simply nominal if there were any receipts at all?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not believe they were merely nominal——

Mr. TAWNEY. I know some are.

Mr. BONYNGE. And my authority for saying they were not merely nominal is the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the same letter to which I have heretofore referred. In that letter the Commissioner says:

> Surveyors-general were authorized by a circular of October 13, 1886, to charge fees at the rates allowed registers and receivers for exemplified copies of plats or other records, which authority was revoked by circular letter "A" of April 15, 1907. The income derived from this source was considerable; just how much was realized can not be stated, as the moneys thus earned were not reported to this Office.

I have given what they were in my particular State on the authority of the surveyor-general of Colorado, and I can not answer as to any other State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say further, in line with the question asked by the chairman of the committee, that at no later day than day before yesterday, in a conversation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office he made the statement similar to that embodied in the letter quoted by the gentleman from Wyoming. The surveyor-general throughout the West, in addition to the compensation that has been paid to them as a salary, have been receiving fees because of extra work they have done. In reply to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that these men who are appointed to the positions of surveyor-general are not men of sufficient consequence to really fill a position that would entitle them to $3,000 a year—I do not know to what surveyor-general the chairman referred——

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from Idaho the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made no such statement the gentleman has just uttered.

Mr. FRENCH. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made a statement to the effect that a certain surveyor-general was using his office for a loafing office and from that point was exercising a sort of general supervisory direction of the force of his office. In line with that I want to say every surveyor-general in the State of Idaho so long as I have been familiar with the office, has been one of the very best surveyors there is to be found within the State of Idaho. Another statement he made, or inference that can be drawn from a statement he made, is, that the work of surveyor-general's offices has in some way pinched out, and because of that fact the surveyor-general should receive less compensation. I want to say that if there is merit for that statement from conditions in some States, it does not bear out in the State of Idaho. In the State of Idaho not less than 80 per cent of all the lands in that State are to-day unsurveyed lands. In the State of Idaho 28,000,000 acres of land are unsurveyed, that are to-day not either included within the forest reserves, or that are not included in land heretofore surveyed and owned by private individuals. In that State, according to the estimates of the surveying division of the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $1,000,000 will be required to ultimately survey the land that will need to be surveyed within the State of Idaho.

The surveyor-general's office in that State has a force of something like from ten to fifteen or sixteen men and women working constantly. That body is under the direction of the surveyor-general as in every other State where there is a surveyor-general. A man who has the direction of the work of such a body of men and women, a man who has direction of the work that has to do with the survey of the land in States that are new, like the States of Idaho, Colorado, and Wyoming, that have been mentioned, is worthy to receive the compensation that was provided in the law when the office was established within those States. In Idaho it was provided that $3,000 should be the compensation. You have now in this bill proposed to cut that amount of salary to $2,000 per year. I have no doubt, as has been suggested, but that the office could be filled at that, or even at a less salary, but I have a serious doubt, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that the office of surveyor-general in Idaho or in other States can be filled by a man who is willing and capable of assuming the responsibilities of the office and directing it as it should be directed, if the office shall be cut to a salary of $2,000 a year without any prospect of the extra thousand dollars being received by him either in form of fees or by direct appropriation at the hands of some future Congress.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How many years has the surveyor-general of the State of Idaho been receiving only $2,000 a year?

Mr. FRENCH. He should have been receiving $3,000 a year. He has been receiving fees in addition to $2,000 a year up until, I think, April, 1907.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is the gentleman or anyone else able to state what amount of fees he received?

Mr. FRENCH. Why, no; I do not know the amount of fees that he has been receiving.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There has been a lot of talk about fees, but nobody seems to be able to give any facts or information.

Mr. BONYNGE. I gave you the facts from Colorado. They amount to from $750 to $1,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Where did the gentleman get the facts?

Mr. BONYNGE. In a letter from the surveyor-general to me.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What are those fees for?

Mr. BONYNGE. For exemplified copies of plats and maps.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did he get the fees?

Mr. BONYNGE. He got the fees himself.

Mr. FRENCH. And the reason why the policy of permitting the surveyor-general to receive fees has been discontinued is because the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Interior Department believed the policy was an iniquitous one; that it was a policy that might lead to certain practices that might be questionable, and because they believed that these offices that had a definite line of work to perform had better be paid a definite salary than to be paid in part a definite salary and for the remainder of the salary be permitted to receive fees that might be much or might be little, and might lead to questionable practices in their office.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOUTELL in the chair). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me that we have debated this question as long as the House cares to do so. I would like five minutes, perhaps longer. I would suggest——

Mr. SMITH of California. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make a little inquiry. I would like to know what has become of the fees that have been taken away. Do they now go into the General Treasury of the country?

Mr. BONYNGE. They do.

Mr. SMITH of California. They are enriching the Treasury of the country to the extent of these fees which have heretofore gone to the surveyors-general, and deprives them of that much. It seems to me it is quite clear, if the Treasury is to receive the benefit of those fees——

Mr. TAWNEY. It is also proposed to increase the expenditures from the Treasury a specific amount on the basis of an indefinite and uncertain amount of fees that are going into the Treasury. Nobody, except the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], can give the House any information at all as to what these fees amount to, and therefore we are not justified in increasing or creating a specific or direct obligation on the Treasury on the basis of an uncertain quantity, the amount of which nobody can state.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] rises to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Under the rule is debate not exhausted on this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending, and the entire debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not know that a point of order was pending, Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the statement of the Chair.

Mr. MACON. I reserved the point of order until I found the existing law provided for the payment of $3,000 to these surveyors-general, and then, of course, it did not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment close in ten minutes, five minutes to be occupied now by somebody in favor of the amendment and five minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] moves that debate on this amendment close in ten minutes, five minutes to be controlled by those in favor of the amendment and five minutes by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I am willing to have debate close in ten minutes; but I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that all debate close in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of California. Now, just another word of debate on this matter. It seems hardly fair for the chairman of the committee, who is presumed to bring to the House full information with reference to the legislation that is proposed, to accuse us of dereliction in not bringing him information as to how much these fees amounted to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not accuse you.

Mr. SMITH of California. Then "josh" us.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior did not even make an oral request of the committee when they were before the committee for this increase, and if it was so urgent and so necessary it would seem that they, being at the head of the Department, would have made the request in this case.

Mr. SMITH of California. It is more a question of fairness than of urgency and necessity from the standpoint of the Commissioner. I do not imagine the offices are going to be vacated if this amount is not allowed; but it is a matter of fairness, and when these gentlemen have been deprived of the fees which are now going into the Treasury it is only fair that they should be compensated by way of the salary allowed by law out of that much of the fees which are now going into the General Treasury of the country.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I wish the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota. He makes the statement that nothing was said by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in favor of this increase of salary for surveyors.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I said there was no oral statement made by an officer, the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior, in favor of this increase when they appeared before the committee urging increase of salaries, promotions, and increases of offices in other branches of the service. They submitted a statement with the annual estimates, giving the reasons for it.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the statement made by the Commissioner when he was interrogated upon the subject. Mr. Ballinger says:

> I would say in connection with this matter that through the Secretary an order was promulgated cutting off surveyors-general from any right to receive compensation for plats, maps, and other papers made outside of office hours, which amounted to quite a little compensation to them and which they had been getting for a good many years. In view of that being cut off—and we believed it was good administration, so that the Government would get the compensation from the work done by the force and not part of it go into the pockets of the surveyor-general and his clerks—we believe it is now proper to return the salary to the amount fixed by statute, $3,000.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, as there seems to be some little doubt as to whether there are any fees in connection with this office, I dropped in at the Land Office a few days ago at the request of one of the engineers of my district who wanted some copies of certain papers. I left a deposit of $3.60 with the Commissioner to pay for these papers. I had to apply to him for these copies on account of the records in San Francisco having been destroyed. That is a sample of the fees that have been going to the office of the surveyor-general. I am well aware that the fees the surveyor-general of the State of California received in former times amounted to large figures. My first business relations with that office were about thirty years ago, and at that time the fees were supposed to be worth $5,000 a year, and the fees, certainly, at this time should be greatly in excess of a thousand dollars a year. So that there is no excuse in the world why the actual salary provided in this statute should not be paid to these officers.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, one feature about this question is impressive to me, and that is that when in the committee we took this subject up not a word was said to the committee as to any raise in these salaries.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman refer to the fact that no Member of the House appeared before the committee?

Mr. GILLETT. No Member of the House or Department officer suggested it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Utah has just read a statement which Mr. Ballenger made before the committee.

Mr. BONYNGE. Before the committee in the hearings.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not hear him.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that was my understanding. I did not have that understanding from any member of the subcommittee, but my understanding was that there was not going to be any question but the committee would follow this recommendation of the Commissioner and the Secretary, based as it was upon the equities of the case and upon justice.

Mr. GILLETT. It is rather singular, if the gentleman had that understanding and others had that understanding, that no Member of the House suggested to the committee that that understanding should be carried out.

Mr. MONDELL. We thought, of course, the committee were going to do their duty.

Mr. GILLETT. The committee were trying to do their duty. There seems to be gentlemen who are asking this increase present to-day who yesterday were not present when in another place in the bill there was an attempt to raise the salary up to the statutory amount. This similar motion was made when these gentlemen were not present.

This is not the only place in the bill where the statutory salary is not appropriated for.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. More's the pity for the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. We are following here the precedent which we have followed every year. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] says that when this was cut down it was probably cut down because then the surveyor-general was allowed the fees; but the statute he cited disproves his logic, because it seems that away back from 1866 they were allowed the fees. I suppose the reason it was cut down was because these men are getting as much salary now as other men are getting in those States for similar services. I believe that is so, and I think that is the reason the salary has been cut down.

This bill gives the same salaries which have been appropriated in recent years. And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if they should carry this it would not apply to all these surveyors, because while nine whom the gentleman mentioned have by statute an authorized salary of $3,000, some of the salaries fixed by statute since then have been fixed at $2,000 only. Increase in those salaries are subject to a point of order, and that shows what was the intention of Congress. The intention of Congress was to give these men but $2,000, of recent years, and then, when they passed laws creating new surveyorships, they fixed their salaries, not at $3,000, but at $2,000, the same sum which the others had been receiving.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is just reversing that.

Mr. GILLETT. Obviously this is the course which Congress has deliberately marked out, and it seems to me now, when we have a bill in which we have sedulously avoided raising other salaries, it is the last time that the gentleman should come in and ask to raise salaries in this case. I wish to read just a word from the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of these surveyors. He says:

> The general question of the system of surveys under the surveyors-general demands the most careful attention. The present system is not satisfactory. It is both expensive and subject to very great delays. I believe that a very great saving, both in efficiency and expedition, would be made if the Secretary were given authority to have the surveys made under the direct control of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

So they are not doing their work satisfactorily, and we are giving them the same appropriation that they have had for the last forty years.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty-two years.

Mr. BONYNGE. Since 1895.

Mr. GILLETT. I think it is thirty years, but it is better for my argument if it is only since 1895, because since that time the country has been in a much better position to pay $3,000 than it is to-day.

This bill has been formulated on the theory that we would not raise salaries above what they have been in recent years, and I hope the committee, after refusing to raise other salaries, will refuse to raise the salaries of these officials who live in the States of the Members urging the increases.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, the merits of the proposed amendment have been fully and ably presented by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] and others who have participated in the discussion. I wish to add a word in support of this amendment, which I consider most reasonable and just. The law especially fixes the salary of these officers at $3,000 per annum, but for a number of years past the law has been ignored by the Appropriations Committee and an arbitrary compensation of $2,000 per annum given for this service. In addition to this compensation the surveyors of the several districts have been allowed the fees arising from furnishing copies of maps, plats, and other official records of their offices, which have constituted perquisites of the office. The Commissioner of the Land Office by a recent order has deprived these officers of all such perquisites and requires that they account for and pay over all fees into the public Treasury.

This matter was presented to the committee by the Land Commissioner, and he strongly recommended that in view of his action in this respect that the salary provided by law—$3,000—be appropriated for these officers.

The Commissioner has also directed attention to the importance of the service rendered by and the responsibility of these officers, and pointedly states that they are really deserving and entitled to a greater compensation than registers or receivers.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the duties incumbent upon the surveyor-general require a high order of ability and integrity. He represents the Government in awarding contracts for all surveys of the public lands within his district. These contracts often involve many thousands of dollars. He also has jurisdiction over the surveys of mining claims, involving interests of the greatest value. He is required to furnish a large bond, and all the surrounding conditions of this office, particularly in the mining States, demand an officer of high character and ability. Now, the committee, while disclaiming any intention to reduce these salaries, have utterly ignored the fact that by the cutting off of the fees heretofore allowed as perquisites of the office by order of the Commissioner, that in effect these officers are being subjected to reduction of salary.

The committee has brought in increases of salary for certain high officers in the Deparments above that provided by law, and justify their action by asserting that these salaries were fixed by law a long time ago, and that, conditions having changed, these departmental officers are justly entitled to a more liberal compensation. This argument, I confess, seemed plausible and convincing to me, and I was considerably surprised in the course of this debate to hear members of the committee urge as a reason for opposing this amendment the fact that the salary provided in this bill had been the same for a great number of years, despite the fact that it has been clearly shown to the committee that the action of the Department has deprived them of remuneration in the shape of fees that has heretofore been allowed.

In the light of the facts shown, the position of the committee is utterly inconsistent and untenable. I believe the committee can not fail to have been convinced in the course of this discussion of the reasonableness and justice of this amendment, and I hope no pride of opinion will operate against their approval of the fair and just pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, to strike out in line 19, page 175, the word "two" and insert the word "three."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Let us have a division.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let the amendment be reported again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 19, strike out "two" and insert "three,"

So that it will read:

For surveyors-general in the Territory of Arizona, $3,000.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 33, noes 30.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chairman appointed Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. BONYNGE.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 49.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, line 20, after the word "thousand," where it first occurs, insert the words "five hundred."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the salaries of the surveyors-general of eleven States are the only salaries reduced by this bill, and that at a time when the salaries paid for a number of years have been a thousand dollars less than the salaries provided by law, this committee proceeds, as regards eleven Western States not represented on that committee, to reduce the salaries of surveyors-general, the only reduction carried in the bill. And while the salaries of officials of the Departments here in the District of Columbia are increased all along the line, the salaries of these western officials, charged with important duties out in the mountain States, unfortunately not represented on the Committee on Appropriations, are reduced. That reduction is called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations—their attention is called to the fact that these salaries have been below the amount provided by law, and their attention has been further called to the fact that by reason of the cutting off of certain fees, the continuation of the salary heretofore provided amounts to a reduction of salary. I was unable to answer the question that was asked me, how much that reduction would amount to in my own State, but I have no doubt the surveyor-general of Wyoming has been receiving a considerable amount. Years ago, at the time these appropriations were reduced below the amount provided by law, the fees, in many instances, were very large, because at that time we had not provided for photolithographic township maps. Some years ago we began to provide for photolithographic maps of townships, and there has been nothing like the demand on surveyors-general for plats executed in their offices since. The salaries were probably reduced because they were receiving fees in addition to their salaries. Now the fees have been cut off and there can be no question but that the fees in every instance amounted to more than $500 a year. So my proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman, is simply to retain these salaries at somewhere near the compensation paid to surveyors-general in the past. Surely, this committee does not want to single out these officers in these Western States and reduce them at a time when we are generally increasing the salaries of public officials?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I will just take a moment, because this is a repetition of the debate that has gone before. I suppose the gentleman is repeating it now because there are a few gentlemen in the House who were not in then. I wish to say that the gentleman from Wyoming is mistaken when he says these are the only cases in the bill that have not been appropriated for up to the amount provided by law. If the gentleman had been in the House yesterday and heard the debate on another case, he would not have made that statement.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming did not say that this was the only case where the appropriation was not the amount provided for by law. Although I call the attention of the committee to the fact that——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I claim my time; I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. MONDELL. May I correct the gentleman's statement?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; if the gentleman will do that; but I do not think it is courteous, after I yielded to him, to go making a speech.

Mr. MONDELL. What I said was that this was the only reduction in salary provided for in this bill.

Mr. GILLETT. That is exactly what I thought the gentleman said, and it is unfortunately a mistake. There are other places in the bill where the amount appropriated is not the full amount, and that is the only way in which this is a reduction. We are giving them exactly the same that we have given them year after year since 1895. This is not a bill where we are raising salaries; the bill goes on exactly the other theory—that this is not a time to raise salaries, and that we must stand on the present basis. There are no salaries being raised in this bill, and therefore, instead of this being a discrimination against the surveyors-general, if it were possible, it would be a discrimination against the gentlemen who have come in here this afternoon and tried to pass the amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not a discrimination when you retain the salaries of these officers at the rate carried in previous bills in face of the fact that your attention has been called to the fact that certain fees which they heretofore received are now turned into the Treasury—that these fees amounted to a considerable sum?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we can not tell how much they amounted to, except in one State, but I can not see how they had any right to take these fees.

Mr. BONYNGE. Under the order of the Commissioner.

Mr. GILLETT. The Commissioner can not make a law; he can not give them fees or take away fees. If they are taking fees against the law, the Commissioner can stop it. If the law gives them fees, the Commissioner can not stop it. We are the only ones who can give or take away fees. Therefore, we are giving them exactly what we have appropriated year after year, and this is not the time, I think, when the House wants to abandon the practice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the committee a while ago to the fact that very often the proposition for economy was to be effected at considerable increase over the amount paid. This is one of the illustrations. The gentleman says that now the Department has cut off the fees, amounting in the highest that has been mentioned from $750 to $1,000 a year, in order to recompense the gentleman who lost the fees that have been cut off as a matter of economy, we should therefore increase the salary $1,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. Only $500.

Mr. MANN. That is in the principal case. The Colorado office does one of the principal businesses in surveys, but in most of the cases the fees have not amounted to $150 a year, certainly not to $250 a year. In order to accomplish that little economy, they say the Department recommends that the salary should be increased by $1,000 a year. Economy! Economy! Now, what does the Land Office say? What does the Secretary of the Interior say about the whole system? We know the difficulty of abolishing offices. At $2,000 a year no office is vacant and nobody declines to accept the office, so far as we know. There is no surveyor-general's office to which some one has not been appointed at $2,000 a year. The Department wants to abolish all of the offices. If you can not abolish them at $2,000 a year, what chance will there be of abolishing them at $3,000 a year?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Illinois consider that a fair argument as against a fair salary, that even at the low salary the offices do not go begging?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows I do not make unfair arguments. I am talking about the abolition of the office. I am not arguing against the proposition that the salary ought to be increased. What does the Secretary of the Interior say about the offices themselves? He says in his report, on page 9, and I call this to the attention of the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL], who says the methods of the surveyor-general's office are entirely satisfactory. He says:

The general question of the system of surveys under the surveyor-general demands the most careful attention. The present system is not satisfactory. It is both expensive and subject to very great delay.

Yet in the face of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior that this method is expensive, the gentleman proposes to increase the expense without in the slightest degree increasing the efficiency.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know that I made the statement that the surveys were satisfactory to the Department. I said they were well made and thoroughly made and thoroughly inspected.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman when he made the statement—and I only yield for a question—undoubtedly had reference to the time when he was in the office of the surveyor-general himself, and I have no doubt that the work was well done then, but it has deteriorated since he left the office and came to Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. It does not necessarily make it so, does it, because the Secretary of the Interior says that these surveys could be expedited if the business was handled from Washington? That is the peg on which he hangs his recommendation. The Postmaster-General might recommend that everybody's mail should go to Washington, but that would not expedite the work.

Mr. MANN. Of course the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior does not make a thing so. It is his opinion. That is all we want. It is his opinion that the system is unsatisfactory and expensive.

The gentlemen from the States involved do not propose any method to increase the efficiency, but only a method of increasing the expense. I would much rather increase the efficiency than increase the expense.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of California. I think if the gentleman will read that quotation again, the gentleman will find that it is not a criticism of the surveyors-general, but of the system of surveys provided by law.

Mr. MANN. I have read the opinion a number of times and if the gentleman had listened to what I had said, he would have understood that I was criticising the system.

Mr. SMITH of California. I was listening all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I would like to know if the gentleman has had any experience or known anything about the laborious work of the surveyors-general and the duties which they are required to perform?

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman wants to know that, I can tell him that I have. I have been engaged in legal work relating to land all my life, ever since I was admitted to practice at the bar.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. At what point?

Mr. MANN. Well, at the city of Chicago, which deals with a great many questions of surveys, but I do not propose to enter into a personal controversy with the gentleman.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, if there are any Government lands for entry in the State of Illinois?

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Chairman, that is an idle question. Every foot of land in the State of Illinois is supposed to have been surveyed by surveyors-general. Does the gentleman think the only land that surveyors-general have anything to do with are lands they have not surveyed? I take my judgment of the surveyors-general by the work that they have done, not by the work that remains to be done.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. I would like to say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, these surveys were no doubt made before the gentleman from Illinois was on this earth.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman pays me a great compliment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL), there were—ayes 29, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 20, page 125, by inserting after the word "dollars" the following words:

And all fees received by the surveyor-general not in excess of $1,000, but all fees in excess of $1,000 shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, line 20, after the word "dollars," insert:
"And all fees received by the surveyor-general not in excess of $1,000, but all fees in excess of $1,000 shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order; we have had discussion enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Idaho desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. I would like to be heard on the point of order. The proposition that I make goes to the very essence of the question of salaries received. The members of the Committee on Appropriations contend that the amount of fees is a very nominal amount. I have offered this amendment in order to provide that those fees shall go to the salary of the surveyor-general, but if they are in excess of a thousand dollars the excess shall go into the Treasury of the United States.

The adoption of my amendment would obviate the necessity of making a direct appropriation of either $1,000 or $500; and at the same time it takes the words of the gentlemen for their full value, that the fees amount to a very small figure. I would like to have the point of order withdrawn, or if it shall not be sustained, that a vote be taken upon this amendment in order to test the sincerity of the gentlemen who have opposed the increase of salary or, rather, the maintenance of salary, at $3,000, on the ground that the fees amount to nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, stationery, binding records, drafting supplies, books of reference for office use, typewriter and repairs, repairs of furniture, freight and drayage, filing cases, drafting tables, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to strike out the last word. I think we should not pass this question of public-land surveys after what has been said in the recent discussion without a brief statement in regard to the present contract system of public-land surveys and the execution of those surveys through the offices of the surveyors-general. Now, I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MANN. By the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, very well; the Secretary makes the statement.

Mr. Chairman, you may search the reports of all the Department officials of this Government for years past, and I do not believe you will find in them many favorable statements with regard to any public service not performed under their immediate charge and directly from Washington. We all appreciate the fact that the civil-service people in the bureaus here are constantly working to make this more and more a Government of centralized and all-powerful bureaus. We all know that those in the bureaus who influence and color the views of the heads of Departments are prone to exaggerate, if not in some instances to possibly slightly misrepresent, with regard to the execution of Government business not performed directly under the charge of the bureaus. They can not believe that any good thing can come out of a western Nazareth.

A number of years ago, Mr. Chairman, we tried the experiment of departing from the contract system of public-land surveys. One of the charges against the contract system is that it is expensive. A certain bureau of the Government has for many years sought to enlarge the field of its activity and acquire jurisdiction over public-land surveys, and no one connected with that great bureau at least ever has any good thing to say with regard to the present system. A number of years ago in the Indian Territory the experiment was made of giving this bureau an opportunity to execute some surveys under a special law. I have no knowledge but that those surveys were well executed. Probably they were. I do know that they were not particularly expeditiously executed. I know that they were not executed as expeditiously as the public-land surveys are often executed under the surveyors-general, and I do know that they cost more per mile than the same class of surveys over the same kind of country costs under the contract system. A little later, Mr. Chairman, this same bureau was given an opportunity to survey a State boundary line, State boundary lines having been up to that time surveyed by deputy surveyors under contract. This survey was executed, not specially expeditiously, and it cost more than twice as much to execute it as had ever been paid, so far as I know, or as had been paid up to that time for any other similar survey and establishment of monuments. The expense was practically prohibitive. If we were to continue to mark out our State boundaries and establish our important lines through that method, we would bankrupt the Treasury. So that when the Secretary says that this method is expensive he certainly could not have had in mind the experience we have had of the execution of surveys by the Geological Survey in the Indian Territory and on a certain State boundary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there was a time when the contract system of surveys was a failure. Aye, more than that, it was a fraud, when there was no examination in the field of these surveys, and when they were not well executed and not well monumented. But that condition ceased to exist many years ago, and I have personal knowledge, and I think the Commissioner of the General Land Office will certainly insist, that those surveys are to-day well executed.

If they are not, it is the fault of the Land Office, for they have a large and efficient force of examiners who go over these surveys, examine them as to distances and directions, and as to the character of the monuments.

Now, as to the work of the surveyor-general's office, I appreciate the fact that the departmental officials would prefer to have 100 more clerks in one of the Departments here rather than have 100 clerks in offices of surveyors-general throughout the public-lands States; that they would prefer to have more officials directly under their control here, traveling back and forth, executing surveys, rather than to have local men in the intermountain States doing that work.

Mr. Chairman, this system has been in existence ever since we were a Government. It brings close to the work of surveying the men charged with responsibility for it. It does give employment in some of the Western States for a few Government clerks and officials, and it gives the people of that country—the young men and women of that country—who prepare themselves for that kind of work an opportunity of Government service. That opportunity is largely denied them if all the work of the Government is to be carried on in the bureaus here. I believe the contract system, as now carried on, is a good system. I believe that the surveyor-general system is a good system. If we have surveyors-general who are not qualified, they should make way for those who are. If the work is not well done in any respect, the Interior Department should insist on its being well done. But it is a fact that surveys are being well executed. They are being executed under contract at a price at which it would be utterly impossible for the Government to send a force of men from Washington out into those regions and make surveys. From $500 to $800 for a survey of 36 square miles of rough and broken territory certainly is not an expensive system; and if the work is not well done it is the fault of the General Land Office, and no one else.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of California, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $11,400; in all, $13,400.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move, on line 3, page 126, to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 126, line 3, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three;" so as to read "three thousand dollars."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I recognize here this afternoon that this subject is being discussed from two points, from two directions, one from the East and one from the West. With all due respect to the gentlemen who are on this committee, they certainly must admit that this is a subject upon which they are not fully posted. So far as the office of the surveyor-general of the State of California is concerned, I ought to know something about it. When we consider what this subject amounts to and what are the interests of the United States, it is impossible to expect a $2,000 man to do the business of that office. The duties of that office are entirely different from what those of the surveyor-general were when there was such an office in the State of Illinois. It is an entirely different problem to deal with, when the mineral lands of this State are sending into the Treasury of the United States from the surveyor-general's office in fees thousands of dollars annually. Again, these are not the fees that the surveyor-general has been in the habit of receiving. The fees that he has been receiving are for copies of documents and copies of maps from his office, and the surveyor-general has the benefit of taking to himself the difference between what it costs to make the copies of these documents and what he receives. It is these fees that the recent ruling or order of the Department takes away from him.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much of the $400,000 appropriated last year for surveys was apportioned to California and under the control of the surveyor-general of California?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I do not.

Mr. MANN. Only $10,000.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. But does the gentleman from Illinois know how much money the mining interests of the State of California paid into the surveyor-general's office for surveys? If you will examine into the fees paid by them, you will come to an entirely different conclusion about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 15, noes 34.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the State of Colorado, $2,000; and for the clerks of his office, $17,225; in all, $19,225.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "two" in line 12 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 126, line 12, strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is a good deal like tempting fate to discuss this proposition after we have had such a prolonged debate upon it. But it has seemed to me that it can not be possible that the members of this committee understand the nature of the question that is here before them, or they would not act in this picayunish manner. There is nothing else to it, Mr. Chairman, except that it is being penny wise and pound foolish. Here is an officer, with a staff of clerks under him, drawing $17,500 a year for clerical services; an officer who is obliged to furnish a bond in the sum of $30,000; an officer who is not only obliged to keep all of the surveys of the State of Colorado, but every single mining patent that is issued in that State, upon the most valuable mining properties, is based upon field notes that have to pass under his observation. We are only asking here that he be given the salary authorized by the statute and the compensation that he has heretofore received.

Now, mark you, gentlemen, we are not asking that he shall have his compensation increased. All we are asking is that he shall receive in the future the same compensation that he has received in the past. Some will say that in the past we have appropriated only $2,000. That is true; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the circular that has been called to your attention, shows that in the past the surveyors have received the fees under an order issued by the Commissioner himself, and in the State of Colorado, according to the information that I have, those fees have amounted in the past to from $750 to $1,000 a year; so that practically it is no increase in his compensation.

Mr. Chairman, years ago, during the mining activity in the State of Colorado, this office was worth many thousands of dollars per annum. The surveyor-general was not restricted to the $2,000 appropriated by Congress, but the fees that he received for these plats, maps, and copies amounted to many times his salary. By the present proposition, which is not to increase his salary, but simply to pay him the same compensation that he has received in the immediate past, the Government can not lose more than perhaps $250 at the outside, because, under the recent order of the Commissioner, these fees now go into the Treasury; and as they amount to some $750 to $1,000, we are not taking out of the Treasury in excess of $250 more than has heretofore been taken from the Treasury for this purpose. So I say it does seem to me it can not be possible that this Congress, which in the past has increased the salaries of so many officers, will now single out for a reduction a little petty office, the salary of which is only $2,000 a year, and where the total compensation has been but $3,000, and that the same men upon this floor, who but one year ago voted to increase their own salaries $2,500 a year, or 50 per cent, will now cut down the salary of this one officer 33⅓ per cent, making a total saving of less than $1,000, and all to avoid a deficit in the National Treasury. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BONYNGE) there were—ayes 23, noes 32.

Mr. BONYNGE. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, only twelve Members seconding the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Idaho, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $10,500; in all, $12,500.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 126, line 33, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three," so as to read "$3,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not often that I occupy the attention of the committee, but I am prompted to do so at this time because of my earnestness in this matter. I feel that the committee in an attempt to do what they believe is right and just is doing an injustice to several States of the West whose public lands have not as yet been surveyed.

In my remarks a few minutes ago I took the position that the fees had been taken away from the surveyor-general's salary about a year ago. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said that the fees could not and did not amount to any considerable sum. In order to test the sincerity of the gentlemen of the committee, I introduced an amendment providing that in addition to the $2,000 they should receive, the fees that accrue to the respective offices, not to exceed $1,000, should be paid to the officer, and the balance in excess of a thousand dollars should be placed in the Treasury of the United States. It remained for members of the committee to raise the point of order upon the proposed amendment, and thereby keep the proposition from being considered on its merits by the members of the committee.

Again, I want to reaffirm my belief that the offices of surveyors-general in these States are offices that require heavy work, worthy of men capable of earning and deserving to be paid $3,000. In various land offices the policy of the Government is to permit the officer that has little work to do to receive a small compensation. There are numerous receivers and registers of land offices receiving a few hundred dollars per annum in order to close up the work of their respective offices. In my own State in one land office up to a year or so ago, because of the small amount of work in the land office, the register and receiver received something like $2,900, and not $3,000; nor until the work had been brought up to the work of a land office of maximum rating did the receiver and register receive the maximum of salary provided by law. So it might be in this work. If there are States where lands that were public have been so sufficiently surveyed as to minimize the work of the surveyor-general, then, by all means, as a matter of economy, let the General Land Office close up the balance of the work and let us abolish the office of surveyor-general in such States.

But in my State only 20 per cent—yes, less than 20 per cent—of the domain has been surveyed. Over 80 per cent, or 28,000,000 acres within the State outside of forest reserves, have never been surveyed, and the work that will be required of the surveyor-general is the same character of work as that which was required of the surveyors-general in the States of Indiana, Illinois, Nebraska, and Kansas in the days gone by. The older States have cleared up their lands and had them surveyed, so that the office of surveyor-general may not be abolished, because there is no more work to do. That is not a valid argument why the pay of the surveyor-general in the States whose lands have never been surveyed should be cut down, the fees taken from him, and the capability of the office for efficient service most seriously hampered. I trust my amendment may prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Montana, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $11,000; in all, $13,000.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

In line 12, page 127, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three," so that it will read: "Three thousand dollars."

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose or desire to occupy the attention of this committee in view of what has already transpired with reference to other amendments of like character, but I do feel, inasmuch as it is, or should be, within the knowledge of every member of the committee that the State of Montana is one of the greatest public-land States in the Union; that it has a large area of unsurveyed public land, and likewise immense tracts of unsurveyed mineral lands; that there is, and necessarily must be, great responsibilities devolving upon the surveyor-general, and I submit to the gentlemen of this committee that, in all fairness, you ought to add to the salary of the surveyor-general of Montana rather than reduce the compensation given him by section 2210 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is my recollection from a conversation had with the surveyor-general of Montana a few months ago, that his fees heretofore have amounted to about $600 to $1,000 a year. At any rate, whatever his fees were, he is now deprived of them. All such emoluments heretofore received by him are now covered into the Treasury, and you propose by this paragraph to deprive him of one-third of the salary that the statute says he shall have.

I hope that my amendment will not meet with the fate heretofore accorded the amendments that have been submitted. I trust that the gentlemen here will stop and reflect for a moment before they vote it down. The case of this official is worthy of better treatment at your hands. Demands upon him are constantly increasing with the influx of settlers and home-seekers into this great new State. Only a short time ago I received a petition from some of the citizens of one of the great counties in the northern part of my State—a county larger territorially than many of the Eastern States, urging a special appropriation for the survey of all of the unsurveyed lands of that county, by reason of the insistent demands of the army of settlers for more surveyed lands for entry.

Mr. MANN. In that connection will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that for the last fiscal year there were surveyed in Montana 2,818,000 and odd acres of land, more than one-third of all the land surveyed in the United States. Can the gentleman inform us whether that ratio is likely to keep up, or whether the unsurveyed lands have been in the main surveyed in the State?

Mr. PRAY. I am glad that the gentleman brought that out. I think it will exceed that very greatly. I think that $50,000 was appropriated at the last session for the survey of these lands, which is in excess of the appropriations for other States, but far too small for Montana.

Mr. MANN. Out of the $400,000 which is appropriated for the last fiscal year, $50,000 was apportioned to Montana, which was $20,000 more than was apportioned to any other State, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. PRAY. That simply goes to show, and, in fact, amounts to proof of my contention, that the responsibilities of the surveyor-general of my State are as great, if not greater, than that of any other State, and that he should not be deprived of the salary provided by law.

Mr. MARSHALL. May I make one suggestion, that in addition to the $50,000 that was apportioned to the State of Montana, unquestionably the surveyor-general had supervision of a large amount of surveys made on Indian reservations, which is paid for ultimately out of the sale of the Indian lands and was appropriated for in the bills opening the reservation, so that the $50,000 would not indicate in any considerable degree the total amount of work.

Mr. MANN. The $50,000 for that State was $20,000 more than was appropriated for any other State.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the amount surveyed in that State was six or eight times more than was surveyed in any other State.

Mr. MARSHALL. That is explained by the fact that it was Indian lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. PRAY) there were—ayes 17, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of messenger, stationery, printing, drafting instruments, plats, drawing paper, binding records, telephone, registration of letters, post-office box rent, drayage, towels, books of reference for office use, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 128, after line 8, insert the following:
"For surveyor-general of North Dakota, $2,000, and for clerks in his office, $4,000; in all, $6,000."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this amendment is not subject to a point of order. It does not change existing law. Section 2208 of the Revised Statutes provides for the appropriation of $2,000 as salary of the surveyor-general of North Dakota, and I am offering this amendment in conformity to that law. Mr. Chairman, I offer it in conformity to the appropriation that was made at the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and I hope that the amendment will prevail. I consider, Mr. Chairman, that it will be an injustice to the people of the State of North Dakota to abolish this office at this time. We have thousands—yes, hundreds of thousands—of acres of mineral lands in our State that are yet to be surveyed. It is true that most of the public lands have been surveyed, but it is also true that we have reservations in that State and lands in those reservations that are unsurveyed. We also have lands on reservations that, while they have been surveyed, will have to be resurveyed, the same as lands on other reservations that have heretofore been resurveyed.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is proposed, is it not, by the Interior Department to abolish the office in North Dakota on July 1? That is the reason that no estimate has been submitted to Congress for the appropriation to continue this office. Now, upon the abolition of the office, then, the Commissioner-General of the Land Office is ex officio the surveyor-general and has full power and authority to approve all surveys in that State, as in the State of Minnesota, which office was abolished on the 1st of January of this year.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I do not know that is so; and if it is a fact, if either the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office has so informed the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I will be obliged to him to make that statement upon this floor; but, Mr. Chairman, even though such a recommendation has been made, I will say to this committee that it is not a wise recommendation—not at all—because we have in our State, as I have said before, hundreds of thousands of acres of mineral lands—that is, coal lands—that are now public lands, all of which must in the future be surveyed or resurveyed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform the House how much of the $400,000 appropriated the last fiscal year ending June 30 was set apart for surveys in the State of North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. I understand the provisions of that law. A certain amount was appropriated for surveys last year. The amendment I offer has reference only to the surveyor-general's salary and other specific expenses.

Mr. MANN. Four hundred thousand dollars was appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, for surveys. That was apportioned by the Department of the Interior among the various States, public-land States, and that is expended through the surveyors-general. Now, can the gentleman inform us how much of that was apportioned to the State of North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. The gentleman has the list and can inform the committee.

Mr. MANN. I will be glad to do so, indeed; not a single red cent.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to the gentleman that that is no reason why this office should be abolished. It is no reason why the amount should not be appropriated at this session the same as it was at the last session of Congress, so long as the surveyor-general has his duties to perform. I am not asking for an increase. I am simply asking, Mr. Chairman, for the same appropriation that we had during the Fifty-ninth Congress, and I sincerely hope that my amendment will prevail. The Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to bring in a bill to this House making no appropriation for the office of surveyor-general of North Dakota, which means the abolishment of that office.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois points out the fact that of the $400,000 which was appropriated by Congress for public-land surveys in the United States or in the public-land States not a single dollar was apportioned to North Dakota. It does not necessarily follow because of this that surveys are not being executed there at this time. It does not necessarily follow that the surveys in North Dakota are completed because no part of that $400,000 was apportioned for that State last year. I called up the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, who is familiar with the conditions there, since this debate commenced, and I am advised there are a number of contracts pending there which are incomplete. Now, there are perhaps two objects in cutting this item from the bill: One of them is economy. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he believes for one moment that if they bring the business of that office from Bismarck, N. Dak., to Washington it can be done cheaper than it is being done out there. How far would $6,000 go in the Department down here toward paying the expenses of conducting the business of an office of that kind? Now, about this suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior (for whom I have the highest respect) of centralizing this work in Washington. I have had experience in this matter of surveys, and for that matter with other matters in which the question of expense to the Government comes into account, and I want to say to the gentlemen of the committee that there is not a man of us but who knows the nearer you get to the city of Washington the more the work will cost. This Government would be bankrupt if all the work that is done in little country places, far-distant points from this city, cost what it does to do similar work in Washington. [Applause.] Six thousand dollars! It will cost more than that to guard the archives of this office if it was brought here to Washington. [Applause.] This office is a convenience to the public of the State of North Dakota. It is located at the capital. The various county surveyors go there to examine the records and make extracts from them or procure copies of them, and the State officials visit the office almost daily for data and information. Now, I am not in the habit of taking up much of the time of this committee, and I will simply say that there is absolutely no excuse for—and there is certainly no economy in—abolishing this office, and I sincerely hope every man in this committee will do us justice and support this amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MARSHALL. Just one moment. I note in the report that there is coupled along with the State of North Dakota the offices of Florida and Minnesota. These offices in Florida and Minnesota have been maintained for years, and I am very safe in making the statement that neither one of them needed the office for the last twenty years one-half as badly as North Dakota will need it for the next twenty years.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the office of the surveyor-general was abolished on the 1st of January, and it is now proposed, as the gentleman from North Dakota now says, to abolish it at the end of the present fiscal year. The office in Florida and the office of North Dakota it is proposed by the Land Department to abolish, and the effort that is being made to prevent the Department from carrying out this recommendation here to-day is only another evidence of the difficulty of getting rid of offices created by Congress, or personal service of any other character.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment. Now, in the judgment of the General Land Office this office is no longer necessary. They can complete the work of the office and turn over the records to the State of North Dakota by the end of the current fiscal year, and the surveys, or the charts, maps, and plats that must be completed and certified hereafter, can be and will be certified to by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as ex officio surveyor-general for the State of North Dakota. It is because the office is no longer necessary, in the judgment of the men charged with the responsibility of administering this branch of the public service, that no estimate was submitted to Congress, and I submit the committee would not be justified in continuing it longer in view of those facts.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does the chairman of the Appropriation Committee believe that it would be economy to abolish this office? Does he not believe it would cost the Government more to perform the duties that are now being performed by the surveyor-general of North Dakota here at Washington than the amount asked for in my amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. The amount which the Government is now paying for the land office in North Dakota is $7,000. Now, I can only answer the gentleman from North Dakota by stating what has been the saving by the abolition of the office in the State of Minnesota. That office was likewise receiving $7,000 a year for clerical services. All of these services and all of these salaries have now ceased, and the Government is saving that amount and doing the work that remains to be done here in the Department with no additional expense to the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the gentleman think it is economy, providing this amendment is put on in the Senate and sent back to the House?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the amendment is put on in the Senate and sent back to the House, I can only say I think the conferees on the part of the House will resist concurring in the final adoption of an amendment which proposes to take money out of the Treasury merely to perpetuate a few clerks in office.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does the committee know or have any means of knowing whether they have a lease of this office or not? Is it not a fact that they have a lease?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is clearly an administrative act of the Department. If they have a lease, it will expire at the end of this fiscal year, when it is proposed to abolish the surveyor-general's office in North Dakota.

Mr. MARSHALL. Are those the terms of the lease?

Mr. TAWNEY. They can not lease for more than a year.

Mr. MARSHALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are not allowed to do so under the law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there was some merit in the proposition to increase the salary of an official who was needed, but it has been recommended in two annual reports that this office be dispensed with. It only illustrates the greed—I will not say the greed, but the desire of gentlemen representing their States to show how active they are on the floor of the House in behalf of their States. In the last annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office he says, under the title of "Closing surveyors-general offices:"

I beg to repeat the suggestion of last year as to this matter and to report that conditions remain the same in the cases of three States, Florida, Minnesota, and North Dakota.

Which he recommended be abolished last year.

The gentlemen from Florida have not had the nerve to ask that their surveyor-general be increased; the gentleman in charge of the bill has not had the nerve to present to the House such a proposition; but the distinguished gentlemen from North Dakota, very properly, I suppose, present to the House, and will receive great acclaim at home, for insisting that a useless office be continued at great expense, without any benefit.

Mr. GRONNA. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in the western part of North Dakota it is only within the last few years that it has been necessary to make surveys so far as coal lands are concerned?

Mr. MANN. I am aware of this fact, that out of $400,000 appropriated by the Government last year for the survey of public lands, not a dollar of it was spent in North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Seven thousand dollars of the money appropriated was spent.

Mr. MANN. I have got the report of the Commissioner of the Land Office in my hands, giving the full apportionment of $400,000, and not a cent is apportioned to the State of the gentleman.

Mr. MARSHALL. I know the gentleman from Illinois wants to be fair, and is always that. I have explained twice to him, and I think three times, but without results, that the activity of this office did not depend upon the portion of the money apportioned. We are opening Indian lands and surveys are being made of them all the time.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to admit one thing to the gentleman—that the activity of the official who wants his office increased does not depend upon the amount of money or the amount of work that he is to perform.

Mr. MARSHALL. But I want to say that they are opening the Indian reservations there and making surveys.

Mr. MANN. The Indian reservations are all taken care of in the bills that pass.

Mr. MARSHALL. But they never expend the money.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that no land will go unsurveyed in North Dakota because of the abolishment of this office.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GRONNA. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 24, noes 25.

Mr. GRONNA. I demand tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Seven gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for tellers; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of congratulating the House that one office which seems to have passed into innocuous desuetude has been stricken out for the time being. It gives me a good deal of hope; and I am seriously considering the proposition of introducing a bill, and asking the Committee on Ways and Means to report it to the House, to abolish at least one port of the United States where the expenses are $600 to $800 and the collection only $1. I hope for better things. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For the surveyor-general of Utah, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $10,000; in all, $12,000.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on line 25, page 121, by striking out "two" and inserting "three," so as to read "three thousand dollars."

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Chairman, the questions involved in this amendment have been pretty thoroughly thrashed out this afternoon, and I regret that the committee has seen fit to stolidly refuse to recognize the merits of the several amendments proposed. In behalf of the State which I have the honor to represent I desire to say that the work in the surveyor's office is constantly increasing. But a small part of the vast area of public lands within the State has yet been surveyed. There is a marvelous development of the mineral resources of the State constantly going on. During the past year new oil fields were discovered in the southern part of the State, and the result is that there is a demand for a survey of these oil-bearing lands. A careful estimate has been made of these oil-bearing lands, and in order to survey these public lands embraced within only three counties will require an expenditure of $142,000. I desire to read a communication to the officers of the land office in Utah bearing upon this subject:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH,
January 14, 1908.

Hon. THOMAS HULL, Surveyor-General; E. D. R. THOMPSON, Register; M. M. KAIGHN, Receiver, Salt Lake City, Utah.

GENTLEMEN: Coal has long been known to exist in southern Utah, and recently petroleum in commercial quantities has been discovered in Washington County, and there is abundant reason for believing that the oil formation underlies nearly all of Washington County, the west half of Kane County, and considerable parts of Iron and Garfield counties of the said State.

Petroleum seeps were discovered in southern Utah and in that part of Arizona north of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River many years ago, and some locations were made under the placer act, but no systematic development was attempted until 1907, when parties from Nevada brought in machinery and sunk a well a few hundred feet deep on North Creek, in the Virgin River valley, near the town of Virgin, T. 41 S., R. 12 W.

This first well, as soon as completed, began to yield a good grade of oil in large quantities, which was immediately utilized for fuel in place of cedar and pine wood at other rigs that had been installed in the neighborhood to sink additional wells.

In all, sixteen wells have been started, the deepest being about 1,100 feet in depth.

The success of the Nevada oil men and the excellent quality of the oil found in their first well created an excitement, and a rush to secure oil locations ensued and has been continued until the field is nearly covered with filings, from near St. George east almost to the west line of Kane County, and from near Cedar City south to and far beyond the Arizona line.

The petroleum locations have been made under the provisions of the laws relating to placer mineral claims, as provided in the act of Congress approved February 11, 1897. (See United States mining laws and regulations thereunder approved May 21, 1907, pages 19, 34, and 35.)

A small percentage of the petroleum territory has been surveyed by the Government as agricultural land, but far the larger part remains unsurveyed.

Wherever the lands had been surveyed the claimants were able to make their claims conform to legal subdivisions of 10, 40, 80, and 160 acres, and usually did so; but upon unsurveyed land, having nothing to guide them, they have made and are still making locations that are far from conformable with the rectangular subdivisions of the public-land surveys as required by the regulations.

In the majority of cases locations are intended to cover 160 acres, but the boundary lines of such of these as are located on unsurveyed lands are far in excess of the legal length, and deviate greatly from the directions prescribed by law, viz, north, south, east, and west.

The locators, in nearly all cases not being surveyors, can not be expected to make their claims conform to legal subdivisions, either in size or direction of lines, and they do not do so.

The result of these erroneous locations will be litigation or violence, or both, as the ground becomes more valuable, unless the Government intervenes in time and extends its surveys over the land in question.

The oil belt being wide and extending apparently in a northeast and southwest direction, covers all of Washington, the west half of Kane, the western part of Garfield, and the eastern part of Iron counties, Utah, and as petroleum locations will soon be made over the entire oil region, I, like many others who have visited the field, am of the opinion that it is advisable for the Government to extend the public-land surveys over all the unsurveyed land in the region outlined above, and so recommend.

Day by day locations are being made as nearly according to law as the locators are able, but still in such manner as to leave opening for dispute, and it is to be hoped Congress and the Department of the Interior will intervene in time to prevent the confusion of lines which is always the prime cause of mining litigation.

Unlike lode claims, which are usually isolated, petroleum claims are located consecutively until a territory many square miles in extent is covered, involving enormous expense to individual claimants if surveyed under the procedure prescribed to obtain patent to mineral lands.

Yours, respectfully,

M. T. BURGESS.

I will also insert in the RECORD the report of the surveyor-general of Utah to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in reference to the survey of this oil region:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL,
DISTRICT OF UTAH,
Salt Lake City, Utah, January 16, 1908.

Honorable COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith copy of letter received from Mr. M. T. Burgess, which is self-explanatory.

Some time ago I received a communication from the commissioners of Washington County, Utah, dated November 25, 1907, stating that the citizens of Washington County were forwarding a petition to the honorable Secretary of the Interior upon this same subject and asking my support in the matter. To this communication I replied, suggesting that persons desiring to locate oil claims should proceed under the United States land laws and the regulations of the Interior Department.

The letter of M. T. Burgess, however, emphasizes the need of some relief for the situation existing in the territory referred to, and I respectfully submit the matter to you. I feel that the subject is worthy of consideration.

I inquired of Mr. Burgess as to the probability of the sale of land in case the surveys were made, and he assures me that there is no doubt that large quantities would be purchased, for there is every indication of permanency of the flow of oil. In addition to this there is a great deal of land valuable for dry farming, but which can not be settled under any of the land laws which contemplate residence upon the land to secure title.

I have compiled, and submit herewith, an estimate of the number of miles and acres to be surveyed, and have the honor to submit same to you with an estimate of the cost of field and office work. This estimate is necessarily approximate and is submitted simply to guide you in the consideration of this matter. No account is taken of the expense of field examination. The estimate follows:

For surveys and resurveys in Garfield, Iron, Kane, and Washington counties, State of Utah:

Township, standard, and guide meridian	miles	1,548
Section lines	do	7,214
Total number of acres		2,754,140

Estimated cost of above surveys:

Township, standard, and guide meridian	$27,864
Section lines	93,782
Total cost of field work	121,646
Total cost of office work	20,354
Entire estimated cost	142,000

The number of full and fractional townships are as follows:

In Garfield County	45
In Iron County	10
In Kane County	45
In Washington County	58
Total	158

Very respectfully,

UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL FOR UTAH.

I have introduced a bill providing for a survey of these lands and making an appropriation for the same, which I hope will meet with the unanimous support of the distinguished and broad-minded members of the Committee on Appropriations. My object at this time in calling attention to this is to present before this committee the character and importance of the work now pending before the surveyor-general of Utah and to refute the intimation of the honorable chairman of the committee that the work of these officers is on the decrease. In the case of my own State he is certainly mistaken, and I believe that his statement is not well founded by the facts in the other States.

In conclusion, I am proud to state that the surveyor-general of Utah is a gentleman of ability and fitness for the duties of the office. He can command the salary I propose to give him in private employment. He is industrious, painstaking, and efficient in the discharge of his duty, giving to the Government, in looking after its interest, his full time and conscientious effort. I hope this committee will show its appreciation of these qualities by adopting the amendment I have offered.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Washington, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $7,800; in all, $9,800.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "two thousand," in line 8, page 29, insert "five hundred," so that it will read "$2,500."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I see that the committee appreciates the justice of this amendment, and I ask for a vote. [Applause and laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Washington) there were—ayes 19, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Wyoming, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $10,500; in all, $12,500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "two," in line 16, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16 strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as an evidence of good faith. [Laughter.] I realize that in the present frame of mind of this committee all arguments fall on deaf ears. Gentlemen have concluded that for the present they will not do us justice. Later, of course, in another place, these items will all be inserted, and then other gentlemen, without the expenditure of any effort on their part, will have all the credit that the membership of the House are entitled to for their efforts to secure justice for efficient public officials. In due course of time that increase will be accepted, after some sparring, of course, by the House, and we shall have taken another step along that road which removes the House from its rightful position as the originator of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no expenses chargeable to the foregoing appropriations for clerk hire and incidental expenses, in the offices of the surveyors-general, shall be incurred by the respective surveyors-general in the conduct of said offices, except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16882, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STATUE OF JABEZ LAMAR MONROE CURRY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution 17.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statue of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, presented by the State of Alabama to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished civic services.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

JOINT PRINTING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

To the Speaker:

It has just come to my knowledge that I am still a member of the Joint Printing Commission.

It has been and still is my opinion that membership of the Joint Committee on Printing is intended to carry with it ex officio membership on the Joint Commission on Printing. I therefore tender herewith my resignation as a member of said Joint Commission on Printing in order that the gentleman from South Carolina, the Democratic member of the Joint Printing Committee, may be appointed in my stead on the Joint Commission on Printing.

Respectfully, JAMES M. GRIGGS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests——

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If that resignation be accepted, it is within the power of the Speaker to appoint the member of the Joint Committee on Printing to membership on this Commission.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the Joint Commission referred to is a statutory office, created by law. The gentleman may resign from it without leave from the House.

Mr. MANN. The question is, Who can fill the vacancy?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the law.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the communication lie temporarily on the Speaker's table until that can be determined.

The SPEAKER. It might be treated in the nature of surplusage; however, there is no objection to its lying on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 712. An act granting a pension to Agnes Lange Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 17, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named as follows:

Mr. BENNET of New York, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13079) to amend section 21 of the immigration law, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 957), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 138) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 958), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee on the Whole House as follows:

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1037) granting an increase of pension to Edward A. Russell, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 902), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1063) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas S. Chrisman, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 903), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1484) granting an increase of pension to Marshall W. Rogers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 904), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2355) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Donaldson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 905), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2711) granting a pension to Simon Levy, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 906), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3329) granting a pension to Theodore F. Kendall, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 907), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3611) granting an increase of pension to Alexander McNabb, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 908), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4674) granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Fancher, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 909), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6038) granting a pension to Edwin May, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 910), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6057) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Seiberlich, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 911), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6065) granting an increase of pension to George M. Coykendall, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 912), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6641) granting an increase of pension to James A. Cobb, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 913), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6875) granting an increase of pension to James S. Walsh, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 914), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7012) granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Nelson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 915), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7300) granting a pension to Magdalena Hansman, reported to the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 916), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7946) granting an increase of pension to William Brogan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 917), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8142) granting an increase of pension to Wilson Graham, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 918), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8332) granting an increase of pension to George Uhles, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 919), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8610) granting an increase of pension to John Shields, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 920), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8978) granting an increase of pension to Marques D. Mason, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 921), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9748) granting an increase of pension to Herbert C. Mattoon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 922), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10163) granting an increase of pension to Myron A. Hawks, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 923), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10436) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hill, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 924), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10698) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Lyons, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 925), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10723) granting an increase of pension to William H. White, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 926), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10763) granting an increase of pension to William C. Milliken, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 927), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10824) granting an increase of pension to Caswell Lovitt, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 928), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11043) granting a pension to Elisha Cole, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 929), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11282) granting an increase of pension to John W. McCormick, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 930), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11471) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Spackman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 931), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11868) granting a pension to Alexander Hyde, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 932), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Hannah M. Crowley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 933), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12990) granting an increase of pension to Jerome Long, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 934), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13245) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. B. Davis, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 935), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13336) granting a pension to Regina Albert, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 936), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13372) granting an increase of pension to John H. Seagrist, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 937), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13683) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Treadwell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 938), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13920) granting an increase of pension to Fernando D. Stone, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 939), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14310) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Porter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 940), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14747) granting a pension to William B. Haines, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 941), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14818) granting an increase of pension to Roswell L. Nason, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 942), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14978) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Dixon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 943), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14989) granting an increase of pension to Jerome King, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 944), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15167) granting an increase of pension to Titus W. Allen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 945), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15193) granting an increase of pension to Milo Brewster, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 946), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15579) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo C. Abbey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 947), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15616) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Irwin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 948), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KIPP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15686) granting an increase of pension to William H. Turner, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 949), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15821) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Larkin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 950), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16019) granting a pension to Grace S. Wood, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 951), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16020) granting an increase of pension to Moses T. Kelly, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 952), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOYD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16335) granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Tomlin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 953), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16394) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Forman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 954), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16533) granting an increase of pension to James S. Anderson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 955), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15824) granting an increase of pension to Christine M. Hamre—Committee on Naval Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 15825) granting a pension to Abraham T. Angell—Committee on Naval Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 15827) granting a pension to Margaret Quirk—Committee on Naval Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13558) granting an increase of pension to Abby A. Brightman—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14321) granting a pension to Minnie R. Bacon—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10119) granting an increase of pension to William Mayer—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12820) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Amberg—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14478) granting a pension to Robert E. Taber—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on pensions.

A bill (H. R. 17086) granting a pension to Nancy E. Clark—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14985) granting a pension to Thomas J. Bradshaw—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 17215) for the erection of a dwelling for the keeper of the Cape Vincent, New York, lighthouse—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17216) relating to liability of common carriers to their employees—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17217) to provide for the erection of a public building at Ottumwa, Iowa—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 17218) to aid in the erection of a memorial monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. COX of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 17219) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, and to further regulate the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and for other purposes'"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 17220) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAGGOTT: A bill (H. R. 17221) providing for the resurvey of a certain township of land in the county of Kiowa, Colo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17222) providing for the resurvey of certain townships of land in the county of Archuleta, Colo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17223) providing for the resurvey of a certain township of land in the county of Routt, Colo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17224) providing for the resurvey of the lands in Cheyenne County, Colo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 17225) to amend an act approved June 4, 1906, authorizing the use of the waters of Coosa River at Lock No. 4, in Alabama—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 17226) to define vagrancy in the District of Columbia and prescribe the punishment therefor—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17227) to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across the St. Joseph River at or near its mouth—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 17228) to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER: Resolution (H. Res. 240) concerning the revenue and support of the Post-Office Department—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: Resolution (H. Res. 241) directing the Committee on Ways and Means to report to the House bills reducing import duties; also income-tax bills—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolution (H. Res. 242) requesting the Secretary of the Navy to send to the House certain information concerning the wreck of the battle ship Maine—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: A bill (H. R. 17229) granting an increase of pension to Henry Fuersbach—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17230) granting an increase of pension to Michael Umbehaun—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17231) granting an increase of pension to Elijah M. Sandford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17232) granting an increase of pension to William H. Roberts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 17233) for the relief of Fred A. Emerson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 17234) granting an increase of pension to Gifford Ramey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 17235) granting a pension to William L. McFarland—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17236) granting a pension to Annie C. Almond—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17237) for the relief of heirs or estate of Thornton Martin, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 17238) granting an increase of pension to John Strahley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17239) granting an increase of pension to John A. Thomas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 17240) granting an increase of pension to John L. Bryan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOK of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 17241) for the relief of William E. Moses—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CRAWFORD: A bill (H. R. 17242) granting an increase of pension to James Berry Duckett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17243) granting an increase of pension to William H. Deaver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17244) to correct the military record of Joseph S. Penland—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17245) for the relief of F. M. Rhineheardt, H. R. Cook, and Joseph S. Penland—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17246) to extend the time for filing claims for property taken from Confederate soldiers at the close of the civil war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 17247) granting an increase of pension to Wesley I. Bond—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: A bill (H. R. 17248) granting an increase of pension to William H. Steel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17249) granting an increase of pension to George W. Mathis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 17250) granting an increase of pension to James D. Timmoney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILHAMS: A bill (H. R. 17251) granting an increase of pension to Wesley Amos—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 17252) granting an increase of pension to Matthias J. Brower—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAGGOTT: A bill (H. R. 17253) granting an increase of pension to William Lockstone—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17254) granting an increase of pension to Frank G. Sayre—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17255) granting an increase of pension to Emily M. J. Cooley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17256) granting an increase of pension to George F. Gibbs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17257) granting an increase of pension to Oliver M. Mills—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17258) for the relief of George Ivers, of Boone, Pueblo County, Colo., administrator of William Ivers—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17259) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Breithaupt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 17260) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel B. Petts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 17261) granting an increase of pension to Logan M. Tays—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17262) granting an increase of pension to Madison Chapel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 17263) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the heirs and legal representatives of John P. Maxwell and Hugh H. Maxwell, deceased—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A bill (H. R. 17264) to place the name of Charles Webster upon the retired list of the United States Navy as commander—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LILLEY: A bill (H. R. 17265) granting an increase of pension to Anna Schneider—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: A bill (H. R. 17266) granting an increase of pension to Milton P. Noel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 17267) for the relief of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 17268) granting an increase of pension to J. Davis Duffield—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 17269) for the relief of George Wollett—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17270) for the relief of Thomas B. Gourley—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NELSON: A bill (H. R. 17271) granting an increase of pension to John R. Knudson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 17272) granting a pension to Julius Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17273) granting a pension to Frank Taphorn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17274) granting an increase of pension to N. L. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 17275) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James Quinn—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 17276) for the relief of S. R. Hurley—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 17277) for the relief of George S. Patten, of Williams, Coconino County, Ariz.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 17278) for the relief of George W. Smith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17279) for the relief of Frank W. Clark—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17280) granting an increase of pension to John Coombs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 17281) granting an increase of pension to John McIntosh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17282) granting an increase of pension to Newton K. Andrew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17283) granting a pension to Dennis O'Shey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 17284) for the relief of the heirs of Peter Anderson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17285) for the relief of the estate of Samuel D. Kelley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17286) for the relief of the estate of R. A. Myrick, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17287) to appoint Edgar C. Sturges a captain in the Army and place him on the retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Nicholls—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Catherine Crockett (previously referred to Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Gifford Ramey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Joseph Jackson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BONYNGE: Petitions of Union Label League No. 1 and International Association of Mechanics, of Denver, Colo., for building battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bethel, Me., against use of mails for circulating liquor advertisements—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of National Funeral Directors' Association, against burial at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: Petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Mrs. H. B. Asher, for forest reservations in White Mountains and southern Appalachian Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, against interstate liquor legislation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. Dora Nester and others, against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of National Funeral Directors' Association, against burials at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petitions of B. J. Ross, A. M. Hemphill, U: G. Riley, C. M. Hemphill, and H. A. Hoch, all of Broughton, Kans., against sale of intoxicants on all Government property—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Kansas State Retail Merchants' Association, for enlargement of power of Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Kansas State Retail Merchants' Association, for increase of pay for officers and enlisted men of Army and Navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of J. J. Pennell, against amendment to copyright bill inimical to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petitions of D. A. Brodbeck and Kansas State Retail Merchants' Association, of Topeka, Kans., against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CHANEY: Papers to accompany bill for special act of Congress for relief of John Strahley, late of Company F, Forty-third Indiana Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COUDREY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Edward P. Rice—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of National Supreme Lodge, C. S. P. S., against all prohibition legislation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Petition of Muskogee Typographical Union, for removal of duty on white paper and wood pulp—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DENVER: Petition of Mrs. Joseph H. Richards, for the Altruistic Club of Hillsboro, Ohio, for forest reservations in White Mountains and southern Appalachian Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for a permanent tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, for pensions for widows and children of Dr. Jesse W. Lazear and Maj. James Carroll—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Sadie Doan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Franklin County, Pa., for additional protection to dairy interests—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of Stephen Mummery, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for the Kittredge and Barchfield bills on copyright—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Edward Favenza, for amendment of copyright law beneficial to musical composers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FULLER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James D. Timmoney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Benjamin Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of Lake Seaman's Union, North Tonawanda, N. Y., favoring H. R. 14941—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of New York Post-Office Laborers' Protective Association, for increase of salaries of laborers in such post-offices as New York and Brooklyn from $700 to $900 per year—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRONNA: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Park River, Bowdon, Turtle Lake, Lakota, Cavalier, Page, and Walhalla, all in the State of North Dakota, for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARDWICK: Letter of committee and resolution of Augusta Exchange and Board of Trade, against H. R. 67; also minority report of said organization in support of H. R. 67—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorials of Chamber of Commerce of Augusta, and Manufacturers and Merchants' Association, of Rome, Ga., for river and harbor legislation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation until commission reports to Congress—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petition of Sweet Candy Company, for uniform classification of railway freights—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Petition of Tacoma Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, for application of civil-service rules to employees of Thirteenth Census—to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. KELIHER: Petition of congregation of Bethlehem of Israel Church, of Malden, Mass., protesting against amendments to immigration law—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of M. S. Lovell, of Oswego, N. Y., against amendment of the proposed copyright law—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Petition of Josiah S. Tyhe et al., for a pension of $30 per month for all honorably discharged soldiers of the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Mayer (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petition of Miss Jessie F. Lindsay, of Fairfield, Nebr., against proposed amendment to the copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of citizens of Bloomington, Nebr., protesting against establishing parcels-post routes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of Rear-Admiral Pickering Garrison, No. 4, of Erie, Pa., for increased pay of officers and enlisted men of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Grand Army of the Republic of Albany, N. Y., protesting against abolishment of pension agencies—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Southern Illinois Division of National German-American Alliance, asking repeal of act prohibiting sale of wines and beer in post exchanges—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petition of Edward Pomeroy Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, of Jackson, Mich., for the Sherwood bill (H. R. 7625)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Adrian, Mich., for restoration of motto "In God we trust" to coins—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WALLACE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Virginia Tirrell (previously referred to Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of J. A. Tanner and 30 others, of Mercer County, Pa., in favor of S. 3152—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petitions of H. G. Preston and 123 others, of Warren County; W. H. Williams and 11 others, of Venango County; R. G. McGarr and 23 others, of Mercer County; and J. W. Morester, of Elk County, all of the Twenty-eighth District of Pennsylvania, in favor of S. 3152—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 17, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of William O. Robards v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12401. An act to legalize a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rice, Minn.;

H. R. 15660. An act to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public laws; and

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution for the appointment of a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution accepting the statue of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, presented by the State of Alabama, to be placed in Statuary Hall, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Indiana State Live Stock Breeders' Association, praying for the ratification of treaties looking to the betterment of the markets abroad for agricultural and live-stock products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the National German-American Alliance, remonstrating against the enactment of further legislation to regulate immigration until the investigation of the Immigration Commission has been completed, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 17, International Stereotypers and Electrotypers' Union, of Washington, D. C., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Charleston, S. C.; Washington, D. C.; Nashville, Tenn.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Kansas City, Mo.; St. Louis, Mo.; Philipsburg, Mont.; Baltimore, Md.; West Hammond, Ill., and Memphis, Tenn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Illinois State Horticultural Society, praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," and also for the establishment of postal savings banks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 178, Musicians' Protective Union, of Galesburg, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit Army and Navy musicians from entering into competition with civilian musicians, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Merchants' Association of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a permanent nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 511, International Typographical Union, of Batavia, N. Y., and a petition of Local Union No. 167, International Typographical Union, of Schenectady, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York City, Ossining, Rochester, and Saratoga Springs, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the present copyright law relating to photographic reproductions, which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Albany, New York City, Newburgh, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Yonkers, Middletown, and Dolgeville, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 126, United Garment Workers of America, of Syracuse, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of all battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the present pure-food and drug law relating to standards for foods and drugs, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McLAURIN presented a petition of Local Union No. 14, Commercial Telegraphers' Union, of Chicago, Ill., praying that an investigation be made into the conditions of the telegraph companies of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Thomas E. Young, of Washington, D. C., praying for the adoption of a certain amendment to Senate bill 3976, relating to the extension of railroad tracks to the navy-yard in that city, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of H. B. Brown, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to change the name of Sixteenth street NW. to White House road, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the American Medical Association of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a dental corps and a corps of trained women nurses for the United States Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Manchester and West Rindge, in the State of New Hampshire; of Wallkill, N. Y.; of North Henderson, Ill.; of Stanhope, N. J., and of Sault Ste. Marie and Grand Rapids, in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 63, International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. du PONT presented a petition of the Pilots' Association for the Bay and River Delaware, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of district superintendents, keepers, and crews of the Life-Saving Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KEAN presented the memorial of William V. Ruton, of East Orange, N. J., and a memorial of Thomas M. K. Lee, jr., Post, No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Jersey, of Camden, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation proposing to abolish certain pension agencies in different parts of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of W. H. Klinedinst, of Morristown, N. J., remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the present copyright law relating to photographic reproductions, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a memorial of Local Branch No. 6, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, of Salem, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors in prohibition districts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 3, Cigar Makers' International Union of America, of Jersey City, N. J., and a petition of Local Union No. 94, Typographical Union, of Bayonne and Jersey City, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of the proposed new battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Vineland, N. J., and a petition of sundry citizens of McAfee, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Union County Board of Agriculture, of Elizabeth, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," and also for the establishment of postal savings banks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of W. J. Purvis, of Vineland, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a forest reserve in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 94, Typographical Union, of Bayonne and Jersey City, N. J., praying for the removal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 248, American Federation of Musicians, of Paterson, N. J., and a petition of Local Union No. 204, American Federation of Musicians, of New Brunswick, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the competition of Army and Navy musicians with civilian musicians, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a memorial of the Farmers' Institute of Montcalm County, Mich., remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on sugar coming into the United States from foreign countries or from the insular possessions, and also against any revision of the tariff at the present time, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MARTIN presented a petition of Local Division No. 152, Order of Railway Conductors of Richmond, Va., praying for the reenactment of the so-called employers' liability bill, so as to meet the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. STONE presented a memorial of the Sharpshooters' Society, of Herman, Mo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Greene County Medical Association, of Springfield, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the widows of Dr. J. W. Carroll and Dr. James Lazear, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange, of St. Louis, Mo., and a petition of St. Joseph Council, United Commercial Travelers, of St. Joseph, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented memorials of Local Union No. 8, International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, of St. Louis; of Local Union No. 635, International Typographical Union, of Poplar Bluff; of Local Union No. 40, International Typographical Union, of St. Joseph; of Local Union No. 119 International Typographical Union, of Jefferson City; of Local Union No.

206, International Typographical Union, of Sedalia, and of Local Union No. 18, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, of St. Louis, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of Local Union No. 311, International Typographical Union, of Grand Forks, N. Dak., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of the proposed new battle ships at Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 511, International Typographical Union, of Batavia, N. Y.; and a petition of Local Union No. 187, Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, of Elmira, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAPP presented a petition of Local Union No. 630, International Typographical Union, of St. Cloud, Minn., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of West Duluth, Minn., praying for the establishment of postal savings banks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HEMENWAY presented a petition of Dela Hunt Post, No. 152, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, of Cannelton, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the widows of soldiers a pension of $12 per month, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Indiana State Live Stock Association, praying for the ratification of treaties looking to the betterment of markets abroad for agricultural and live stock products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lafayette, Ind., and a petition of sundry volunteer officers of the civil war of Terre Haute, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list in the War and Navy Departments for surviving officers of the civil war, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of Local Union, No. 520, International Typographical Union, of Mattoon, Ill., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Chicago, Freeport, Decatur, Freeburg, Bloomington, and Moline, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENROSE presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 4980) granting a pension to Anna E. Siple, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3145) granting an increase of pension to Emily E. Woodley, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 4964) granting an increase of pension to Annie D. Mickley, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 4965) granting an increase of pension to William Lamon, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3910) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Heimbach, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3909) granting an increase of pension to John H. Stover, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 3908) granting a pension to Henry Miller, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 3138) granting an increase of pension to William Bessinger, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 4962) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Anna K. Carpenter, widow of the late Bvt. Maj. Thomas H. Carpenter, captain, United States Army, retired, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LONG presented petitions of sundry citizens of Neosho Rapids, Emporia, Edna, Manhattan, Winfield, Columbus, Laharpe, Independence, Garfield, Leroy, Olathe, Coffeyville, Ray, Iola, Cedarvale, Burlingame, Topeka, Tescott, Ottawa, Broughton, and Cloverdale, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of Fullington & Held and sundry other citizens of Clay Center, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 4926) granting an increase of pension to Tyra Montgomery, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURKETT presented a petition of Local Union No. 106, Pressmen and Assistants' Union, of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Capital City Branch, No. 8, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation granting letter carriers thirty days' annual leave with pay, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Reno County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who were confined in Confederate prisons during the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Garfield Post, No. 5, Department of Oklahoma, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muskogee, Okla., and a petition of sundry citizens of Muskogee, Okla., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present homestead laws relative to the taking of homesteads, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Clay Center and Clay County, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 781, International Typographical Union, of Iola, Kans., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Council No. 99, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Atchison, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to secure the use of United States rural mail equipment and to place the rural service on a paying basis, and also against the consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3126) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battle ship Indiana, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 24) directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and report on facing point switches and the appliances for the automatic control of such switches, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14282) to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va., reported it without amendment.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 44) for the erection of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark in the city of Manchester, N. H.;

A bill (S. 45) for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H.; and

A bill (S. 160) to aid in the erection of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 49) authorizing the Secretary of War to permit not exceeding seven Filipinos to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

RESIDENT PHILIPPINE COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on the Philippines I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) providing for salaries of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. In the order made by the Senate the other day admitting the Philippine Commissioners to the privileges of the floor there were two clerical errors, one in the name of a Commissioner and the other in terming the legislative body of the Philippines the "Philippine assembly." It should follow the act of 1902, and be termed the "Philippine legislature;" and the name instead of Pablo Ocambo should be Pablo Ocambo de Leon. I desire to thave those amendments made in the order, and for that purpose I send to the desk a new order properly drawn.

The order was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the privileges of the floor be extended to Benito Legarda and Pablo Ocambo de Leon, Resident Commissioners to the United States, elected by the Philippine legislature in accordance with the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1902.

COOSA RIVER BRIDGE, ALABAMA.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13102) to authorize the county of Elmore, Ala., to construct a bridge across Coosa River, Alabama, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, to add at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act shall be erected at sufficient height above the water of said river at high and low water stage to permit the free and easy passage of steamboats and other water crafts navigating and accustomed to navigate the Alabama and Coosa rivers, or shall be constructed a drawbridge, subject to such regulations for the security of navigation below the Coosa and Alabama rivers as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BUST OF PRESIDENT ZACHARY TAYLOR.

Mr. DANIEL. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1048) authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase a bust of President Zachary Taylor, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase of Mrs. Lola Wood, widow and sole executrix of John Taylor Wood (who was a grandson of President Zachary Taylor) a bust of President Zachary Taylor in her possession for a sum not exceeding $2,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 5343) to authorize the President to appoint as a passed assistant engineer in the Navy Henry Worthing Robie, and place him on the retired list, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WETMORE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5344) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Allen;

A bill (S. 5345) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. J. Miller;

A bill (S. 5346) granting an increase of pension to Susan A. Dolloff; and

A bill (S. 5347) granting an increase of pension to James A. Bowden.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 5348) for the relief of Matthew Burns, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5349) for the relief of Madison County, Ky.;

A bill (S. 5350) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Raywick, Ky.;

A bill (S. 5351) for the relief of Frank W. Clark;

A bill (S. 5352) for the relief of George W. Smith;

A bill (S. 5353) for the relief of the estate of R. M. McClelland, deceased; and

A bill (S. 5354) for the relief of Mrs. Helen S. Hogan.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5355) granting an increase of pension to John Masters; and

A bill (S. 5356) granting a pension to George W. Bowling (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. CULLOM introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5357) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Konigstein; and

A bill (S. 5358) granting an increase of pension to W. H. Reid.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (S. 5359) to amend an act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia, approved June 18, 1898;

A bill (S. 5360) authorizing the extension of Girard street NW. from its western terminus to Fifteenth street NW.; and

A bill (S. 5361) to regulate the establishment and maintenance of private hospitals and asylums in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHYTE introduced a bill (S. 5362) for the relief of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, Md., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 5363) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Franklin, La., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5364) granting an increase of pension to Maberry Riggs; and

A bill (S. 5365) granting an increase of pension to Christian R. Harmon.

Mr. du PONT introduced a bill (S. 5366) granting an increase of pension to Adele Jeanette Hughes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 5367) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DICK introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5368) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo D. Holcomb;

A bill (S. 5369) granting an increase of pension to Bertha Forbriger; and

A bill (S. 5370) granting an increase of pension to William E. Thompson.

Mr. ANKENY introduced a bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to George Hazzard, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 5372) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Col. John Green, retired, to be a brigadier-general, United States Army, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRANE introduced a bill (S. 5373) granting an increase of pension to James H. Wright, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5374) to place William F. Greeley on the retired list of the Army, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMOOT introduced a bill (S. 5375) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth B. Bean, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5376) for the relief of James T. Dowdy;

A bill (S. 5377) for the relief of the estate of Robert Pruitt, deceased;

A bill (S. 5378) for the relief of heirs and estate of William Wann, deceased;

A bill (S. 5379) for the relief of heirs and estate of Andrew J. Peacock, deceased;

A bill (S. 5380) for the relief of George P. Plowman;

A bill (S. 5381) for the relief of heirs and estate of J. R. B. Eldridge, deceased;

A bill (S. 5382) for the relief of heirs and estate of Alfred Hambrick, deceased;

A bill (S. 5383) for the relief of heirs or estate of Alexander F. Perryman, deceased; and

A bill (S. 5384) for the relief of Lewis E. Brown.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced a bill (S. 5385) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Winston, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PERKINS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5386) granting a pension to Thomas P. Clark; and

A bill (S. 5387) granting a pension to Laura Schofield.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5388) for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5389) granting an increase of pension to Gertrude Smith;

A bill (S. 5390) granting an increase of pension to Timothy Hayne;

A bill (S. 5391) granting a pension to William Cannon;

A bill (S. 5392) granting an increase of pension to William C. Webber;

A bill (S. 5393) granting an increase of pension to William Lambert;

A bill (S. 5394) granting a pension to Mary Irvin;

A bill (S. 5395) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Ryan;

A bill (S. 5396) granting a pension to Ely L. Jones (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5397) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Jordan;

A bill (S. 5398) granting an increase of pension to Richard Carr (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5399) granting an increase of pension to Maggie A. Young.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5400) to provide oil portraits of the Chief Justice and associate justices of the United States Supreme Court from the first appointments made by President Washington to date, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5401) for the relief of C. H. and W. M. Cramp, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5402) for the recognition of the military service of noncommissioned officers and enlisted men of the United States Volunteers as commissioned officers in certain State military organizations, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 5403) extending the franking privilege, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5404) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers, who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico," approved February 6, 1907, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STONE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5405) granting an increase of pension to Emma A. Porch;

A bill (S. 5406) granting an increase of pension to William McCaw;

A bill (S. 5407) granting an increase of pension to James F. Walker (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5408) granting a pension to John McCann (with accompanying papers).

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5409) for the relief of the county of Laclede, State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 5410) for the relief of the county of Greene, State of Missouri.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 5411) for the relief of Charles Coody, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5412) granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Mitchell;

A bill (S. 5413) granting an increase of pension to Eli Lewis; and

A bill (S. 5414) granting a pension to Mercy E. Baker.

Mr. PILES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 56) making an appropriation for improvement of Grays Harbor and Chehalis River, Washington, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 to enable the Secretary of State to purchase such suitable lands and buildings as should comprise and be connected with the consular establishment and the United States court at Shanghai, China, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,373,643 to enable the Secretary of State to purchase such suitable lands and buildings as should comprise and be connected with the consular establishment in China, Japan, and Korea, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE submitted an amendment relative to the office of the chief clerk, Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted an amendment relative to the employment of six meteorological observers at $840 each at the Naval Observatory, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the purchase of suitable buildings and grounds at Paris, France, for the use of the embassy, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment directing the Secretary of the Interior to make a complete roll of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan who are entitled to participate in the funds arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims in case No. 27537, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

OCEAN-MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 28) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean-mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372 known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BROWN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws. It is short, and I ask that it be read and that it lie on the table and be printed.

The proposed amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 10, line 12, after the word "depositaries," insert:

"Provided, That all national banks having on deposit public money belonging to the United States shall pay to the United States interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, to be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury; which interest so collected shall constitute a special fund in the Treasury of the United States to be designated as a depositors' guaranty fund, and which shall be held to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used by him to reimburse depositors in national banks for losses resulting from the failure of any national banking association."

ACCOUNTS OF POSTMASTERS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a resolution calling for information, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have audited in the Sixth Auditor's Office the salary accounts of former postmasters, named on annexed memorandum schedule, who served at post-offices in Colorado in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3 1883, in his public order of February 16, 1884; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate such stated salary accounts of former postmasters as soon as they can be made ready.

Memorandum schedule.

Post-office in Colorado.	Postmaster.	When presented to Postmaster-General for payment.	Biennial term in which salary is not paid.	Estimate of whole salary earned.	Estimate of whole salary paid.	Estimate of salary unpaid.
Arvada	Benj. F. Wadsworth	1884	70-72	$46	$24	$22
Do	do	1884	72-74	40	26	14
Badito	Chas. O. Unfug	1884	70-72	143	64	79
Big Thompson	Jas. M. Smith	1884	72-74	200	160	40
Black Hawk	H. M. Orahood	1883	64-66	1,800	810	960
Boonville	Albert G. Boone	1884	64-66	262	90	172
Boulder	R. J. Woodward	1884	70-72	429	231	198
Do	do	1884	72-74	2,500	1,460	1,040
Do	A. J. Mackey	1883	64-66	287	212	75
Do	do	1883	66-68	420	283	133
Do	do	1883	68-70	563	440	123
Breckenridge	Marshall Silverthorn.	1883	68-70	185	136	49
Do	do	1883	68-70	260	220	40
Do	do	1883	72-74	340	280	60
Canon City	B. F. Rockafeller	1883	70-72	790	320	470
Do	do	1883	72-74	1,500	980	520
Do	S. M. Cox	1883	68-70	310	220	90
Caribou	W. F. Sears	1884	72-74	1,000	780	220
Colorado City	Emile Gehrung	1884	68-70	330	280	50
Do	do	1884	70-72	830	400	430
Colorado Springs	John Potter	1885	72-74	4,050	2,750	1,300
Conejos	Herman Schiffer	1884	72-74	135	104	31
Do	Lafayette Head	1884	64-66	43	14	29
Edgerton	Harlan M. Teachout	1884	70-72	95	24	71
El Paso	Jas. Woodbury	1883	70-72	182	24	158
Empire	Jas. W. Drips	1884	64-66	330	213	117
Erie	R. J. Van Valkenburg.	1884	70-72	180	24	156
Evans	W. J. Kram	1884	70-72	400	205	191
Fair Play	L. F. Vallton	1884	68-70	720	620	100
Do	Albert B. Crook	1885	72-74	1,100	860	240
Do	H. L. Hitchcock	1883	66-68	285	82	203
Fort Collins	P. D. McClanahan	1884	70-72	220	24	196
Do	Jos. Mason	1884	66-68	216	12	204
Do	do	1884	68-70	220	24	196
Fort Lyon	Samuel G. Bridges	1883	72-74	900	660	240
Fountain	C. I. Croft	1884	72-74	335	220	115
Do	A. H. Terrell	1884	66-68	95	46	49
Do	do	1884	70-72	127	50	77
Do	E. H. Gould	1884	72-74	172	110	62
Golden	Chas. H. Danforth	1884	70-72	1,800	1,200	600
Golden	Chas. H. Danforth	1884	66-68	$450	$225	$225
Do	Jonas M. Johnson	1884	64-66	320	147	173
Golden City	Geo. R. Kimball	1885	72-74	3,200	2,400	800
Granada	M. W. Robbins	1884	72-74	212	12	200
Granite	Chas. Mater	1884	72-74	200	150	50
Greeley	Jas. B. Flower	1884	72-74	3,200	2,800	400
Greenland	A. Arnold	1885	72-74	52	12	40
Hamilton	Geo. L. Hopson	1884	72-74	155	114	41
Helena	Andrew Bard	1885	70-72	47	34	13
Hugo	Wm. A. Hill	1884	72-74	30	12	18
Hutchinson	W. Head	1885	72-74	40	12	28
Idaho Springs	Geo. A. Patten	1883	72-74	900	600	300
Littleton	Richard S. Little	1884	70-72	57	24	33
Montezuma	W. W. Webster	1883	70-72	40	24	16
Do	do	1886	72-74	40	12	28
Monument	J. C. Henry Limbach	1883	70-72	140	24	116
Oro City	H. A. W. Tabor	1884	68-70	310	44	266
Do	do	1884	72-74	440	320	120
Pueblo	J. W. O. Snyder	1883	68-70	1,440	940	500
Do	Wm. Ingersoll	1884	70-72	3,000	1,600	1,400
Do	J. J. Thomas	1884	66-68	850	620	230
Do	Mark G. Bradford	1886	64-66	348	74	274
Riverside	Geo. Leonhardy	1885	72-74	62	12	50
Rockyford	Ashael Russell	1883	72-74	62	12	50
Rollinsville	Fred. T. Gooch	1883	70-72	100	24	76
Saguache	Robert Jones	1884	72-74	102	33	69
Sedalia	Henry M. Clay	1885	72-74	72	12	60
South Arkansas	John D. McPherson	1883	70-72	59	24	35
Spanish Bar	Sylvester Edwards	1883	64-66	200	50	150
Spring Valley	Jos. Giles	1884	66-68	80	52	28
Do	do	1884	70-72	150	106	44
Trinidad	H. A. Baraclough	1884	68-70	770	460	310
Do	do	1884	70-72	1,260	920	340
Do	do	1884	72-74	1,720	1,420	300
Ula	Jos. A. Davis	1886	72-74	300	150	150
Walsenburg	Fred. Walsenburgh	1884	70-72	38	24	14
Do	do	1884	72-74	52	12	40

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. Does it propose to call for a list of postmasters all over the United States under the Spalding Act?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is limited to Colorado.

Mr. KEAN. Is present consideration asked?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The present consideration of the resolution is requested.

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

INLAND WATERWAY FROM MOBILE BAY.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of an inland waterway from Mobile Bay to Perdido Bay, in the State of Alabama, and from said Perdido Bay to Escambia Bay, in the State of Florida, for the purpose of estimating the probable cost of the construction of a canal 300 feet wide by 9 feet deep, or of such width and depth as will be sufficient to permit of the navigation of such vessels as ordinarily navigate said bays, and for other purposes.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4050.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that by a unanimous-consent agreement the so-called "shipping bill" was to be considered this morning immediately after the morning business was concluded. I will further state that, because I have been unable to collect some necessary data which I desire to present to the Senate, I shall not ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be carried out to-day, but will ask to have the date changed from Monday to Wednesday. I make that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of Senate bill 28 immediately following the conclusion of the morning business to-day shall be changed to the same time on Wednesday next. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FORT MARION RESERVATION, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to authorize the sale of certain parts of Fort Marion Reservation in the city of St. Augustine, Fla.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY HOME FOR EX-UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4920) to provide a temporary home in the District of Columbia for ex-Union volunteer soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to object to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire if there shall be no discussion on the bill. By an arrangement made at an earlier date the Senate is to have an executive session to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that if there is to be discussion on the bill, I will withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 4, page 2, line 25, to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase, repair, remodeling, and equipment of such home, to be expended by the Secretary of War for that purpose, upon conference with said board of managers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 485) to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. 1256) for the relief of Pope & Talbot, of San Francisco, Cal.

PUBLIC EDUCATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning after the regular routine morning business the Senate shall take up and consider Order of Business 177, Senate bill 4032.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that at the close of the routine morning business to-morrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4032.

Mr. McCREARY. What is the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Let the bill be read by title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. Under Rule IX, Order of Business 177, a bill (S. 4032) to establish the direction and control of public education in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska that on the day following to-morrow I shall be obliged to leave the city for several days, and I wish to-morrow morning, after the close of the morning business, to occupy something like thirty or forty minutes of the time of the Senate in submitting some remarks on what is known as the Aldrich bill, amending the national banking laws.

Mr. BURKETT. I will change my request, then. I will not call it up, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, until after the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I rise to make an inquiry. It is whether agreeing to the request will make the bill the unfinished business or that it will take any place further than to-morrow morning? If it does, I will object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will have preference up to the hour of 2 o'clock.

Mr. CLAPP. That will be for to-morrow?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. For to-morrow.

Mr. CLAPP. Will that condition be carried over into the succeeding day?

Mr. GALLINGER and others. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not unless it is so agreed. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLAPP. I object if it gives the bill any place beyond to-morrow.

Mr. FRYE. It would not cover any place except to-morrow.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BACON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska. In reply to the Senator from Missouri he stated that he would not call up the bill until after his speech, but if there is a unanimous-consent agreement to take it up at a certain time the Senator can not change that unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BURKETT. I change my request so as to make it apply after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska, which is that following some remarks to be made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4032.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ALLISON. I rose to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it is his intention that the consideration of the measure shall go beyond 2 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. BURKETT. It is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

INQUIRY AS TO CERTAIN WESTERN LAND GRANTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of February 3, 1908, requesting the President "if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Justice with respect to the matters and things in the preamble to this resolution set forth." I transmit herewith a letter from the Attorney-General, together with a statement showing in detail the information received by the Department of Justice with respect to land grants made in the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869; also the act approved May 4, 1870, which is subject to the partial forfeiture imposed by the act approved January 31, 1885.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 17, 1908.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 18, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 17, 1908.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Charles P. Grandfield, of Missouri, to be First Assistant Postmaster-General, vice Frank H. Hitchcock, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

William L. Day, of Ohio, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Ohio, vice John J. Sullivan, whose term expired January 13, 1908.

INDIAN AGENT.

Lawrence F. Michael, of Gettysburg, S. Dak., to be agent for the Indians of the Lower Brule Agency in South Dakota, vice Robert H. Somers, term expired.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

General officer.

Col. Daniel H. Brush, Twenty-fourth Infantry, to be brigadier-general from February 17, 1908, vice Davis, retired from active service.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Corps of Engineers.

Lieut. Col. William H. Bixby, Corps of Engineers, to be colonel from February 14, 1908, vice Davis, appointed brigadier-general.

Maj. Edward Burr, Corps of Engineers, to be lieutenant-colonel from February 14, 1908, vice Bixby, promoted.

Capt. James B. Cavanaugh, Corps of Engineers, to be major from February 14, 1908, vice Burr, promoted.

First Lieut. Clarence O. Sherrill, Corps of Engineers, to be captain from February 14, 1908, vice Cavanaugh, promoted.

Second Lieut. Thomas H. Emerson, Corps of Engineers, to be first lieutenant from February 14, 1908, vice Sherrill, promoted.

TO BE PLACED ON THE RETIRED LIST.

Maj. Thomas Swobe, quartermaster, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. George L. Goodale, quartermaster, with the rank of major.

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

F. G. Briggs to be postmaster at Judsonia, White County, Ark. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

J. A. Steele to be postmaster at Lewisville, Lafayette County, Ark., in place of Frederick W. Youmans. Incumbent's commission expires April 27, 1908.

ILLINOIS.

T. P. Hawkins to be postmaster at Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., in place of William W. Colt. Incumbent's commission expired November 24, 1907.

Edward W. Hilker to be postmaster at Madison, Madison County, Ill., in place of Edward W. Hilker. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1908.

KENTUCKY.

E. S. Morrison to be postmaster at Latonia, Kenton County, Ky., in place of Frank W. Stith, resigned.

Everett P. Taylor to be postmaster at Beaver Dam, Ohio County, Ky. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

LOUISIANA.

John T. Charnley to be postmaster at Alexandria, Rapides Parish, La., in place of John W. Miller. Incumbent's commission expires February 18, 1908.

MAINE.

Isaac Dyer to be postmaster at Skowhegan, Somerset County, Me., in place of Isaac Dyer. Incumbent's commission expired February 12, 1908.

NEBRASKA.

David S. Beynon to be postmaster at Burwell, Garfield County, Nebr., in place of David S. Beynon. Incumbent's commission expires February 29, 1908.

Henry C. Hooker to be postmaster at Leigh, Colfax County, Nebr. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

Edward M. Parker to be postmaster at Guide Rock, Webster County, Nebr. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Frank S. Huckins to be postmaster at Ashland, Grafton County, N. H., in place of Frank S. Huckins. Incumbent's commission expired February 1, 1908.

Jesse C. Parker to be postmaster at Hillsboro (late Hillsboro Bridge), Hillsboro County, N. H., in place of Jesse C. Parker, to change name of office.

NEW JERSEY.

William R. Poe to be postmaster at Glen Ridge (late Glenridge), Essex County, N. J., in place of William R. Poe, to change name of office.

NEW YORK.

Austin Hicks to be postmaster at Great Neck, Nassau County, N. Y., in place of Austin Hicks. Incumbent's commission expired January 18, 1908.

James M. Requa to be postmaster at Tarrytown, Westchester County, N. Y., in place of James M. Requa. Incumbent's commission expired November 19, 1907.

Winfield S. Spencer to be postmaster at New Rochelle, Westchester County, N. Y., in place of Winfield S. Spencer. Incumbent's commission expires February 20, 1908.

NORTH CAROLINA.

J. Sanford Patterson to be postmaster at Spray, Rockingham County, N. C., in place of J. Sanford Patterson. Incumbent's commission expires February 29, 1908.

OHIO.

Frederick G. Withoft to be postmaster at Dayton, Montgomery County, Ohio, in place of Frederick G. Withoft. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1908.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John C. Crissman to be postmaster at Arnold, Westmoreland County, Pa. Office became Presidential October 1, 1906.

TEXAS.

John W. Chichester to be postmaster at Eagle Pass, Maverick County, Tex., in place of Charles W. Burr, deceased.

Orion L. Niccolls to be postmaster at Marfa, Presidio County, Tex., in place of Orion L. Niccolls. Incumbent's commission expired January 27, 1908.

Jacob A. Wright to be postmaster at Crowell, Foard County, Tex. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

VIRGINIA.

Charles W. Wickes to be postmaster at Newmarket, Shenandoah County, Va. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

WASHINGTON.

William M. Clemenson to be postmaster at Clarkston, Asotin County, Wash., in place of William M. Clemenson. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1908.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate February 17, 1908.

Otis Mouser to be postmaster at Stonega, in the State of Virginia.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 17, 1908.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Thomas Ward, jr., of Colorado, to be United States attorney for the district of Colorado.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Lieut. Col. William W. Wotherspoon, Nineteenth Infantry, to be brigadier-general.

Col. Ramsay D. Potts, Fifth Field Artillery, to be brigadier-general from January 31, 1908.

Capt. Charles S. Walkley, chaplain, Coast Artillery Corps, to be chaplain with the rank of major from February 6, 1908.

Corps of Engineers.

Capt. Jay J. Morrow, Corps of Engineers, to be major from January 31, 1908.

First Lieut. Edward N. Johnston, Corps of Engineers, to be captain from January 31, 1908.

Second Lieut. Jarvis J. Bain, Corps of Engineers, to be first lieutenant from January 31, 1908.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

Coast Artillery Corps.

Quartermaster-Sergt. Clarence E. Seybt, Third Company Coast Artillery Corps, to be second lieutenant from January 1, 1908.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Arthur G. Fisk to be postmaster at San Francisco, San Francisco County, Cal.

ILLINOIS.

Frank Nickerel to be postmaster at Collinsville, Madison County, Ill.

Benjamin F. Shaw to be postmaster at Dixon, Lee County, Ill.

IOWA.

John B. Cook to be postmaster at Farley, Dubuque County, Iowa.

Frank E. Lundell to be postmaster at Stratford, Hamilton County, Iowa.

Zenas G. Preston to be postmaster at Woodward, Dallas County, Iowa.

NEW MEXICO.

Henry Rankin to be postmaster at Elida, Roosevelt County, N. Mex.

OKLAHOMA.

Frances K. Ahern to be postmaster at Frederick, in the county of Comanche and State of Oklahoma.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Edward Hunter to be postmaster at Patton, Cambria County, Pa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 17, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAY reserved all points of order on the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12420. An act to extend immediate transportation privileges to the subport of Alburg, in the customs collection district of Vermont;

H. R. 9218. An act to amend an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes;"

H. R. 14040. An act to authorize the County of Ashley, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties;

H. R. 14781. An act to authorize Campbell County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across Powells River;

H. R. 13430. An act to authorize the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the city of Hammond, Ind.;

H. R. 6231. An act to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district;

H. R. 2756. An act for the relief of L. K. Scott;

H. R. 12398. An act to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain land now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation; and

H. R. 16050. An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Company to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

THE THIRTEENTH CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER, chairman of the Committee on the Census, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial census, which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 201.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands compensation at the rate of $1,400 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments until otherwise provided for by law: Provided, That the pay of such clerk shall commence from the time of entry upon the discharge of the duties, which shall be ascertained by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4 strike out the word "four" and insert the word "two."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from West Virginia explain to the House why this new clerk is found to be necessary?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will explain. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, appeared before the Committee on Accounts and stated that there were so many bills before his committee that it was impossible for him to consider them with the force that the committee has at present, and that it was necessary to give him an additional clerk or to allow the work to suffer for want of attention. He further stated that up to this time he had employed an assistant clerk who was doing this work and was paying him out of his own pocket.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not make any objection to the passage of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, but I want to call attention to the fact that we are providing a great many new clerks at this session. In this case it seems to be warranted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of resolution No. 156.

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, compensation at the rate of $6 per day during the present session, the pay of said clerk to commence from the date on which he entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the chairman of said committee."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from West Virginia explain the necessity for this, also. Is this a clerk that the Committee on Enrolled Bills has usually had?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. It is customary at this time of the session to give them this clerk. This is the usual resolution. One clerk can not prepare the bills, and for that reason the urgent deficiency appropriation bill the other day was not examined at the time it should have been, because the Enrolling Committee did not have the force required.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then this is not any addition to the usual expense?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. This is the usual expenditure for a session clerk.

The resolution was agreed to.

JANITOR FOR OFFICE OF JOURNAL CLERK.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of House resolutions Nos. 199 and 230.

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House compensation at the rate of $720 per annum for the services of a janitor in the office of the Journal clerk, and an additional room assigned to the members of the press, under the direction of the Clerk of the House, until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for this?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. This janitor is needed on account of the Journal clerk's room being moved upstairs. At present they have no janitor. There was also a resolution introduced for another janitor for the press gallery, and instead of allowing one for each of these rooms we allowed one to take care of both rooms, as they are located near each other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this, then, a decrease?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. No; this is an additional janitor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it is an increase of one janitor.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the necessity of additional labor this session over last?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from West Virginia will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that in the rearrangement of rooms the Journal clerk was moved to the floor above and an additional room was set apart for the press, where they have a lot of typewriting machines, so as to expedite the work of the reporters of the press. I introduced a resolution to assign a janitor and messenger to the Journal clerk's office and another resolution, at the request of the reporters of the press gallery, to assign a janitor and messenger to the rooms set apart for their typewriting machines. Of course I accept with equanimity the recommendation for a single janitor, though I think I can assure the gentleman, my own committee room being on the same floor there and seeing the necessity of it, that in the end he will find that they will need, each of them, a janitor and a messenger.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it has been complained that the Committee on Accounts should have allowed a janitor to each of those rooms who should also act as messengers. The committee thought one janitor sufficient, but so far as I am concerned I think perhaps two would have better served the purpose. The janitor we provide will also perform messenger duty. That is the custom and the requirement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CONTINUING ACT MARKING GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 138, to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 138.

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for two years from this date: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery at Chicago: And provided further, That the compensation of the commissioner shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

With the following amendment:

Line 10, strike out "this" and insert "said."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution as amended.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS WHITE RIVER, KNOX COUNTY, IND.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16956) to authorize the Hydro-Electric Company to construct a dam across White River near the village of Decker, in Knox County, Ind., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Hydro-Electric Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, its successors and assigns be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the White River on the boundary line between the counties of Knox and Gibson, at some point within 2 miles of the northeast corner of the township of White River, in said county of Gibson, in the State of Indiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following amendments:

Line 6, page 1, strike out "On the boundary line between the counties of Knox and Gibson."

Line 8, strike out "Within 2 miles of the northeast corner of the township of White River, in said county of Gibson," and insert: "Near the village of Decker, Knox County."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANEY. I would like to ask if the Secretary of War has given his recommendation for this dam?

Mr. LANDIS. I would say that he has.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

BONDING TUSCON, ARIZ.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tuscon, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 109, line 14, in order to move to strike out the word "eight," and insert the word "two." The eight special agents which are indicated in the bill should be simply two.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 109, line 14, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "two."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent simply to correct a total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to correct a total. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 116, line 24, strike out "twenty thousand three" and insert "twenty-one thousand two."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. One more additional amendment, which is simply a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 118, in line 11, strike out "six thousand eight hundred and twenty" and insert "two thousand two hundred and seventy."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office First Assistant Postmaster-General: For First Assistant Postmaster-General, $6,000; chief clerk, $2,500; superintendent division of salaries and allowances, $4,000; assistant superintendent division of salaries and allowances, $2,250; chief, division of correspondence, $2,000; nine clerks of class 4; seven clerks of class 3 (including one transferred from office of Postmaster-General); eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; ten clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; four assistant messengers; one laborer; two pages, at $360 each; in all, $88,250.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "six thousand dollars," on page 132, line 24, as being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order against the words "six thousand dollars," on page 132, as being a change of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in line 24, page 132, I move to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24, page 132, strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five," so as to read "$5,000."

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the current law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Second Assistant Postmaster-General: For Second Assistant Postmaster-General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; superintendent division of railway adjustments, $2,500; assistant superintendent division of railway adjustment and law clerk, $2,250; superintendent division of foreign mails, $3,000; chief clerk division of foreign mails, $2,000; chief division of inspection, $2,000; chief division of contracts, $2,000; chief division of equipment, $2,000; twelve clerks of class 4; forty-one clerks of class 3; thirty-five clerks of class 2; twenty-eight clerks of class 1; eighteen clerks, at $1,000 each; six clerks, at $900 each; messenger in charge of mails, $900; seven assistant messengers; in all, $222,390.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "five thousand dollars," in lines 2 and 3, page 134, as being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order against the words "five thousand dollars," in lines 2 and 3, page 134, as being an increase of salary. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, page 134, line 2, after the words "Assistant Postmaster-General," strike out the words "five thousand dollars" and insert the words "four thousand five hundred dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 134, after the word "General," insert the words "four thousand five hundred dollars."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of railway mail service: General superintendent, $4,000; assistant general superintendent, $3,500; chief clerk, office of general superintendent, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; six clerks of class 2; five clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; in all, $40,400.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which is simply a correction in the print.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 135, in line 2, strike out "four" and insert "three."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to print in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a speech recently delivered in New York City by the Hon. William J. Bryan on currency reform. It is an excellent speech on a topic of much moment, and, in my judgment, it should be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the benefit of the Members of Congress and the people of the country. It sheds much light on a most engrossing subject, in which all the people take a deep and abiding interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech is as follows:

CURRENCY REFORM.

[Speech of William Jennings Bryan at Economic Club dinner, Hotel Astor, New York, February 5, 1908. Victor Morawetz, Andrew Carnegie, and Hon. Lyman J. Gage, former Secretary of the Treasury, preceded Mr. Bryan.]

Mr. STETSON. I think that Mr. Gage underestimated his power as a pulpit orator, yet I do not think he can hold a rushlight in that capacity to the next gentleman, whom I regard as the greatest pulpit orator of our day, Mr. Bryan. [Great and continuous applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have had a number of delusions shattered here to-night. I had understood that for the last forty-seven years our financial affairs had been in the hands of men who possessed all the qualities that Mr. Gage has suggested a commission should possess. And now to learn from excellent American and Scottish authority that we not only have the worst system in the world, but worse than he, with his fruitful imagination, could imagine, what shall I say to my people when I go back home? How shall I explain that three conspicuous financiers, who have given this subject great thought, and who know all the intricacies of finance, should be agreed upon but one proposition, and that is that they do not know what ought to be done. [Applause and laughter.]

I am assured by one of them that that is not a fair statement. I will withdraw any statement that is considered unfair, although it seems to me that after I have traveled 1,500 miles to drink in wisdom from authoritative sources, it is a breach of promise at least [laughter] not to give me some information. And yet, as each one approached the important part of the subject, he concluded that we ought to have a commission to consider the matter. Is it not strange that the commission is always resorted to by those who do not care to elaborate before an election a plan that might not be popular at the election? [Great applause.] Is it not strange that all of our great financial programmes are brought out just after the election, when the people can not sit in judgment upon the subject? [Applause.]

The time allotted to me is not sufficient to answer all of the financial fallacies that have been advanced to-night. I, the champion of sound money [great laughter], have not time to defend the honest dollar from the attacks that have been made upon it. [Laughter.] And as I listened to those from whom I expected some clear, specific remedy, I was reminded of the words of the Great Apostle, and I do not know but I might paraphrase those words and say: "That sound finance which ye ignorantly worship, that come I to declare unto you." [Great laughter and applause.]

When I defend anything that we have in finance, you will not accuse me of defending anything with which I have had any connection. These greenbacks that have been described in uncomplimentary language were not issued by me or by my party. [Laughter.] But it seems to me that it is straining a point to denounce the Government for issuing three hundred and forty-six millions of promises to pay, bearing no interest, when he (Ex-Secretary Gage) does not denounce the issue of seven hundred millions of banks' promises to pay, that bear no interest. If a bank's promise to pay, bearing no interest, is fit to serve as money, why should not a government's promise to pay, bearing no interest, be fit to serve as money?

I understood that the subject to-night is the currency question as it presents itself at this time, and therefore it is not necessary to discuss our whole financial system. I do not want to enter into the discussion of a subject as large as our financial system. But I remind you, that if we follow the suggestion that nothing but gold be considered good for reserve, then we will either have to stop making deposits in the banks or increase our gold, so that we can keep in the banks a reserve large enough to protect the banks in the doing of their business. [Applause.] We have not the gold in this country, and we can not get it without drawing gold from countries that need it. If we draw the gold from other countries and discard the use of money that serves to-day in the place of gold, then the effect must be to diminish prices in foreign countries and lessen their ability to trade with us.

To-day we hold in our reserves not only gold, but silver and silver certificates and greenbacks. And the silver and silver certificates and greenbacks amount to nine hundred and forty-six millions—six hundred millions of silver and three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks. We have about twelve hundred millions of gold in the country; that is the best estimate that I have been able to get. Now, if we are going to discard, as has been suggested, the use of silver and greenbacks, we must go somewhere and get nine hundred and forty-six millions of dollars of gold, and it will not be an easy matter. How can we get it? I will tell you one way to get it—make the farmer sell his foreign export for less, and lay upon him the burden of getting the money to substitute for silver and the greenback. That may please some, but I am not surprised that it is not advanced seriously pending a campaign, for it would not please the producing masses of the country. [Applause.]

It is not my business to explain this panic. I have not felt as much of it as some of you have. In fact, my connection with it has not been embarrassing. [Laughter.] And, politically, my connection with it has been anything but embarrassing, for it has at least robbed the country of the argument that my party was the only party under whose administration a panic could come. [Great laughter and applause.]

If I were a financier and my word was good on finance, I would say that, instead of locating the blame on too large an issue of paper money, it ought to be located on the issue of stocks and bonds that do not represent value or even honesty in business. [Great applause.] The gentleman, ex-Secretary Gage, did me the honor to quote something that I said last night. I am glad that he quoted it; I was afraid it would not get into the papers. The fact that he quoted it shows that it appeared in print, and I am gratified. And, my friends, I do not overstate it. In fact, knowing that I was where language was carefully examined, I was especially cautious as to the use of language, and I shall not put this Government, which bought silver at 60 cents and coined it into a dollar, in the same category or company with those who floated the billions of dollars of stocks and bonds that represented nothing but the expectation that those who issued them would, unmolested, reach their hands into the pockets of the people and draw from them dividends to which they were not entitled. The Government did buy silver at 60 cents and coin it into a dollar, and no man who took the dollar ever lost one cent. That can not be said of the men who took the securities and suffered a shrinkage of one-half. So much for the cause of the panic.

But, my friends, the study of causes does not help us unless it suggests remedies, and it seems to me it is time to suggest remedies. I have heard that elastic currency was necessary. I am led to the conclusion to-night that we have overestimated the need for elasticity, for if we can postpone for a year the getting of that elasticity merely because the campaign is on, the need is not as urgent as I have been led to think. [Great applause and laughter.] I have been losing sleep at night [cries of "You don't look like it!"] wondering how long it would be before we could respond to the urgent need for elastic currency. I had been anxious that as little time should intervene as possible and have been much disturbed by the failure of our advisers to agree upon some plan which would at once relieve the stringency. We have two bills in Congress, one known as the "Aldrich bill" and one known as the "Fowler bill." The Aldrich bill attempts to provide an emergency currency by the issue of bank notes upon certain specific securities deposited with the Government. The Fowler bill contemplates an entire change in our bank currency. It is even more radical than that proposed by the Aldrich bill. At present the bank notes rest on Government bonds, and I do not think it is so absurd, as Mr. Gage seems to, that the Government should make its bonds the basis of notes, if we are to have bank notes, nor that the Government should guarantee the notes that rest upon its own bonds. And the stringency is not now as great as it would have been if there had been doubt as to the ability of the banks to redeem their notes. The best feature of the bank note is the Government guaranty. When men take it, they do not ask whether the bank is a good one; they take it because the Government is back of it. Here is the difficulty about the emergency currency proposed. It must either be a bank currency or a Government currency, and those who want a bank currency seem to be so determined that it shall be a bank currency that they are not willing that the distress shall be relieved by a Government currency. In other words, the principle involved is to them more than the need to be supplied. Certainly the emergency is not great if it can be postponed or defeated merely because you have to accept a Government note instead of a bank note. The first thing to be considered is whether this should be a Government note or a bank note. If I were discussing the Aldrich bill, there are several features which I would criticise—one of them the use of the railroad bond as a security.

If I were discussing the Fowler bill there are a number of features of that bill that I would criticise. The Aldrich bill proposes a bank note resting on various kinds of bonds, and the Fowler bill proposes a bank note resting upon no bonds, but upon the assets of the banks. I prefer that the emergency currency shall be a United States note, and not a bank note at all. I am not afraid to trust the United States; I am not afraid to have its notes issued. And I remind those who are fond of bank notes that when gold and silver went to a premium the banker did not take the trouble to go out and find gold and silver. The greenback was good enough for him; he redeemed bank notes with it. Concede the point that this note shall be a Government note and it will be easy then to agree upon the security upon which it shall be loaned. And, my friends, I would not appreciate your courtesy as I do if I did not speak to you frankly. I do not live in New York; I am some distance from New York; but we in the West have had experience. How many banks have suspended in New York? How many in Brooklyn? Our experience teaches us that it is better to trust the Government than to trust the financiers in the control of money. If any of you think that proposition unsound, present the opposite proposition and give the voters a chance to express themselves. This is a Government of 80,000,000 people and not a Government of 6,000 bank presidents. No financial system can be expected to be permanent in this country that does not have back of it the hearty approval of the public. We are told that this must be left to a commission made up of men who will put their patriotism above their party. Financiers are not the only patriotic men. You can find men in every hamlet who put their patriotism above their party. A few people can not settle these things for the rest of the people. If you appoint your commission the bill when it comes in has to be passed upon by all the people, through their representatives in Congress. Now, if you concede the point that the Government shall issue the money, then it becomes a matter of detail. The Government can meet the need simply and quickly, and I believe provision should be made for the issue by the Government of the United States notes like our greenbacks in form and in redemption, and that these United States notes should be loaned by the Government upon sufficient security and at a rate of interest which will compel the retirement of the notes when the emergency is over. I am not sure but we could combine the suggestions made in different bills. One suggests that bonds be deposited—State, county, and municipal bonds—and we have between two and three billions of them. They would make a good basis. All the Government needs is security, if it is going to loan the money, and these would make good security.

I do not think that railway or industrial bonds ought to be used for such security. Mr. M. E. Ingalls suggests that the country be divided into clearing-house districts, enough so that there will be a representation of the needs of different communities. He suggests that these clearing houses might borrow from the Government on collateral other than bonds. I will go further than that. If we create a district and authorize the clearing house of the district to bind all the banks of the district, the Government could loan money to it without any specific security, for it has back of it all the assets of all the banks. And if the loan was limited to a certain per cent—say, for instance, to 20 or 25 per cent of the total capital and surplus of the banks—there could be no loss to the Government. But there is no difficulty about details. If we need emergency currency, if elasticity is desired, it is possible to provide it without any change in our monetary system. Without any innovations at all, it is possible to provide all the elasticity for which anybody can show a need. And are we asking too much when we insist that this shall be in the control of the Government and not in the hands of individuals?

What we need, I think, even more than an increase in our currency is confidence. Think of it! [Applause.] I am now the evangel of confidence. I am now the "advance agent" of confidence. If we can bring money from hiding and hoarding and get it into the banks, the banks will have more money to loan than we can possibly furnish them by any emergency currency. What we need to-day is to restore confidence in the depositors. John Wanamaker was quoted as saying—I can not rely entirely on what the newspapers say—but he was quoted as saying that a billion dollars was hidden under carpets. The Government only loaned the banks about $250,000,000, and if Mr. Wanamaker is right, we have four times as much in hiding. The Postmaster-General, in recommending a postal savings bank, says that we are sending out many millions every year to be deposited in Government banks in Europe, by people who are not willing to trust our banks. The people of this country are being driven to the postal savings bank because they need a place to deposit their money where they can get it when they want it. Some of you have thought me very anxious to enlarge the work of the Government. I have never insisted that the Government should undertake any business that could be done satisfactorily by the individual. I believe in individualism. I want the individual to have the largest possible sphere of action.

And only where it is impossible for the individual to act, or unsafe for the community that he should act, have I suggested that the Government should act. I have believed for years that if the banks did not allow the banking to be made safe they would drive the country to the postal savings bank. I would rather have the banking done by the bankers than by the Government. [Applause.] I am in favor of the postal savings bank, but a postal savings bank is only an alternative to be selected if we can not get the security that the people demand.

And to-day the greatest need we have is legislation that will make people feel that when they deposit money in the banks they can go and get it whenever they want it. The stringency that has spread over this country in a night has taught the people the necessity for this protection.

They tell us that the timidity which people have manifested is not justified. That is generally true. I am not prepared to speak for this community, but I am sure that in the West there is no reasonable excuse for this timidity. [Laughter.] Our crops have been bountiful; our prices have been good; our people have money; they fill the banks with their money, and there was so much that they sent a large part of it down here to New York to be invested, and they have been waiting—waiting—waiting for its return. [Laughter.] Our banks are good, and yet, my friends, when a bank suspends payment on checks you need not be surprised if the ultratimid become alarmed and want to get their money out. [Laughter.] If I was a banker I would not be proud of a system that had to run rivalry with a carpet as a safety deposit vault and have the carpet preferred in times of stress. [Laughter.] A man does not hide money under a carpet if he can find any safer place. [Laughter.] I repeat that what we need to-day is to make the bank safe. You may laugh down here in New York, but in Oklahoma—you call it a wild western State—the first thing they did was to pass a law to guarantee bank deposits. How did they do it? They authorized a banking board to collect an assessment on the 17th of this month of 1 per cent on the deposits of the banks. I think it is higher than necessary. One-half of 1 per cent would have been enough, even one-fourth of 1 per cent would have been sufficient, but they said 1 per cent, and they empowered the board to assess at any time and to any extent necessary to keep that reserve intact. And thus they put behind every bank the assets of all the banks. In anticipation of the operation of that law the bankers of Kansas petitioned their governor to call a special session of the legislature to pass a law like it so as to keep the money from being drawn out of Kansas banks and deposited in Oklahoma. [Great laughter.]

And the legislature is now in session. It will enact such a law. It has been introduced in Illinois. It has been introduced in Ohio, and I had the honor to receive an invitation from the Republican legislature of Ohio to come and address that legislature on a guaranty bank. Possibly I was invited because some fourteen years ago I tried to secure the enactment of such a law by Congress. We had a failure in our town and many poor people suffered the loss of their savings, and the hardships visited upon our community caused such a cry of distress that some one came to me—I wish I could remember his name—and suggested a guaranty fund, and I introduced in Congress a bill that provided for the collection of a small tax each year until a guaranty fund was provided. The bill provided that when a bank failed the Comptroller should, from this fund, pay every depositor immediately, so that there would be no interruption of business to the community and no loss to the depositor, and then proceed to collect the assets of the bank and reimburse the fund as far as the assets would go.

Now, that was some thirteen or fourteen years ago. What was the objection raised? That if all the banks were good, the big banks would not have any advantage over the little ones, and so it was necessary—necessary that the depositors should all be unsecured that the big banks might have an advantage over the little banks. Where is the patriotism that we have been hearing about in our financiers? Do they insist upon a system that requires that the depositor shall have his interests jeopardized and that the community shall suffer that the big banks may have an advantage over the little banks?

I went out to Nebraska and got that bill introduced there. I thought surely if we can not have it in the United States we can have it in Nebraska. [Laughter.] But when the bill came up there was a lobby of national bankers to oppose it. "Why," they said, "if State banks are safe, people will not deposit in national banks." [Laughter.] What is the objection now? Mr. Forgan, the head of one of the largest banks in Chicago, stated as his objection that it would make all banks secure. [Laughter.] What an objection! He said that, under such a system, you could just stop in any bank and deposit your money! That would be awful! [Applause.] I ask you this question my friends, Must we leave the depositor helpless? Must we leave the community helpless rather than have all banks secure? What is more important than the security of the depositor? Why not look at this question once from the standpoint of 80,000,000 of people who have lost hundreds of millions of dollars in this particular crisis that they never can get back? Is that not sufficient reason for a different plan, or shall we sit back and say: "No; it would not do to make all banks secure, for then the big banks would not have any advantage over the little banks." The big banks will still have an advantage over the little banks. It does not need to rest upon the insecurity of all. The fact that it has a large capital and surplus enables it to loan more to one individual than the small banks can. A bank can only loan one-tenth of its capital and surplus to one person, and a bank that has ten times the capital and surplus of another can accommodate the man who wants to borrow large sums. Isn't that an advantage? And then there is another advantage. It has an advantage resting upon vanity. People like to do business with the big banks; they like to go in and have the president of the biggest bank bow to them and smile. [Laughter.] Isn't that some advantage? Wouldn't that remain, even when all banks were safe?

What is the other objection? They say that if all the banks are secure and the depositor can not lose the banks will be recklessly managed. I am glad that that argument is made now, when we have seen the extreme care that is exercised under present conditions. [Laughter and applause.] My good friend here, Chairman Stetson, suggested that a difference as large as an ocean separated him from some of the speakers, and I thought I could notice a slight inclination of the head in my direction. [Laughter.] I wonder if there can be a large gulf between us on this subject. The managers become careless! Why, my friends, the officers of the bank are selected by the directors, and the directors are chosen by the stockholders, and the stockholders would lose all of their capital, all their surplus, and then they would have to respond to the 100 per cent liability deposit before any other bank could lose anything. Wouldn't that be enough to make the officers careful? If that isn't enough, suppose we try the criminal law and see if that will make them careful. What has been the difficulty with our banks? Our financiers will tell you that the banks that have failed have failed in almost every instance because the officers of the banks have violated their trust and used the money of other people to advance their own private interests! Isn't that true, Mr. Gage?

Mr. GAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Isn't that true, Mr. Baker?

Mr. BAKER (president First National Bank of New York). Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Why hasn't it been remedied? Because the managers of the bad banks don't want to be restrained and the good bank isn't anxious to have the other ones restrained, because the good bank can point to the recklessness of the others and draw away deposits.

I am not supposed to know anything about banking, and yet these distinguished men, who have shed luster on the banking business, admit that I have put my finger upon the sore place in the banking system. Now, when we make all the banks responsible for each bank, then they will be interested in effective regulation. We will find them favoring legislation that will protect the public from a misappropriation of funds. We have been asking for this regulation all the time. I introduced a bill in Congress to increase the penalty for embezzlement where the amount was large. I supposed that I would have unanimous support. I supposed the stockholders would be glad to hold over their officers the danger of a longer penal term if they were dishonest and took money, but I could not get that through. [Laughter.]

I welcome the prospect of guaranteed banks, because I think it will enable us to get some regulation that we need. For instance, I think it might help us to pass a law to make more than directory the rule that a bank shall not loan more than one-tenth of its capital and surplus to one person. A man testified in the case of a Chicago banker last summer that that law was merely directory; that if an examiner found that a bank was loaning more than 10 per cent to one man, the Department would send him a formal letter calling his attention to it, and then if he did not correct it by the next examination he might expect to be forcibly reminded by another courteous letter. Is that good banking? Is that safe and sound finance? If one-tenth of the capital and the surplus is all that ought to be loaned under our present system, if it is the judgment of those who make the law that the loan shall not exceed that, then I insist that we ought to make a criminal law to compel the officers to do that which they were directed to do by the authorities. [Applause.] Wouldn't that be a good law, Mr. Gage?

Mr. GAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Would not that be a good law, Mr. Baker?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. My friends, if I keep on I will be in standing after a while. [Laughter and applause.] Now, I think there is another thing that we ought to have. I think more of the reserve ought to be kept in the bank and less loaned. Isn't that right?

VOICES. Right again. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. If more of the reserve is kept in the bank the bank can be allowed to keep a part of it in bonds, upon which emergency notes can be borrowed from the Government. It was the deposit of western and southern reserves in New York that caused the stringency to spread throughout the country. Now, I want to remind you that for forty-seven years our laws have been made by financiers, and yet we reach the condition which confronts us to-day and eminent bankers admit here in your presence that I, a farmer from Nebraska, can suggest changes that your financiers did not think of, or at least did not put into the law. [Laughter.]

Why?

A VOICE. You ought to be right part of the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Thanks; it is a concession that I appreciate, and I wish I could return the compliment by saying that our financiers have been right even part of the time. [Great applause and laughter.]

Now, there is another safeguard. I would like to see a law that would make it a criminal offense for any bank official to become a gambler upon the stock market. Don't wait until he has lost or committed suicide, but make it criminal to begin. Save the man's life, and his honor, and his family by protecting him from the temptation.

I read a few years ago that a bank official found that the market had gone against him and shot himself, and another official who was associated with him in the bank came in and found him dead, and, knowing that he had shared in the dead man's speculation, he shot himself and fell dead across the body of the other man.

In Iowa not long ago I was told that within a radius of, I think it was 100 miles, ten bankers had committed suicide as the result of speculation. It would be a mercy to these men to protect them from this temptation. The man who has in his keeping the money of others ought to be protected, as far as law con protect him, from the temptation to gamble. Am I not right?

VOICES. You are; you are.

Mr. BRYAN. Again I am right. [Applause.]

Now I am afraid that I have talked over my time. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"] When you say, "Go on!" "Go on!" I am reminded of a fellow down in Kentucky who was making a speech. He had to leave on a certain train. When he saw the time was near for his train to depart, he said: "My train will go in a moment now," and they said, "Go on!" "Go on!" and he talked until his train had gone. Finally he stopped and said: "You see, gentlemen, that I have been persuaded by your entreaties to miss my train." They said: "Why we told you to go on." [Laughter and applause.] I am not sure just what you mean by "Go on." [Laughter.]

Now, I have said what I have upon this question because I believe it should be presented. It is not necessary to wait until the election is over to find out what ought to be done. Take a plan that appeals to the common sense of the average man and you need not be afraid to present it before election. The people of this country are the most intelligent people in the world. They want to do what is right. Some of you misunderstand our people. [Laughter.] You think we are anarchists. You think we want to injure the country. I think I am a fair representative of the average man out in the West, at least I have been able to keep in touch with him in spite of all the newspapers. He and I get along pretty well together. Why? Because I have tried to appeal to the hearts and consciences and judgments of these men. You have said that we are arraying class against class. It is false.

You have accused us of disregarding property rights. That is not true. The man who defends human rights is the best defender of property rights. [Applause.] The man who prosecutes the wrongdoer is the best friend of honesty. [Applause.] And all that we have asked is that you view this great question from the bottom and not from the top.

There is a theory that God selected a few men and endowed them with greater wisdom and fitness and then put the country in their hands. That used to be the theory. First, it was the king who could do no wrong; then it was the aristocracy that ruled; now it is the democracy.

These men, whose deposits make your banking profits; these men, whose deposits are the basis of your fortunes; these men ought to be considered—not only their interests, but their opinions. You like to persuade a man that the bank is a good place to deposit his money, and if his judgment is good when you are trying to persuade him to deposit his money in your bank, trust his judgment a little when he wants to regulate the methods to be employed by those who have charge of his money. [Applause.] We will have to meet this issue some time, and we may as well do so frankly and boldly now. If our finances had been conducted as they ought to have been, there would have been no stringency now. If you tell me that you need an elastic currency, I will take your word for it, but if you tell me that you object to it unless you can hold both ends of the elastic, I will tell you that you do not need it as much as you thought you did. Trust the Government, the representatives elected by the people. These men, acting in the open and responsible to their constituents, are more trustworthy than those who act behind closed doors and are responsible to no one but themselves. I think you will have to consider the opinions of the voters on this question, whether you try to settle it now or by a commission selected for the purpose of preparing a bill that you would not present before the election. It must come before the people and you might as well take them into your confidence first as last.

If you want this elastic currency, let the Government issue it and control it, and you will have no difficulty about the security. Then lay upon the banks the responsibility for making the banks safe. If the banks say that they do not want to be held responsible for other banks, my answer is that if your bankers will not trust each other they should not expect the people to trust them with their money. [Applause.]

The slight tax that this plan contemplates would be more than compensated for by the money drawn from hiding that you could then loan out and on which you could charge interest. This is a system that protects the depositor, protects the community, and gives the banks a large advantage at a small price.

I thank you for this opportunity to speak to you; it is the first I have had. I have been talking for many years, and this is the most respectable crowd that I have ever talked to in my life [laughter and applause]—that is, measured by New York standards. [Laughter.] It is no more respectable, however, than the people among whom I live. The man who toils by the day, who goes out in the morning and works all day, who commences in the spring and works all summer, though his hands be hard from work and his clothing not of the latest cut, he is a respectable man, and I have been addressing responsible audiences all over the country, but this is the most highly financial audience that I have yet addressed. [Applause.]

And if I have exceeded my time limit and spoken with an earnestness for which I should apologize, just remember how long I have waited for the opportunity, and remember also that I may never have it again. [Prolonged applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Third Assistant Postmaster-General: For Third Assistant Postmaster-General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; superintendent division of stamps, $2,750; superintendent division of finance, who shall give bond in such amount as the Postmaster-General may determine for the faithful discharge of his duties, $2,250; assistant superintendent division of finance, $2,000; superintendent division of classification, $2,750; four special agents, division of classification, at $2,000 each; chief division of redemption, $2,000; superintendent division of registered mails, $2,500; six assistant superintendents division of registered mails, at $2,000 each; nine clerks of class 4; twenty-three clerks of class 3; thirty-two clerks of class 2; forty-five clerks of class 1; thirty-one clerks, at $1,000 each; twenty clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; five assistant messengers; twelve laborers; one page, $360; in all, $255,270.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "five thousand dollars" in lines 4 and 5, page 135, it being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, after the word "General," insert "$4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General: For Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; superintendent division of rural free delivery, $3,000; assistant superintendent division of rural delivery, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; twelve clerks of class 2; thirty-one clerks of class 1; stenographer, $1,600; stenographer, $1,000; forty-five clerks, at $1,000 each; nineteen clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; one assistant messenger; two laborers; and two pages, at $360 each; in all, $147,840.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words "five thousand dollars" in lines 24 and 25, on page 136, it being an increase in salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24, page 136, after the word "General," insert "$4,500."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment for correction of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 137, line 6, after the word "thousand," insert "two hundred."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a misprint—a dropping of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of dead letters: Superintendent, $3,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be chief clerk; two clerks of class 4; eight clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; twenty-nine clerks of class 1; forty-four clerks, at $1,000 each; forty-six clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; three assistant messengers; fifteen laborers; six female laborers, at $480 each; in all, $171,180.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "three thousand dollars" in lines 13 and 14, on page 137, it being an increase in salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order against the words "three thousand dollars," lines 13 and 14, page 137, it being change of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 137, line 13, instead of "three thousand," insert "two thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses in the Division of Topography in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blueprints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction, $31,000. And the Postmaster-General may authorize the sale to the public of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blueprints at the cost of printing and 10 per cent thereof added, the proceeds of such sales to be used as a further appropriation for the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blueprints. Of this amount $100 may be expended in the purchase of atlases, geographical and technical works needed in the Division of Topography.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to lines 2 and 4 on page 140 to call attention to a matter, namely, the Official Postal Guide.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is so much confusion here that nobody can hear a word. I do not know what the request of the gentleman is.

Mr. MURPHY. It is to go back to lines 1 to 4 on page 140 for just a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURPHY] asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph at the top of page 140 for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee relative to the situation as to the Postal Guide. It is not furnished to Members, and it is a great inconvenience. If Members desire to obtain a copy of it, they have to pay $3 apiece for it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean a Member of the House?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman is not mistaken. That is the situation. It is a matter that is not furnished by the Post-Office Department to Members.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman receives one copy of the Official Postal Guide every year as long as he is a Member of the House. He already has his this year, and if he will ask his clerk for it he will discover it.

Mr. MURPHY. What I desire to call attention to is this: In order to secure a copy of this Official Postal Guide, which is needed and that there is a great call for in many of our districts, the only way we can do it, aside from a single copy—if that can be secured—is by paying $3 for it, not to the Government, but to a private company in the city of New York that prints it. It strikes me some provision should be made by which copies of this Guide may be furnished to Members if necessary in the discharge of their duties to their constituents.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to suggest that it should be printed and furnished to Members at cost.

Mr. MURPHY. There would be some relief if printed at cost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Attorney-General: For compensation of the Attorney-General, $12,000; Solicitor-General, $7,500; assistant to the Attorney-General, $7,000; five Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $4,500; solicitor of internal revenue, $4,500; solicitor for the Department of State, $4,500; two assistant attorneys, at $3,000 each; two assistant attorneys, at $2,750 each; four assistant attorneys, at $2,500 each; one assistant attorney, $2,400; two assistant attorneys, at $2,000 each; assistant attorney, in charge of dockets, $2,500; law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the buildings, $2,500; superintendent of buildings, $500; private secretary to the Attorney-General, $2,500; clerk to the Attorney-General, $1,600; stenographer to the Solicitor-General, $1,600; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; one law clerk of class 4; one law clerk in office of the solicitor of internal revenue, $1,800; attorney in charge of pardons, $2,750; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,000; librarian, $1,600; five clerks of class 4; eleven clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; seven clerks of class 1; telegraph operator and stenographer, $1,200; one clerk, $1,000; eleven clerks, at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; two messengers; six assistant messengers; four laborers; three watchmen; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $900; three firemen; two conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; nine charwomen. Division of accounts: Chief of division of accounts, $2,500; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; seven clerks of class 2; seven clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $900 each; one packer, $900; in all, $234,660.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 143 strike out all beginning with the word "two," in line 8, down to and including the word "charwomen," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Three messengers; six assistant messengers; five laborers; three watchmen; engineer, $1,200; two assistant engineers, at $900 each; four firemen; two conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; twelve charwomen;" and in lines 18 and 19 strike out "thirty-four thousand six hundred and sixty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-eight thousand five hundred."

Mr. BINGHAM. The purpose of this amendment is simply to make consistent in this bill the action of the House a few days ago in the urgent deficiency bill, which is now law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

From the appropriation for pay of special assistant attorneys United States courts: One attorney, at $5,000; one attorney, $3,250; two attorneys, at $3,000 each; one attorney, at $2,500; one assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; in all, $18,750.

From the appropriation for prosecution of crimes: One superintendent of prisons and prisoners, $3,000; one chief examiner, $2,750; three examiners, at $2,500 each; four examiners, at $2,250 each; two examiners, at $2,000 each; three examiners, at $1,800 each; one clerk, at $900; in all, $32,550.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. There are a number of these items similar to the one just read. I wish the gentleman would explain to us just what this means.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, there has been appropriated in past years in the sundry civil bill sums for these various classes. And under this lump-sum appropriation the Attorney-General has employed counsel in the several instances to defend suits. Now, that has gone on so long that it was thought by the committee better (which is in pursuance of the principle which the gentleman knows the committee follows in all cases) that, instead of being paid out of a lump sum, they should be paid by specific appropriation, so that Congress would know what is being paid and have some control. We have made the transfer in all of these cases at exactly the salaries they are now receiving and for the duties that they are now performing, which the Attorney-General thinks is not at all too much; in fact, he thinks it inadequate for the services rendered under this special paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the amount of the lump sum heretofore appropriated?

Mr. GILLETT. In this particular case the lump sum was $60,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the gentleman from Illinois says anything further, I want to say, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that, as I now recall the testimony, the aggregate appropriation—the lump sum—from which all these men were paid is $126,000, heretofore carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. This provision will transfer them from the sundry civil bill to the legislative, where they belong, where their salaries will be appropriated for specifically, instead of leaving their salaries to be fixed in the discretion of the head of the Department. So that we will drop out of the sundry civil bill an amount equivalent to the aggregate salaries heretofore paid from the lump sum carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota, Why were not these carried in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Simply because the service when it was originally established was supposed to be temporary. It was not supposed that these people would be retained permanently in this service; consequently a lump-sum appropriation was made. Now the business of the Department has so increased that this service is absolutely necessary, and necessary permanently. So that it is for the purpose of putting all of these employees of the Department of Justice in the legislative bill, where they will be provided for specifically and where Congress will know what salaries are being paid; otherwise they will continue to be paid from lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask a further question. Are all these items carried annually the same in this specific line like the one for the enforcement of the antitrust law?

Mr. GILLETT. That is a sum which has gone on from year to year. There are about $140,000 left of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. We carried $200,000 additional in the sundry civil bill of last year.

Mr. GILLETT. It has been reappropriated for several years.

Mr. MANN. We have not yet reached the item. I see an item in here for the Spanish Claims Commission.

Mr. GILLETT. For the attorneys defending the cases.

Mr. MANN. Five thousand dollars. Has the gentleman any information as to how long that Commission is going to continue?

Mr. GILLETT. They have been telling us in the past they were nearly through, but the Attorney-General says he is afraid it will take some time still.

The Clerk read as follows:

All persons employed on June 30, 1908, under the appropriations "Defending suits in claims against the United States," "Prosecution of crimes," "Punishing violations of the intercourse acts and frauds," and "Care of rented buildings, Department of Justice," may be, in the discretion of the Attorney-General, transferred to the places provided for them under the appropriation "Salaries, Department of Justice, 1909," without reference to the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, and without reference to the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph just read. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if it is desired to have these persons provided for under the civil-service law, if it is not perfectly possible for the Attorney-General to make an application that the President shall issue an order transferring all these people inside of the civil-service act without putting the responsibiliy on Congress for that action?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it certainly is possible for the President to accomplish the same end by extending such an order. The Attorney-General impressed upon us that this class of clerks had been employed in his office for a long time doing this very thing and that it was important that they should be covered in, and we followed what has generally been the practice of the House. We find about twelve persons, so far as we could ascertain, would be affected by this paragraph.

The gentleman is quite right; it can be done by an Executive order as well as by a vote of Congress, and if the gentleman insists upon this point of order, I recognize that it must be sustained.

Mr. MANN. Is it true that the Attorney-General has been employing people under a lump-sum appropriation regardless of the civil-service rule?

Mr. GILLETT. I understand that most of them have gone in under the civil service, but that there are about twelve who have not.

Mr. MANN. As to the twelve, have they been employed by the Attorney-General under a lump-sum appropriation, contrary to the provisions of the Executive order covering all these classes of people into the classified service?

Mr. GILLETT. These have been employed for a number of years, and when they were employed I understand they were exempt from any Executive order which made them subject to the civil-service law.

Mr. MANN. I presume some of them have been very recently employed?

Mr. GILLETT. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I can not agree with the gentleman that the Attorney-General himself wanted this action taken. The Attorney-General is the president of the National Civil Service Reform League, and has constantly and consistently upheld the merit system and objected to any violations, in spirit or in fact, of the law. I do not believe that he wants us to cover these people into the classified service or desires to have the President do it himself. I am sure he would insist that all places of this sort should be filled under the civil-service law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Illinois doubt the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will ask the Clerk to read a telegram which I received from the Attorney-General this morning.

Mr. MANN. Oh, perhaps somebody's name was signed to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am merely giving you consistency in the statement.

Mr. GILLETT. I ask the Clerk to read the telegram.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
February 13, 1908.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, House:

The provision authorizing proposed transfers without reference to civil-service law is made necessary by reason of the fact, as stated in my former telegram, that twelve of the persons now employed were appointed without civil-service examination. The twelve were appointed under the appropriation act authorizing the execution of certain laws and the expenditure of public funds, but not creating specific positions. The positions being made specific by this act, the right of the present holders to retain them may be questioned without this provision.

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

Mr. MANN. So, Mr. Chairman, we are met with this proposition, that if Congress appropriates specifically for a place it is filled under the civil-service law; but if we appropriate a lump sum, the head of the Department proceeds to make appointments absolutely contrary to the spirit of the law and, in my judgment, contrary to the letter of the law, and then asks us to assume the responsibility of putting these people under the civil service. I do not believe that the Attorney-General desires us, in cold and sober judgment, to take any such action, and I would not be used that way even if he did desire it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the gentleman's statement is that he does not fairly state the facts. The Attorney-General did not appoint these men himself. They were appointed by his predecessors, and the Attorney-General explicitly said to us when before us:

I have since my incumbency directed that all temporary and lump-sum employees shall be secured from the eligible list of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MANN. In making that statement he only bears out the reputation that he has heretofore established.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. These clerks or functionaries have been in the public service for some years, and I have no doubt have demonstrated by actual service their fitness for the work in which they are engaged.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what he says.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it does not occur to me that the proposed legislation would in any respect reflect upon or be inconsistent with the merit system of appointments. The only object of the merit system is to secure efficient clerks and appointees in the various Departments, and where the efficiency of an applicant has already been demonstrated and is a matter of public record the merit system is promoted by retaining or employing such applicant in the public service.

Mr. GILLETT. I should differ from the gentleman on one point, and that is on the general proposition that while the merit system is intended to secure efficiency in office, yet that as to one particular place it might not do it, and yet it might be unwise for us to depart from the general principle, because the principle is of general application, and if you once begin to make exceptions you are going into uncertainties. But I agree with the gentleman in this case, for instance, where these men were employed years ago, and were not required to be appointed under the civil-service rules, and have proved their efficiency, and the head of the Department so recommends, I think it is better to follow that recommendation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman's criticism relates to the original appointment of these men. There may have been a violation of the merit principle in their selection, but that occurred a number of years ago. They are all now in the service, and this legislation is occasioned simply by the change in the character of the appropriations; that is all. If the appropriation was carried this year as in former years this legislation would not be required, and if this legislation is not enacted all of these men who are valuable servants, who have demonstrated their efficiency by actual service, would have to be separated from the public service.

Mr. MANN. I entirely disagree with the gentleman in the statement that these men were appointed by permission of law in the first place. The Executive order covering certain cases of people into the classified service, to be appointed from the eligible list under the civil service office, covered these identical people, and they were appointed, no matter whether by the Attorney-General or not, they were appointed contrary to law in the first instance, and this is merely an effort to have Congress take the responsibility and put them into the classified service. Only the Executive has the right to cover them into the classified service by a mere order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I doubt if they were appointed contrary to law. Where offices are created by statute we put them in the classified service, of course, but the appointment must be under the civil-service law. But if a lump sum be given to the head of a Department, authorizing him to employ servants and clerks to carry on a certain work, without defining the tenure of offices or fixing their salaries, it has been held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that they do not come within the scope of the civil-service law. I have looked it up recently.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that a very large share of the officials of the Government employees are paid for out of a lump sum appropriated, notably in the Department of Agriculture and some other Departments.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not here in the city of Washington?

Mr. MANN. Here in the city of Washington, and wherever they are in the classified service by Executive order.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. GILLETT. Very well.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to know what will be the result if this paragraph is adopted; will it be a transfer to the eligible list of the men who have not taken the examination prescribed?

Mr. GILLETT. It will not put them on the eligible list; it will put them into the service. They are men who have been in the service for many years, and this simply retains them there.

Mr. BUTLER. This paragraph makes an exception of individuals employed in Washington.

Mr. GILLETT. This paragraph does what it has been the custom of Congress to do when persons went into the civil service and were not required to take an examination, and have been there many years—they have almost invariably been blanketed under the civil service.

Mr. BUTLER. That was done by Executive order?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; by Executive order, but the point I am not certain about is whether when these men went in they ought to have taken an examination. I do not believe they ought. I believe they went into the Attorney-General's Office before the Executive order covered these lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. MANN. The Executive order covered all this class of service before the lump-sum appropriations were made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order was reserved.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending paragraph, the Chair understands, gives to the Attorney-General powers which he does not now possess, and it is clearly a change of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $6,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; confidential clerk to the Secretary, $1,600; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $1,800; chief clerk and superintendent, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; chief of appointment division, $2,250; two chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; ten clerks of class 4 (including one census clerk); ten clerks of class 3; twelve clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; ten clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; two telegraph operators, at $1,200 each; five messengers; nine assistant messengers; seven messenger boys, at $480 each; one engineer, $1,000; one skilled laborer, $840; two conductors of elevators, at $720 each; two firemen, at $660 each; nine laborers; one packer, $840; one driver and foreman of stables, $840; six hostlers, at $660 each; one cabinetmaker, $1,000; one carpenter, $900; captain of the watch, $1,200; six watchmen; fifteen charwomen; in all, $156,840.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "six thousand" in line 20, page 146, being a change of existing law, being an increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 146, line 20, insert after "Secretary" the words "five thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $35,000; and the results of such investigations shall be reported to Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting on page 147, line 24, after the word "abroad:" "And for the employment of experts to prepare reports on technical subjects, when required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman; I make the point of order to that.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in the first place whether this appropriation is not smaller than the appropriation of last year?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was $50,000 last year and it is $35,000 this year.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the committee explain why this was cut down?

Mr. BINGHAM. Because in the judgment of the committee that was all that was needed for the work that could be done.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman tell us in what way the money was expended last year? Was it all expended or was there a balance left over?

Mr. GILLETT. There was a large balance left over. The year before last, if I remember right, it was $29,000 and this year it will be $31,000. I may have that reversed. Consequently, we have appropriated more than they have needed in either one of the last two years.

Mr. HARRISON. Was the money paid for salaries or traveling expenses.

Mr. GILLETT. Both.

Mr. HARRISON. How many special agents were employed by the Department?

Mr. GILLETT. Six, is my recollection.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to call the attention of the committee to a state of affairs which unfortunately seems to be inherent in the kind of government we have now—that is, government by bureau and government by commission. The duties performed by these special agents abroad, I believe, are well performed, but we are asked now for an appropriation to cover a field which is practically being also covered by two or three other Departments of the Government. The Department of State sends out special consuls-general—consuls-general at large. I believe there are five of them, and their duties are practically the same as the duties of these special agents of this Department. They also are charged with the duty of investigating consulates, but in a general way they also cover this same field. The Treasury Department asks for an appropriation to cover special agents of the Treasury engaged in inspecting exporters abroad. In the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill we are asked to make appropriation for commercial attachés as well, which is a system that England is just abandoning in favor of this system of special agents of the Department. In other words, we have a quadruplication of work which could be performed, I venture to say, by any one set of these men, whereas there are now three sets of men drawing salaries and there are likely to be four sets of men drawing salaries for the same purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the logic of the gentleman's position is this, that it all ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON. If it were subject to a point of order, I might make the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think possibly if the gentleman would move to strike it out, it might go out.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to say to the gentleman that of all these employees these seem to be the most beneficial.

Mr. BURLESON. I hope the gentleman will not move to strike it out. That is an item to cover a special line of investigation. The consular agents have no means of investigation along these lines.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will say to the gentleman I entirely agree with what he says. I think these are the most useful officials engaged in this species of work. When they appoint a man the Department of Commerce and Labor consults the large business interests as to which special investigation is desired, and after consultation with those business interests they send abroad the men specially trained in that particular business, and therefore I believe the best results are arrived at under this appropriation rather than under the other appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. These places were created before the places were created under the Department, and when that proposition came before the House it was understood with the State Department that the appropriation to give them the consuls-general—I forget the exact terms.

Mr. HARRISON. Consuls-general at large.

Mr. MANN. Would not in any way at all duplicate the work done by these special agents and would not affect this work in the slightest degree. It was on that plea that Congress made the appropriation for the Department of State.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I think the work might all be performed by one set of officials.

Mr. MANN. Well, I may say to the gentleman that when the matter came before the House it was very much inclined to take the position that the gentleman takes, and yet, after a full presentation of the subject in the House at the time, the House thought, and I think rightly, that the consuls-general at large were performing work that these men could not perform and that they were desirable.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will inform the gentleman that there are several bills before the House now for the purpose of investigating this whole subject, and it will possibly be taken up in due time, and I do not wish to take the time of the committee any longer on that point. I offer an amendment here, and I would like to discuss the amendment if I have any time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRISON. My amendment proposes to extend the scope of this appropriation so as to allow the Department of Commerce and Labor, in cases where it seems to the Secretary of that Department wise, to secure reports upon technical subjects abroad, if necessary, by foreigners, rather than paying a man's traveling expenses to go abroad at $10 a day and his incidental expenses. Now, last year, when denatured alcohol was put on the free list, there were a great many inquiries of the Department of Commerce and Labor as to the manufacture and preparation of this article. The subject was comparatively little known in the United States and was very well understood in Germany. An expert in Germany wrote to the Department and offered, for the sum of $100, to make a technical report on this subject, which would have been published by the Department and sent to manufacturers throughout the United States if they had had any appropriation with which to pay the $100; but there was no such appropriation. Now, suppose a question were to arise as to the silk or any textile industry of Italy or Spain, a report might readily be made by some one on the spot instead of sending a man abroad for the purpose or instead of sending to the consul on the spot and asking him to make a technical report on a subject about which he knows next to nothing and as to which he might go to an encyclopedia and take out what he can find there and write that back as the best knowledge he can get on the subject. Instead of that I would ask to allow the Department under this amendment to disburse this sum of money as it wishes and pay for special reports made by experts abroad instead of sending these special agents everywhere there may be a call for such a report. My amendment provides that the Department shall be allowed to spend this money for the purposes here described in the bill and also for the employment of experts to prepare reports on technical subjects when required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and I would ask for a vote on that amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, personally, I have no antagonism to the proposition made by the gentleman from New York. In fact the only objection I see to it is the one which I think the House feels in all these propositions, of allowing a Department to pay money to men who have some special subject they wish to write up. Of course, we all must recognize that there is a danger in that. We see it now in some of the Departments, and it seems to me it would be still more dangerous to allow them to hire somebody abroad, whom they do not know anything about, and pay them money for writing articles. At the same time, personally, I have no opposition to it if the gentleman desires it. And I want to say further as to his general proposition, that I think it is one of the vices of our Government that we are duplicating the collection of statistics, though I should hardly ascribe it to the Bureau—I should be quite as apt to ascribe it to the mode of government in this House—that one committee has jurisdiction over one set of officials and another committee to another set of officials, and we are getting statistics from one office and from another office, and they are overlapping each other. In my opinion, the whole subject of getting statistical information for this House needs a thorough and radical revision. I think the gentleman has struck a danger which we are now getting into in our dealings both in foreign and domestic statistics. I am only afraid the amendment might exaggerate that danger, but, personally, I do not oppose it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it will have any effect or not, but I certainly hope the amendment will not be adopted. I would have no objection to the amendment in the form of an original proposition, because I do not think that we yet have any way of obtaining too much information in regard to the possibilities of our foreign trade. There is pending before the Committee on Commerce a bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], and quite earnestly advocated by a large number of southern Members of this House, to appoint additional agents to go abroad and study specially the possibilities of the cotton-print trade. Now, the proposition is here not only to reduce the amount in the sum total, but to reduce it still further by taking away the pay that may be given to agents studying abroad and turn it over to somebody else.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield? I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill to say the balance was unexpended last year.

Mr. MANN. That is very true, Mr. Chairman, and very probably there will always be a balance unexpended. The original appropriation was $25,000. It was supposed to carry at least three or four special agents. I think there are four abroad now. There was one in South America, one in China, one somewhere in Europe, and for a long while there was one in Canada. They have been acquiring information and sending it back to us, which is communicated to the manufacturing interests all over the country, and which I am told by those manufacturing interests are of great value to them. It is not a very large amount of money. We do not know enough yet, certainly, about the possibilities of selling cotton prints abroad. We ought to have a very large share of the Chinese and the oriental trade for the cotton manufacturing industries of the South. We ought to have a large share of the trade of South America in a good many directions. We are extending our trade in Canada very rapidly. Now, if the manufacturers themselves did not desire this information, I certainly would not be in favor of it. But they do desire it.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a second. Now, while it is true that the entire amount of money appropriated last year was not expended, it is also true that this form of investigation grows up quite gradually. You can not pick these men up all at once and know where to place them. There ought to be a possibility of extending this service. There is a great demand for extending the service, and all the money that is appropriated in here, and much more, ought to be used for that purpose. The Committee on Appropriations not only have reduced the amount, but in another way they have endeavored to kill this item. They provide that these agents shall receive not more than $10 a day. They might not obtain the character of men who ought to be sent abroad on this service at the rate of $10 a day, which is less than $4,000 a year.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to assure the gentleman that he is mistaken in his statement. The suggestion to limit the expenses to $10 did not come from the Committee on Appropriations. It was made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I want to state to the gentleman that I am very friendly to this item.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman has made a very strong fight for this, and I have been for it, and glad to follow him.

Mr. BURLESON. The item in the bill is entirely satisfactory to the friends of the item.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason for my being against the amendment. I do not wish to take out of the fund used for this purpose and divert it to some other purpose, nor do I wish to give the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the right to divert it because a pressure is brought to bear by consuls or the consular agents or the political agents in Congress who wish the money for special favorites. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with all the gentleman says about the necessity of obtaining all the information we can get about these trade questions; and I submit it as a suggestion of economy that if we knew that there was a man on the ground skillful and competent to give us a report for a small sum of money upon certain given conditions, it would be more economical to employ him than for us to send one of our four special agents provided for by Congress half across the world and pay his traveling expenses.

Mr. MANN. But we do not send our special agents halfway across the world to get information at any one place at all.

Mr. HARRISON. We have only four. We will divide the world into four parts, if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. MANN. They go to a place and study the whole thing. They get all the information they can, say on the cotton question. What good would it do to get part of the information in relation to a portion of the East when it should be made to apply to the whole? Why should we get special information about Canton, when we want to cover the whole subject? Now if you will not seek to divert the fund specially set apart for that special purpose, I would not object; but I do not want to see this fund taken away from this Department, to send able men abroad to study the needs of the people there, and aid our manufacturers at home in obtaining trade abroad.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is hardly the place for an amendment of this measure. I wish to bear testimony to the value of the service of these special agents who are send abroad. The reports which they have returned have more than justified the appointments of the men and the appropriations made to maintain that service. I hope that it may be kept intact as it now stands in the bill; and for that reason I shall oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] that this work can be accomplished by writing for or purchasing the desired information abroad regarding our cotton trade and the manufacture of cotton goods, I wish to say that this work can not be done intelligently and successfully other than the way it is now being done. These expert agents representing the United States Government can obtain information regarding the cotton trade with other countries that the private citizen can not obtain. It is a business proposition, and a wise one, for us to do anything in our power to increase our export trade with foreign countries. Especially should we give our attention to our cotton trade, for it is cotton that gives us the balance of trade and brings us gold from foreign countries when all other products fail. Let us follow the example of England, France, and Germany. These countries have expert agents in all the countries of the East, looking after their cotton-goods trade.

Let us take no backward step in this matter. We ought to have a dozen agents instead of the four mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I trust that this provision will remain in the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in defense of the action of the committee in reducing the amount appropriated for this service. It appears in the hearings that the Department of Commerce and Labor during the fiscal year ending June 30 last expended of this $50,000 for this service less than $30,000, and that during the current year they will expend less than $28,000. The Department does not contemplate increasing the force of inspectors, and it is not claimed that more men will be needed. We have provided for this service to the full extent which the Department finally estimated was necessary for the service. I do not favor the amendment of the gentleman from New York. It provides for an expenditure of money only to pile up more statistics in regard to our foreign trade and foreign trade relations. There is a great deal of duplication in the matter of securing statistical information in all of the Departments and in all the different branches of the public service. We have a statistical bureau, and nearly every Department has an independent statistical organization; and in this particular Department there are now two distinct statistical bureaus, either one of which, if the information is necessary or valuable, could obtain the information sought to be obtained by the pending amendment.

The committee has not discriminated in the least against this service. We have given all and more than they are now expending. In view of the statements made to the committee that they were expending only about $28,000 this year for this service, and that they did not deem it necessary to increase the service, I do not think this House can justify its action in appropriating more money for a given service than the Department having control of that service deems necessary for the same.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask, now by way of obstruction, but simply to obtain information, what are the two bureaus which can obtain and furnish the information that I seek to get by this amendment that I have offered?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have three bureaus. We have the Bureau of Statistics, supposed to cover generally all statistics, including trade statistics. We have also in the Bureau of Manufactures a bureau to which our consular reports are sent, where they are compiled and published, instead of having them published by the Department of State, as heretofore. They contain all the information that our consuls and all the information that these special agents gather in their investigations abroad.

In addition to that we have the Census Bureau, that is doing a large amount of general statistical work independent of the statistical work incident to the census.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman not admit that something besides statistics are required? All kinds of trade secrets have to be ascertained—processes and formulas.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is exactly what is being done by these six special agents. Their reports are sent here to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the Bureau of Manufactures is engaged in classifying, compiling, and arranging that information, and then publishing the same for the benefit of our exporters.

Mr. HARRISON. I gave the committee an instance where there was no means of obtaining information in this line last year where it was considered desirable by the Department. I think these instances arise quite frequently, and I do not see that the gentleman has pointed out how we are to obtain the information that we desire. By enumerating the different bureaus of statistics he has not pointed out where to cover this ground.

Mr. TAWNEY. By these special agents.

Mr. HARRISON. There are only four of them.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are six of them.

Mr. HARRISON. Six of them to cover the whole world.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are investigating these questions, and, in addition to that, the reports coming to the State Department from our consular service regarding trade relations and trade conditions.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not wish to obstruct matters. I want to broaden the scope; that is all.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the scope of it is ample now.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Did the committee receive a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor relative to an investigation of the export wheat and flour trade?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor stated that he expected to have that subject investigated during the next fiscal year.

Now, I may say, Mr. Chairman, that there is one criticism I have always made against this service, or against the administration of this appropriation. It was not the intention of Congress when this provision was first inserted in an appropriation bill creating this service that it should be specialized. The purpose of this service was to obtain information concerning trade conditions abroad in relation to our exports in general and not to particularize. For example, at the beginning of the last Congress every Member of the House was flooded with petitions for an appropriation of $30,000 for a special investigation into the conditions of our foreign trade in machine tools. Now, the Committee on Appropriations did not favor specializing any more than we had done. Congress did not provide for specializing this particular service, but notwithstanding that, under this general appropriation, under this general language, the manufacturers of machine tools in the United States have secured a special representative for the purpose of making that investigation, and the expenses are paid out of this appropriation. They also took up and specialized the cotton industry and cotton-seed oil and its products. And so to-day only two of these men are investigating general subjects connected with our foreign trade. The other four special agents are not engaged in any investigation concerning trade conditions generally, but trade conditions in particular or some special branch of our foreign trade.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of participating particularly in the discussion of the proposed amendment. I feel the importance of the investigations abroad into all classes of industry. While it may be that in some sense we are duplicating the work, it is very important.

The principal reason I took the floor is, if possible, to sound the alarm against recent legislation in England, which is forcing some of our manufacturers in this country to go to England to manufacture their goods. A statute that was passed some time ago by the Parliament of England for the first time in the history of England requires that patentees under the laws of England shall use their patents by manufacturing under them in England, and power is given under that act to cancel patents taken out in England by people from this country, perhaps any country, unless it is shown that they manufacture their goods exclusively within the United Kingdom, or mainly so. This is a new thing in the history of patent legislation. In all the times past we have had reciprocity in the matter of patents. The Englishmen come here and take out their patents and we protect them. We protect them as faithfully as we protect our own people who are patentees under our statutes, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1908, the English Government protected our people in their patents, although they did not go to England or the United Kingdom for this purpose of manufacturing exclusively or mainly under the patents. And we still protect England's people who take out patents here. They patent some new and useful invention or process, some mechanism, or some machinery, or parts of machinery, in this country, and this country protects them as fully as it does our own people, and we are excluded from its use in our manufactures; but if a citizen of the United States procures a patent under the patent law of England we are obliged to go there to manufacture under that patent, or under the present patent law of England the patent may be annulled.

I would put in the RECORD, if I had the names at hand, the individuals, corporations, or firms who, it is reported, have been obliged to move their establishments from this country to England in order to save their patents from becoming public property. By permission of the committee, I will add a copy of a sufficient part of the law of England on this subject to show its purpose and character. I am sorry I can not now give the names of the corporations or individuals that have already made preparation to move out of the United States into England for the purpose of preserving their patents. The law operates against other countries as well as the United States.

The following is the provision of the new British patent law under which patentees under the English laws are liable to have their patents revoked on the ground that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside of the United Kingdom:

27. (1) At any time not less than four years after the date of a patent, and not less than one year after the passing of this act, any person may apply to the comptroller for the revocation of the patent on the ground that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside of the United Kingdom.

(2) The comptroller shall consider the application, and if after inquiry he is satisfied that the allegations contained therein are correct, then, subject to the provision of this section, and unless the patentee proves that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on to an adequate extent in the United Kingdom, or gives satisfactory reasons why the article or process is not so manufactured or carried on, the comptroller may make an order revoking the patent either (a) forthwith, or (b) after such reasonable interval as may be specified in the order, unless in the meantime it is shown to his satisfaction that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on within the United Kingdom to an adequate extent.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair has not been called to any existing law which would justify this amendment in the general appropriation bill, and therefore the Chair feels compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 148, after the word "Congress," add: "including information as to the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad to merchants and at retail."

Mr. BINGHAM. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph we have before us is very largely in the interest of American manufacturers. To a very great extent these manufacturers are in the enjoyment of a high protective tariff to enable them to compete, as it has been supposed, with foreign manufacturers in the American fields. It is an open secret, a notorious fact, one I think not even denied, that a great many of these manufacturers are selling their goods in European and other markets to consumers abroad at prices much below the prices that they name in the American market and that American consumers are compelled to pay.

Now, the object of this amendment is to require our agents in making reports on our foreign trade to include information for the American people on this important point, as to the prices of American-made goods in foreign lands.

I am perfectly willing and the American people are perfectly willing to have these agents of the United States investigate trade conditions abroad for the purpose of developing such facts as may be helpful in spreading American trade, but it certainly seems to me that we should couple with them instructions to our agents to ascertain authoritatively and officially whether the charge is true that these American manufacturers, protected by law, favored by the Government of the United States, are actually engaged in selling their products at prices to foreigners in foreign markets far below those that they charge to Americans in the American market, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order. This additional information will cost nothing, and it certainly will be of value. If the charge is true, it ought to become known. If it is false, it will do no harm to ascertain that fact.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, just one word. This provision is not made for the purpose of ascertaining any such facts as the gentleman speaks of. We have appropriated enough to obtain the information which this is intended to provide, to extend American trade, and it does not appropriate for these men to acquire the information the gentleman speaks of. It would require an entirely different class of service and possibly a different set of men; at any rate a much larger number of men, which is not within the province and purpose of this section; and, regardless of the point of order, I should hope that the gentleman's proposition would not be adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," namely: Chief of Division of Naturalization, $3,500; assistant chief of division, $2,500; three clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; seven clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; in all, $39,460.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 156, line 15, strike out the words "thirty-nine thousand four" and insert "thirty-eight thousand nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Standards: For director, $5,000; physicist, $4,000; chemist, $4,000; associate chemist, $2,500; three associate physicists, at $2,500 each; one associate physicist, $2,200; two associate physicists, at $2,000 each; six assistant physicists, at $1,800 each; seven assistant physicists, at $1,600 each; one assistant chemist, $1,800; one assistant chemist, $1,600; assistant chemist, $1,400; eight assistant physicists, at $1,400 each; eight laboratory assistants, at $1,200 each; seven laboratory assistants, at $1,000 each; six laboratory assistants, at $900 each; four aids, at $720 each; two aids, at $600 each; three laboratory apprentices, at $540 each; four laboratory apprentices, at $480 each; storekeeper, $1,000; librarian, $1,400; secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; two clerks, at $720 each; one messenger boy, $480; three messenger boys, at $360 each; one elevator boy, $360; chief mechanician, $1,600; mechanician, $1,400; two mechanicians, at $1,200 each; two mechanicians, at $1,000 each; mechanician, $900; two watchmen; skilled woodworker, $840; three skilled laborers, at $720 each; draftsman, $1,200; two assistant messengers; engineer, $1,800; one assistant engineer, $1,200; two assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; assistant engineer, $900; three firemen; electrician, $900; four laborers; janitor, $660; janitor, $600; and two female laborers, at $360 each; in all $139,940.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 158, line 24, strike out the words "thirty-nine thousand nine" and insert "forty-one thousand five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Books for libraries of circuit courts of appeals: For the purchase of law books and rebinding law books for the nine libraries of the United States circuits courts of appeals, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General upon the requisition of the court (all books purchased hereunder to be plainly marked "The property of the United States"), $9,500.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 164, line 15, before the word "nine" insert "twenty," so as to read $29,500."

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the addition is to provide a sum with which to replace the law library belonging to the court of appeals in San Francisco, which was entirely destroyed by the fire there two years ago. If this matter has been brought to the attention of the committee and it has passed judgment on it, I do not care to consume the time of the House in arguing it, but the judges have sent to me a copy of a letter which is addressed to Mr. JENKINS, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. I suppose they thought likely that such a subject would be brought to the attention of the House through that committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman explain to the committee why the judges did not bring this to the attention of the Department of Justice and the Department of Justice submit an estimate for what was deemed necessary to replace this library; if it is necessary?

Mr. SMITH of California. I am entirely in ignorance as to why they did not take that course.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department of Justice sent no estimate for it, and it is through the Department that these estimates properly come.

Mr. SMITH of California. I think that is correct; but it is quite probable that the judges did not know the legislative procedure, although Judge Morrow, who was formerly a Member of this House, is a member of that court, and if it had been brought to his attention he probably would have remembered how these things are done. The facts are that this entire library of the court was destroyed in the fire there two years ago, and out of the small assignment of funds made in this general appropriation it has not been able to replace it. They say in this letter that this court has jurisdiction over the cases arising in all of that western territory, including Alaska, Montana, Idaho, and Washington, and include a great variety of questions, and, of course, they need not specify that they need a workable library. They enumerate some thirty or forty States of the Union from which they have no set of State reports. I am now reading from the letter:

The text-book library consists of about 157 volumes. Many of them are out of date. Of the annual appropriation of $1,000 for the library of the court but a small margin is left after the purchase of the current books.

Therefore they have no fund with which to give them the former library which they had, and which every court, of course, needs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman say they enumerate thirty or forty States from which they have no State reports?

Mr. SMITH of California. They enumerate forty-two States from which they have no reports at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know any circuit court of appeals with a library of reports of all the States of the Union——

Mr. SMITH of California. Possibly not all, but I presume they have a number of the State reports.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt if any circuit court of appeals has State reports of every State.

Mr. SMITH of California. Let me read another paragraph indicating what they have.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman to say that the library was destroyed at the time of the earthquake.

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. How did it happen that these old books were saved?

Mr. SMITH of California. I can not tell you that.

Mr. MANN. Did they in their zeal take the trouble to pick out the old text-books and save them and let the new text-books burn?

Mr. SMITH of California. Well, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not "josh" about a subject as important as this. This is an item very well worth taking care of, and this is no time to say they did a foolish thing in that great day of catastrophe. They did not go and pick out purposely the old books and save them. How it happened I do not know, but I will read you this letter.

To the Hon. J. J. JENKINS,
Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the undersigned, who are the judges of the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, hereby respectfully make this application to you for your considerate assistance to secure an appropriation from the Sixtieth Congress of the United States in the sum of $20,000, to be used for the purchase of a library for the court.

The jurisdiction of this court, as you know, is very extensive, embracing appeals from Alaska, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, California, Arizona, Hawaii, and the United States court for China. A great variety of questions is presented to the court for decision. A well-selected law library is of the utmost importance and necessity to the court for the proper performance of its work. The library of the court, however, has always been most meager and insufficient. Prior to April, 1906, the want of books, while a matter of considerable inconvenience to the court, was partially overcome by borrowing the most necessary ones from the public and private law libraries in San Francisco. The San Francisco Law Library was an unusually well-supplied institution, with a total of 44,000 volumes. Since the conflagration of April, 1906, however, and the destruction of practically all the law libraries in San Francisco, both public and private, the court has been greatly inconvenienced and delayed in the performance of its work by the want of books.

The National Reporter system, published by the West Publishing Company, at St. Paul, is the only complete set of books in the library. Besides this system, the court has incomplete sets of reports and statutes of eleven States and Territories. It has no reports or statutes of any of the following States and Territories: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Indian Territory, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey (Law), New Mexico, New York supreme court, superior courts, and lower courts, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

The text-book library consists of about 157 volumes, many of which are out of date.

Of the annual appropriation of $1,000 for the library of the court but a small margin is left after the purchase of the current books.

Believing that the court, in justice to itself and to the people of the large section of the United States over which it exercises appellate jurisdiction, should have for its convenient use a good working law library, we earnestly ask your assistance to secure from this Congress the above appropriation of $20,000 for the purchase of such a library.

A copy of this letter has been sent to each of the Congressmen from California, with the request that they cooperate with you in the accomplishment of the desired purpose.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) WM. B. GILBERT,
ERSKINE M. ROSS,
WM. W. MORROW,
JOHN J. DE HAVEN,
WM. C. VAN FLEET.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., November 30, 1907.

Mr. DRISCOLL. From whom is that letter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman reads from——

Mr. SMITH of California. Let me answer this question. It is signed by Judges William B. Gilbert, Erskine M. Ross, William W. Morrow, John J. De Haven, and William C. Van Fleet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has read that these judges have signed this letter, in which they say that they have incomplete reports from eleven States, and they have no reports at all from forty-two States. Now, where are those other States located? They are not in the American Union.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have not figured that up, I am sure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the judges were no more accurate than that, I suggest we wait until——

Mr. NEEDHAM. That includes the Territories, and you have hurriedly counted up these States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not reconcile this difference.

Mr. SMITH of California. I ran over this very hurriedly, but the statement of these judges is certainly entitled to full credit by this body—that they have no library and that they are at present supplied with but very few books.

This matter, of course, should have been brought to the attention of the committee when it was framing this bill, but it was overlooked by myself and probably by the other members of the delegation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask if the gentleman has communicated with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. JENKINS] and talked over what he wants?

Mr. SMITH of California. I have not. The judges sent up this communication and asked us to present the matter as we could.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do they state how much is necessary?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; $20,000. The bill carries $0,000, and my motion is to increase it to $29,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not suppose they expect to buy the reports of all these other States. They never have had the reports of all the States?

Mr. SMITH of California. I do not know what they had before.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They do not expect to get the reports of those States that they did not have before the fire?

Mr. SMITH of California. I presume they would like to have a fund with which they could provide themselves with the reports that they need. If there is an opportunity for the committee at this session to consider this before final action is taken, I would desire that to be done, but if you desire to act upon it now, I submit the matter with this information.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it appeals to us, of course, to do anything we can for the relief of San Francisco and the sufferers from the fire. But I do not think it is fair for the gentleman to come in before the committee of the House and submit this proposition, which was never brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations at all, whose merits we can not go into as minutely as we ought to do. We can not tell how much we ought to appropriate. Obviously, from this letter, they are attempting now, under the guise of supplying what they had before, to get a very much better library than they had before. And it hardly seems to me right to appeal to our sympathy for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of California. If you will allow me a moment——

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of California. After consultation with the chairman of the committee, if it is agreeable to this committee of the House, I will withdraw this amendment and undertake to submit the matter to the Committee on Appropriations through the general deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed, and the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced either by the demotion or removal of such person from the public service.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on section 3. I desire to object to that section, first, because it is of an affirmative character and contains new legislation; secondly, the recommendations therein are not as they would have us believe when they undertake to place a limitation upon anything of that character. This distinctly is of an affirmative character, and I beg to call attention to the section adopted at the last session of Congress, in the same bill, and to say that this is not, as claimed in the report, a reenactment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Pending the decision of the Chair on the point of order, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GOULDEN. I can not yield for that purpose at this time.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know what question is before the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] has made a point of order to the paragraph.

Mr. KEIFER. To section 3?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 3.

Mr. KEIFER. The whole section?

The CHAIRMAN. The whole section, on the ground that it is a change of existing law, and he is now addressing the committee on the point of order.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, not only does it change existing law, but it is in conflict with the civil-service law, and, as the committee claims for it, it is not a limitation. It can not be a limitation, as it is of an affirmative character and not negative. I beg to call attention of the chairman to section 3 of the prevailing law that was adopted during the Fifty-ninth Congress. This section, I beg the Chair to note, is a radical change in the matter. The Chair will find that they have added, in section 3, line 22, "either by the demotion or removal of such persons from the public service," and, in line 3 of the prevailing law, "otherwise than temporarily." It is therefore, in my opinion, a direction and new legislation as well. When they undertake to say also "shall not be available," it is an affirmative recommendation—a direction in fact, and not in the shape of a limitation, which should simply be of a negative character. And therefore I submit to the chairman that it is in violation of Rule XIII provided with regard to new legislation as well as for the limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that an amendment which he desires to offer may be read for information. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, in line 23, insert the following:

"Provided, That this section shall not apply to employees who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion, or who as members of State militia organizations aided in suppressing the rebellion, nor to the widows of such persons."

Mr. GOULDEN. I will insist upon my point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order which the gentleman makes, the only ground upon which I can see the point of order can be sustained would be upon the ground that this limits the powers of the heads of Departments, because by it the heads of the Departments are instructed by law to cause this provision to be enforced. Now, I would suggest to the gentleman that, in his view upon the subject, he had better not insist upon his point of order, because the law now instructs the Departments to enforce this provision. The clause which we have put in——

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman what law he refers to?

Mr. GILLETT. The current law of the last appropriation bill.

Mr. KEIFER. But that only makes provision for one year; that is not permanent legislation.

Mr. GILLETT. But the gentleman argues on this law.

Mr. KEIFER. This bill deals with the appropriation for 1909.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman bases his argument upon that ground. The current law compels the heads of the Departments to cause this provision to be enforced, and would compel them to eject from the Departments the clerks who come under this provision. We have limited that by providing that they can enforce the provision either by removal, which they would have to do under the present law, or demoting them. Instead of narrowing the scope of the Department, really we enlarge it, and it is really for the benefit of the employees that this provision should be in, because this allows them to be kept at a lower salary, whereas under the present law they are to be entirely removed from the Department; so that I think the gentleman, with his views on the subject, had better not make the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that this proposed section will have any effect at all upon the future; that section 3 of the old law would now apply if this is stricken out and the point of order is sustained, and the section 3 of last year's appropriation would apply to the coming fiscal year?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it simply applies to this year. It is our purpose to apply it to the coming fiscal year.

Mr. KEIFER. If I understood the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, he concedes that this section 3 of the bill is new legislation and changes existing law?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not say that.

Mr. KEIFER. But he did concede that there was new legislation in the section. Now, under the circumstances, as the section would apply only to the appropriations to be made in this bill, then this is new legislation, and he might as well admit it as deny it, because the fact is perfectly clear that it is new legislation. There never has been any legislation such as is proposed in this section, and legislation on the same subject in the appropriation act for this fiscal year (1908) is not permanent law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when this matter was before the committee, and I am not complaining that I did not have plenty of time to investigate it, because I did; but I was told that the provision was the same in this bill as in the bill applicable to the fiscal year 1908, and I now find on examination here that that was an error. The provision in the law applicable to this fiscal year excepts from the operation of the law persons who are temporarily disabled, and this requires the heads of the Departments to dismiss or by demotion—I do not like that word—get rid of those who are temporarily disabled. It is another method—not intentional—of attempting to do what was more directly proposed in a former Congress: To provide by law for the dismissal of the old soldiers in the Departments, and they were then willing to vote down the provision to retain them provided they performed their work as well as others. Here we have a measure for carrying out the same purpose, but in different language. Now, if you will allow me I will point out the difference. Section 3 of the act applying to this fiscal year reads:

The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing such service, and the heads of the Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

Section 3 of the present bill follows that language up to a place where the committee desired to make a departure to create this wholly new measure. Let me read it:

SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any person incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed, and the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced either by the demotion or removal of such person from the public service.

Here is omitted the word "temporarily," and in the section of this bill it is made imperative on the heads of the Departments to enforce the provision, and it provides how they shall do it. Before, it might be done in various ways, but this section 3 of the bill requires it to be done either by demotion or removal. And, more than that, we have a civil service that requires examination in order to show capacity for admission into the different Departments of clerks and others; but here it is proposed to leave it to some bureau chief to report to the head of the Department that somebody is incapaciated and then cut his head off. I should like to have a civil-service examination of the old soldiers before they are to be mustered out upon the say so of somebody who may have but very little judgment on the subject of what constitutes capacity. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, although this clause has been carried substantially as now proposed in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for ten years, this is the first time that it has ever provoked any discussion or criticism, either on this floor or in the press of this city. It has heretofore been carried in language far more drastic than the language now proposed. Heretofore it was the duty of the head of the Department to dismiss the clerk incapacitated for the performance of his duty. If this provision is agreed to, they can either dismiss or demote, as they see fit. Heads of Departments have come before the Committee on Appropriations at each session of Congress, and when asked if they had any person in their Department who was incapacitated for the discharge of the duties assigned to them or for which they had been employed, they answered that they had. When asked why they did not enforce this provision, they said it was impossible to dismiss people of that kind from the service, although it would be for the betterment of the service.

By this provision we propose to liberalize the existing law, and, instead of making it the duty of the head of the Department to remove, make it his duty in such case to reduce or remove. We have therefore liberalized the existing law by giving to the heads of Departments the alternative, in case of an incapacitated person, of demoting rather than dismissing.

This provision originated some ten years ago, when a certain Assistant Secretary of the Treasury adopted what was known then as an "honorary list," which was, in fact, a civil pension list, by demoting those who had reached the top of the service and become physically incapacitated for the discharge of the duties for which they were employed, thereby establishing a civil pension roll. But the power of demotion was taken away from the Departments, leaving only the power of dismissal in the event that the employee was incapable of discharging the duties for which he had been employed.

Mr. Chairman, this provision does not relate to the subject of superannuation. It does not require either the dismissal or the demotion of an employee because of age. The language is that he must be incapacitated for the discharge of the duties for which he has been employed. There is not a single word in this paragraph upon which any Member of this House can justly claim that it does relate in the least to the question of age. A man may be 100 years of age and yet if he is capable of discharging the duties for which he has been employed he can neither be demoted nor dismissed from the service under this paragraph. But the subject of superannuation is a convenient subject in this House for men to try and popularize themselves in the large cities, where a great many Federal officeholders live and vote. It is also a convenient medium for the newspapers of this city to try to increase their circulation. The moment there is anything in the legislative bill that even hints at the question of superannuation it is availed of immediately as a basis for criticising the Committee on Appropriations. The press of this city, knowing there are 30,000 Government employees here, all anxious to read something about themselves, or something in their defense, and are therefore eager to buy the evening or morning papers pending the determination of such a question, take advantage of anything that looks like superannuation to increase their circulation in the city of Washington. It is this, rather than the provision in this bill, that has prompted all of the criticism we have heard on this floor and that we have recently seen in the local press regarding this provision, for there is nothing in the provision regarding age or superannuation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order against this proposition does not lie. It is a limitation on the appropriations, and the last part of the sentence—

And the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced—

Which is the language in current law, is the language which this paragraph has carried in all previous bills for a number of years, supplemented by the language which is now proposed—

Either by the demotion or the removal of such persons from the public service—

Which is a part of that limitation. The entire section reads:

SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any person incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed, and the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced either by the demotion or removal of such person from the public service.

The first part of that is clearly a limitation on the appropriation carried in this bill for the public service. The last part is an essential part of that limitation, namely, conferring upon the heads of Departments the power to enforce the limitation. The one is a limitation and the other is an essential part of the limitation, because, without the power given to somebody to enforce it, the limitation would be a nullity, would be of no force, and of no effect whatever. I maintain, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the section as a whole is a limitation upon the appropriation made for the public service, and that without the language "the heads of Departments shall enforce this provision either by demotion or by dismissal" leaves the limitation without any effective way for its enforcement. Therefore, it being an essential part of the limitation, it is as much in order as the language which says that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to persons who are incapacitated, and so forth. Without that language how can that limitation be enforced? Who is to determine whether or not the employees are incapacitated who we say shall not receive any part of this appropriation because of incapacity?

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the first portion of this section is addressed to the auditing officers of the Government and the balance of it to the heads of Departments?

The appropriation herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed.

That is addressed to the auditing officers. Have they not the power, under that, to refuse compensation without regard to the action of the heads of Departments?

Mr. TAWNEY. If they know that the person is incapacitated for the discharge of his duties, or for the duties for which he is employed, the auditing officer could refuse to pass the account for the payment of the service of that person. But this power is not limited alone to the auditing department.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you not impose upon him the duty of inquiring whether he can make these payments or not, because if it is paid to a person who is incapacitated——

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I think not. In the absence of testimony the presumption would be that he was capable and had sufficient capacity for the discharge of his duties. I do not think the presumption would be that he was incapacitated, but the presumption would be in favor of the clerk.

Mr. HEPBURN. He has the advantage of the presumption that the Civil Service Commission can do no wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the presumption would be in favor of the clerk. No matter to what extent he might be incapacitated for the performance of his duty, unless the Auditor had knowledge of his incapacity, I think he would not be justified in refusing the payment. While the Auditor has the power, where he has the knowledge, it is also proposed by this section to continue to impose upon the heads of Departments the duty of either demoting or dismissing, and thereby enforcing this limitation. Heretofore it has been the duty of heads of Departments to dismiss; there was no alternative; and under this provision some of the employees, within the last six months or during the fiscal year, have been removed from office because they were totally incapacitated for the discharge of their duties.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that in line 19 you say "shall not be available for the compensation of any person incapacitated." Must that incapacity be permanent or temporary?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will read further the words "incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed," he will see that the provision answers his question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A man might be incapacitated for a month or two by breaking his arm, and he might be permanently incapacitated by senile dementia. Is this a permanent or temporary incapacity?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is permanent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not say so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not in express language; but he must be incapacitated for the discharge of the duties for which he has been employed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For how long?

Mr. TAWNEY. Permanently incapacitated.

Mr. COOPER. I think the provision applies to a temporary incapacity as well.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. POLLARD. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he has any information he can give this House which will enlighten us as to the number of employees that will be affected by this section if it should be literally enforced?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not, but there are very few; under our system of life tenure of office it is a fact that there are quite a number of old men who now occupy positions at the head of our public service and who have reached that position because of long service and of having been promoted from one grade to another until they have gotten to the top, but who now, by reason of age or other physical disability, are totally incapacitated for the discharge of the duties in these higher grades. Nevertheless, the heads of the Departments do not demote them or can not demote them, and if they could they could be retained in the public service and these positions at the top—clerkships that command a salary of from $1,800 to $2,000 a year—could be filled by younger men and men who are capable of discharging the duties of the office, thereby not only greatly improving the efficiency of the public service but also reducing the demand for more clerks in the higher grades. One of the reasons that Congress is asked every session to increase the number of $1,800 and $2,000 clerks is because there are so many in the public service who have become incapacitated, either by age or other physical disability, and who can not be removed or demoted. The duty of removing has heretofore been placed upon the heads of the Department, but as a matter of mercy these old men have been retained in these higher places and have not been dismissed. It is now proposed not to separate them from the service, but when they are totally incapacitated for the discharge of the duties of the position to demote them to positions where, notwithstanding their incapacity for the performance of the duties devolving upon a high position, they may be able to perform duties that are less onerous and in that way be retained in the public service. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the fact that the first part of this is a clear limitation, and that without this language the limitation would be ineffective, it therefore becomes and is a part of the limitation.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would greatly prefer that this question of order should be decided on the reading of the third section of the bill than upon various statements and assumptions and allegations as to what is in that section. The inquiry of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] took away the necessity of my commenting particularly upon one point, but I am not satisfied with the voluminous answer made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, where he said the bill meant in its reading that the officer, to wit, whose duty it was by the bill, to wit, the auditing officer, was to pay without knowing whether the party was incapacitated for performing the service, but simply on the presumption of capacity. Now, there is nothing of the kind in the section, and there is nothing which justifies that view by reason of any connection with any other matter in it. Moreover, then comes the inquiry from the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as to whether or not this demotion or dismissal could not come in case of a temporary incapacity, and the distinguished chairman says no, that it must be permanent only, whereas in the last bill and the last law, and the one applicable to this fiscal year, the word "temporarily" appears as an exception to the operation of that section; and when the committee came to draw this section of the bill under consideration it used different language in order to get away from the temporary clause, and to make it ferocious and drastic, they struck out the clause relating to the exception in favor of those only temporarily incapacitated. Then the distinguished chairman says we do not mean what we say in the bill at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that at the last two sessions of Congress he voted for this provision without the words "otherwise than temporarily" in that provision? The House has always passed it in that way, and the Senate has put in those words.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, let me make half of my speech and he may make the other. It is the custom here of people to make most of another man's speech, and I would like to get half the time. I am aware of the fact that the Appropriation Committee at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress reported an open, frank, thoroughly avowed provision in an appropriation bill requiring the heads of Departments to dismiss all old soldiers, practically, that there were in the service, if they showed any signs of decay by age, and I did not vote for that. That provision went out on a point of order, and it would have gone out by a very large vote of the House. I might go further and say what took place before that provision of the bill reached that point, but I will not; it may not be proper. Now, let us get back, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the Chair for a minute, to the real question, and that is whether, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] alleges, this is a limitation to put this language in here. I might put my statement against his and say it was not a limitation, but I prefer, Mr. Chairman, that the Chair should read the section himself, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to this, that there is no limitation on the expenditure of the money at all. It is only a provision requiring it to be paid out to persons who are adjudged to be capacitated in the opinion of those over them, and it is not a provision that it shall not all be paid out.

When the language used operates to prevent the use of the money at all, that is the time that a limitation comes in within the rule; when there is something provided in a bill that prohibits the expenditure at all, save on certain conditions being complied with, then the rule might admit the provision. This does not so limit it. It is equivalent to saying to the accounting officers of the Treasury, You shall pay this money all out to persons who are, in the opinion of somebody—heads of Departments, if you please—capacitated, and there is not a cent of money to be saved, only it is not to go to the superannuated old soldier, as some young fellow in a Department may decide. [Laughter and applause.] Now, is there any limitation? It is only limited to paying the strong-bodied people and not those who have acquired a capacity to do work by long experience and in general in a satisfactory way, but yet have grown old and feeble and frail. It is not the worst thing that could happen to a great Government like this that we should pay some old, broken-down man who has to toil painfully, on account of age and infirmities, to discharge his duties. There is not a manufacturing establishment in my country, there is hardly a railroad in this country, that does not have people on the retired list; you may call them pensioners, if you please. I remember a very interesting incident that happened here in this city in the Administration of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. He had for his Secretary that great old man, Zachary Chandler, and he, too, took one of those spasmodic spells of reform and sent word around in his Department to find out who were incapacitated, and he found some and issued his order to dismiss them. One old maiden lady, frail and feeble from age, and who performed her work, doubtless through pain and tribulation, took her little discharge one afternoon up to the White House and worked her way into General Grant's presence and showed it to him. She told him her name was Meade, that she was the sister of Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, that she had labored in her place all the time through the period she had been there as hard as she could and as well as she could, and while she was somewhat frailer now, she was still trying to do her duty. General Grant heard her and said, "Wait." He took up a small card and wrote on it: "Mr. Secretary Chandler, let Miss Meade stay as long as we stay," and signed it "Grant." She took it back and handed it to the Secretary, and he thought that he would not be behind General Grant; that he would go him one better, and he ordered Miss Meade to take her desk or table and retain it, and then issued an order that he would dismiss the first head of a department who made a complaint about her work to him. [Laughter and applause.] There was some humanity, some sentiment, in that. We are now scared all along the line that we are liable to get somebody on the roll who is not quite as strong physically as he ought to be.

But there is no limitation here, Mr. Chairman. The money is to be expended, and the only limitation is that it is to go to people who are strong bodied, whether strong-minded or not I do not know. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course the question to which we must address ourselves now is the point of order. It is very apparent, I think, that the first part of this section is not subject to the point of order, that it is a mere limitation, and very likely that part of the section which provides that "the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced" is not subject to the point of order, because it can not be a change of law, for it is the duty of heads of Departments to enforce the law. But the paragraph goes on to say, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota particularly to this, "to be enforced either by the demotion or removal of such person from the public service." Grant that the first part of the section is a limitation purely and that it is the duty of heads of Departments to enforce that as an enforcement of the law, this latter part does affect the discretion of the heads of Departments as to the manner of the enforcement. It might easily be, Mr. Chairman, that a person employed in one office would be wholly incapacitated from performing the duties of that office and might well be capacitated to performing the duties of a higher office and might well be promoted instead of demoted so far as capacity is concerned, or a person might be incapacitated from performing the duties of one office and be transferred to another at the same salary, but this provision would restrict the discretion of the heads of Departments in that respect, and hence it seems to me it must be considered new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order against section 3, on page 166. That section provides:

SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated for performing the service for which such person has been employed, and the heads of Departments shall cause this provision to be enforced either by the demotion or removal of such person from the public service.

The House, of course, has a right to withhold an appropriation in whole or in part. It also has a right to specify in what way an appropriation shall be expended, by what is called a limitation. But a limitation may not be such as when fairly construed is an affirmative change of existing law. It seems clear to the Chair that this paragraph limits the discretion of heads of the Departments in that it requires them to do certain things which they would otherwise not be required under the law to do. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the paragraph which has just been stricken out; that is, beginning at line 17 down to the words "heads of Departments."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, after line 16, insert:
"SEC. 3. The appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any person incapacitated for performing the service for which such person is employed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to be inserted at the conclusion of the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 166, add the following:
"Provided, That in the case of clerks incapacitated for the performance of their respective duties, and who are discharged from the civil service on this account, they shall be retired from the civil service at 50 per cent of their respective salaries at the time of their retirement: And provided further, That the heads of the respective Departments of the Government shall withhold from the annual salaries of all clerks in said Departments one-half of 1 per cent of their respective salaries to constitute a fund from which to pay such retired salaries.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, as to that, I make the point of order that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] makes the point of order that the amendment changes existing law. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CHANEY. No; I am willing that the Chair shall rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire that my amendment be read again. I offer it now as an amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, line 23, insert at the conclusion of the section:
"Provided, That this section shall not apply to employees who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion or who, as members of the State militia organizations, aided in suppressing the rebellion; nor to the widows of such persons."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better cover the Confederates.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman had better cover the Confederates who are now serving in United States Departments as employees. Is the gentleman willing to amend by doing that? I propose to amend it with this language——

Mr. LANGLEY. I am willing. I think the old Confederates and their widows should also be protected in this respect. I drew the amendment hurriedly here on the floor, and followed the phraseology of existing law along similar lines.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Those who served in the war in the Confederate army and who are now employed in the Departments of the Government.

Mr. BURLESON. I think we ought to include the soldiers of the Mexican war and the war of 1812.

Mr. MANN. How about the Revolutionary war?

Mr. MACON. And the Indian wars, too?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment comes too late. This section has been agreed to and has been passed. This amendment ought to have been offered before that amendment was adopted.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman had offered his amendment while the other was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment was simply read for the information of the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. I addressed the Chair in time, but he did not hear me.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand this is the parliamentary status: The amendment to the bill offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has been adopted, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] had offered another new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offered an amendment as a new section, and that was agreed to by the committee. That action having been taken, the Chair must hold that it is now too late to amend.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment as a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:
"Provided, That the previous section shall not apply to employees who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion, or who as members of State militia organizations aided in suppressing the rebellion, nor to the widows of such persons."

Mr. FINLEY. I make the point of order on that, that it changes existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would suggest also that it is simply an amendment to the section that has already been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman now offers it as a separate section.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is an amendment, in fact. It modifies the former section.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the contention of the gentleman from Minnesota is correct, and he therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then I ask unanimous consent of the committee that it may be considered at this time. These old soldiers and their widows ought to be retained whether they are able to work much or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he has offered may be considered at this time.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. No person now or hereafter employed in the classified service of any Executive Department shall be transferred from one Executive Department to, or be otherwise employed in, another Executive Department until such person shall have served continuously not less than three years in the Department from which he seeks transfer or in some other Department as an employee in the classified service.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 5, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph with the exception of a few words is permanent law—that is, the law at the present time prohibits the transfer of an employee from one Department to another Department until that employee has served at least three years in the Department from which the transfer is desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to state that this is permanent law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is permanent law, adopted by the last Congress. Now, the language of this paragraph, which is new and which changes the law—I do not claim it is not subject to the point of order, but submit this to the gentleman in the hope he may possibly withdraw his point of order——

Mr. GOULDEN. I shall be glad to if the gentleman shows me a good reason why.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). Are the words "or to be otherwise employed in another Executive Department."

Now, the reason for that change is this: The employees in the several Executive Departments here have found a convenient way of evading the law we have heretofore passed. They know they must remain in the Department to which they have been appointed three years before they can secure a transfer. At the present time, instead of waiting three years, they go and take a civil-service examination. In the meantime they look around to find out where there is an opportunity for a higher salary, and are certified from the eligible list to the Department requiring the services of someone at a higher compensation than they are receiving in the Department to which they were originally appointed. Then they resign, and take an original appointment in the other Department. It was this condition of affairs that induced the committee to recommend to this House an increase in the salary of some employees in the Internal Revenue Department, in order that that Department could retain their employees in a certain division, when not a single person in that division had been in the employ of the Department for more than seven months.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he does not consider it entirely right and proper for employees of the Government to take civil-service examinations in order to better their condition, and take new places if they can obtain them? Why would the gentleman dampen the ambition of these people?

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, Mr. Chairman, this condition exists to-day. We have here in the city of Washington Executive Departments competing with one another for the services of the best men; and in some of the Departments in particular, where a large part of the service is paid out of lump-sum appropriations and the compensation is fixed by the head of the Department, they can increase their salaries and make a special bid for the employees of other Departments to come out of the service they are in and go into this particular service where a larger compensation is paid.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two on this provision. Does it not permit temporary detail of clerks from one Department to another?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they can detail within the Department, but they can not detail from one Department to another Department.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, there is this objection I have to this provision. I think wherever there is a drastic provision respecting the administrative service of the Government made that might perhaps operate to its embarrassment and detriment, methods will be found to get around it. If the law had limited the period of employment to one year it would have been all right. Clerks may demonstrate within less than two years peculiar aptitude for a particular kind of service and for the service generally. I think that the three-year period is too long before authorizing a transfer of these clerks to a position where their aptitude and capability would seem to peculiarly fit them.

One year is long enough to prevent the abuse that the gentleman from Minnesota complains of, it seems to me, and in attempting to cure one abuse the Congress, I believe, has created a much greater one.

Mr. TAWNEY. The one-year limitation would be evaded just as readily as the three-year limitation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then what is the use of having any?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have called attention to the fact that in the Internal Revenue Bureau there is to-day in one division not a single employee who has been there more than seven months, and some of those who are now there have been offered positions in another Department at an increased salary, and have taken civil-service examinations and are eligible to appointment in that other Department; and the reason they have done so is simply because in that other Department the salaries are not fixed by Congress, but are fixed by the head of the bureau at a rate that will enable them to secure the best men. We ought certainly to try either to get all the public service on a strictly classified basis, so that there would be no inducement for one Department to compete with another, or else we ought to make it impossible, within a reasonable limit of time, for a transfer to be made from one Department or employment in another Department. The language is clearly subject to the point of order, and I do not intend to discuss that.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman has not given sufficient reasons why I should withdraw my point of order. I want to say that there is nothing I would not like to do for my distinguished friend from Minnesota, because we saw the light of day within 2 miles of each other, and therefore I look upon him as my particular, personal, special friend; but I can not withdraw the point of order, and therefore insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to concede that the paragraph is subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. In the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, persons employed June 30, 1908, as additional members of the Board of Pension Appeals may be transferred and appointed to places in the classified service of the Department of the Interior without reference to the "Act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that this is contrary to existing law. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to recur to page 34, under the order heretofore adopted, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent having been previously given, the committee will now return to page 34. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, after line 9, insert:
"Files, House of Representatives: To move the files of the House of Representatives from the Library of Congress to the House Office Building and construct the necessary equipment therefor, $6,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with certain amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken and the amendment engrossed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I rise to move that the bill be recommitted, with instructions to report certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send his motion to the desk?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The amendment, Mr. Speaker, which I have sent up is to be added to line 2, page 148, after the word "Congress."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the bill with the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Including information showing the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad to merchants and at retail.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska. It is new legislation. It would not be in order on the bill if offered in Committee of the Whole. In fact, this identical amendment was ruled upon in Committee of the Whole and held not to be in order for the reason that it was not germane and that it was new legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, concerning the first objection, that this amendment is not germane, there can hardly be an argument in support of such a position. This is a paragraph which provides for the employment of certain agents of the United States Government at a stipulated compensation per day, such agents to investigate trade conditions abroad. Now, my amendment simply specifies one of the trade conditions abroad which these agents are required to investigate, namely, the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad.

As to the second point, that this is new legislation, I think the objection is without force. Here we have, Mr. Speaker, a condition in which the Government is seeking to foster American manufactures and American foreign trade. It seeks to foster American manufactures by providing a high protective tariff to protect those manufacturers in the sale of their goods in the United States. In doing so it practically levies a tax upon the whole American people, and the charge has been openly made and never denied that these manufacturers so protected by law in the American market against foreign competition go into the foreign markets and sell to the foreigners in those foreign markets these American-made goods at a much lower price than they sell in the American market.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not finding fault with the provision in this bill which proposes by the use of money from the United States Treasury to spread American trade abroad. I am not finding fault with the object in view of extending, as far as possible, the foreign trade in American-made goods, but I do think it is very important, when the United States is spending this money for the promotion of that trade, to require its agents who are investigating foreign trade conditions in giving information to Congress, as provided in the paragraph, to let Congress know officially and authoritatively whether or not the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad are lower than they are sold for in the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska allow me to suggest that he had better broaden his instructions? We have authorized six agents at $25,000; and if the gentleman's amendment be adopted, it would take twenty-six agents. He had better broaden his instruction and authorize the committee to ascertain the number that would be necessary to do that work which he has indicated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I have gone as far in this amendment as I can go within the rules. I believe my amendment is strictly within the rules. It is certainly germane; it relates to the foreign trade conditions specified in the paragraph; it relates to the sale of American-made goods abroad; and this information should be had not only by the people of the United States for political reasons, but it should be had by Members of this Congress when they are legislating to encourage manufactures at home and to spread the sale of American-made goods abroad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this clause to which the amendment is sought reads "for compensation and actual traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad." Now, then, in regard to the point that this is new legislation. The whole idea of the amendment is that these special agents authorized under this clause to "investigate trade conditions abroad" shall, as a part of their "investigation of trade conditions abroad," inquire whether "the trade conditions abroad" are such that American-produced goods are being sold lower abroad than at home. Now, Mr. Speaker, a part is never greater than the whole, nor can you change existing legislation by specifying a thing already contained generically in existing legislation.

As to the question whether it is germane or not, it seems to me that requires no argument, and the point as to whether it is new legislation or not is the point to be considered. I suggest that so long as it only suggests a particular direction within the line of inquiry already provided for by existing legislation the amendment itself can not be new legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I just desire to say one word in reference to the point of order as to whether this is new legislation. I think it is clearly within the power of this House, not of members of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but within the power of this House, to put new legislation on an appropriation bill. The House continually authorizes new legislation to be put on an appropriation bill by a rule that is brought into the House and passed and authorized by the House of Representatives; in other words, it changes Rule XXI to that extent by order of the House. I say that this motion to refer with instructions amounts to the same thing as bringing in a rule and authorizing the new legislation to be put on the bill, and therefore I contend that this House has a right to instruct a committee, not that the committee can bring it in itself, but the House of Representatives may instruct a committee to bring in a bill with new legislation on it just like the Committee on Rules often authorizes new legislation to be put on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as to the last proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I take it that it has been repeatedly ruled that you can not by a recommitment obtain the insertion in a bill of an item which is subject to a point of order in the Committee of the Whole. You can not accomplish, in other words, indirectly what you can not accomplish directly, and if this amendment were subject to a point of order in the committee, then it is subject to a point of order on the motion to recommit. It seems to me that the amendment is subject to a point of order both because it is not germane and because it is new legislation. The purpose of the paragraph is manifestly entirely apart from the question of obtaining retail prices of these American goods sold abroad. The purpose of the paragraph is to investigate the conditions of trade with a view of increasing the sale of goods abroad, and the information particularly given to merchants at home. We put in the paragraph originally for the special purpose of accommodating our distinguished friend from the South in regard to the cotton trade.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? The paragraph states what the purpose is—"and the results of such investigation shall be reported"—not to merchants, but "to Congress."

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman will discover, if he goes through the law, that these reports are required to be made and published, and that they are distributed to the merchants and the manufacturers in the shape of special bulletins issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor under another law, which does not confine itself to the appropriation bill. It is true that the item in the appropriation bill requires that these investigations shall be reported to Congress. They are also reported to the manufacturers and merchants. Now, the purpose of the amendment is to accomplish an entirely different matter. There is no relation between the two propositions so far as the actual work is concerned, and it would require an entirely different character of person in the agent to accomplish the one result from what it would to accomplish the other result. In other words, if it should be held that this amendment be in order and the amendment should go into the law, it will entirely destroy the object of the first part of this section and absolutely kill the investigation that is now going on, and that of itself, it seems to me, is a test of the germaneness of the proposition. That it is new legislation it seems to me clearly the case. These agents now are subject to the discretion of themselves and the Department of Commerce and Labor, which gives them directions, and this proposition directs them and interferes with that discretion which the Department now has, and hence is of itself a change of law because interfering with the discretion now possessed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with an instruction to report the same back to the House amending that portion of the bill to be found on pages 147 and 148, which reads as follows:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $35,000; and the results of such investigations shall be reported to Congress—

By adding at the end after the word "Congress" the following:

including information showing the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad to merchants and at retail.

The Chair has verified his impression that the item as reported in the bill and agreed to by the House dwells in the bill alone, or in other words, it is not authorized by existing law, and if a point of order had been made upon it in Committee of the Whole, or if it had been considered in the House, and the present occupant of the Chair had been called upon to rule upon that point of order, he would have sustained it. The authorities are many and uniform touching the effort to amend upon a motion of this kind.

On page 360 of the Manual, under the title of "change of existing law" the Chair reads as follows:

A paragraph which changes existing law being allowed by general consent to remain, it may be perfected by any germane amendment. But this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation.

This adds, as is patent upon its face, additional legislation, and it seems to the Chair to dispose of the point of order. The Chair listened with interest to the gentleman from Alabama. This is a motion to recommit, which motion—the Chair does not now speak of instructions—is in order notwithstanding the previous question has been ordered which cuts off all amendment. But you can not do indirectly that which you can not do directly. If you could not make the amendment while it was being considered in the committee you can not make the amendment on a motion to recommit. The Chair could rule upon the second point as to whether it is germane or not, but the Chair is admonished from rulings of Speakers in all the past that when you find something that disposes of the point of order there is no use in piling Pelion upon Ossa. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill and upon that I ask the previous question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair. With apologies for having addressed the Chair as Mr. President and with apologies for dissenting, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and on that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon which I ask the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 120, nays 111, answering "present" 7, not voting 151, as follows:

YEAS—120.

Alexander, N. Y.	Cushman	Howell, N. J.	Needham
Allen	Davidson	Howell, Utah	Nelson
Andrus	Davis, Minn.	Howland	Norris
Bannon	Dawes	Huff	Nye
Barclay	Dawson	Hughes, W. Va.	Parker, N. J.
Bartholdt	Draper	Hull, Iowa	Parsons
Bates	Driscoll	Humphrey, Wash.	Payne
Beale, Pa.	Edwards, Ky.	Jenkins	Perkins
Bede	Ellis, Mo.	Jones, Wash.	Pollard
Bennet, N. Y.	Ellis, Oreg.	Kahn	Porter
Bingham	Esch	Kelfer	Pray
Birdsall	Foss	Knopf	Reeder
Bonynge	Foster, Ind.	Knowland	Roberts
Boyd	Foster, Vt.	Küstermann	Rodenberg
Brownlow	Gaines, W. Va.	Landis	Slemp
Brumm	Gardner, Mass.	Langley	Smith, Cal.
Burke	Gardner, Mich.	Laning	Smith, Iowa
Burton, Del.	Gardner, N. J.	Lawrence	Snapp
Butler	Gillett	Lindbergh	Southwick
Campbell	Graff	Littlefield	Sperry
Capron	Greene	Longworth	Stafford
Caulfield	Gronna	Loudenslager	Stevens, Minn.
Chaney	Hale	Lovering	Sturgiss
Chapman	Hall	McCall	Sulloway
Cocks, N. Y.	Harding	McMillan	Tawney
Conner	Haugen	Madden	Taylor, Ohio
Cook, Colo.	Henry, Conn.	Malby	Tirrell
Cooper, Wis.	Hepburn	Mann	Vreeland
Cousins	Higgins	Marshall	Wood
Crumpacker	Holliday	Mouser	Young

NAYS—111.

Alexander, Mo.	Denver	Johnson, Ky.	Reid
Ansberry	Edwards, Ga.	Jones, Va.	Richardson
Ashbrook	Ellerbe	Keliher	Rucker
Bartlett, Ga.	Ferris	Kipp	Russell, Mo.
Bartlett, Nev.	Fitzgerald	Kitchin, Claude	Russell, Tex.
Beall, Tex.	Floyd	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Sabath
Bell, Ga.	Fornes	Lamar, Mo.	Saunders
Booher	Foster, Ill.	Lamb	Shackleford
Brantley	Fulton	Leake	Sheppard
Broussard	Garner	Lee	Sims
Brundidge	Garrett	Legare	Slayden
Burgess	Gillespie	Lewis	Smith, Mo.
Burleson	Gregg	Livingston	Smith, Tex.
Burnett	Hackett	Lloyd	Sparkman
Byrd	Hackney	McHenry	Spight
Caldwell	Hamill	Macon	Stanley
Candler	Hardwick	Maynard	Stephens, Tex.
Carlin	Harrison	Murphy	Sulzer
Carter	Hay	O'Connell	Talbott
Clark, Fla.	Heflin	Page	Thomas, N. C.
Clark, Mo.	Helm	Patterson	Tou Velle
Clayton	Henry, Tex.	Peters	Underwood
Cockran	Hitchcock	Pou	Wallace
Cox, Ind.	Hobson	Pujo	Watkins
Craig	Houston	Rainey	Webb
Crawford	Hughes, N. J.	Randell, Tex.	Williams
Davenport	Hull, Tenn.	Ransdell, La.	Wilson, Pa.
De Armond	Humphreys, Miss.	Rauch

ANSWERING "PRESENT"—7.

Adamson	Finley	Hamilton, Iowa	James, Ollie M.
Brodhead	Goulden	Howard

NOT VOTING—151.

Acheson	Flood	Knapp	Padgett
Adair	Focht	Lafean	Parker, S. Dak.
Aiken	Fordney	Lamar, Fla.	Pearre
Ames	Foulkrod	Lassiter	Powers
Anthony	Fowler	Law	Pratt
Barchfeld	French	Lenahan	Prince
Bennett, Ky.	Fuller	Lever	Reynolds
Boutell	Gaines, Tenn.	Lilley	Rhinock
Bowers	Gilhams	Lindsay	Riordan
Bradley	Gill	Lorimer	Robinson
Brick	Glass	Loud	Rothermel
Burleigh	Godwin	Lowden	Ryan
Burton, Ohio	Goebel	McCreary	Scott
Calder	Goldfogle	McDermott	Sherley
Calderhead	Gordon	McGavin	Sherman
Cary	Graham	McGuire	Sherwood
Cassel	Granger	McKinlay, Cal.	Small
Cole	Griggs	McKinley, Ill.	Smith, Mich.
Cook, Pa.	Haggott	McKinney	Steenerson
Cooper, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	McLachlan, Cal.	Sterling
Cooper, Tex.	Hamlin	McLain	Taylor, Ala.
Coudrey	Hammond	McLaughlin, Mich.	Thomas, Ohio
Cravens	Hardy	McMorran	Townsend
Currier	Haskins	Madison	Volstead
Dalzell	Hawley	Meyer	Waldo
Darragh	Hayes	Miller	Wanger
Davey, La.	Hill, Conn.	Mondell	Washburn
Denby	Hill, Miss.	Moon, Pa.	Watson
Diekema	Hinshaw	Moon, Tenn.	Weeks
Dixon	Hubbard, Iowa	Moore, Pa.	Weems
Douglas	Hubbard, W. Va.	Moore, Tex.	Weisse
Dunwell	Jackson	Morse	Wheeler
Durey	James, Addison D.	Mudd	Wiley
Dwight	Johnson, S. C.	Murdock	Willett
Englebright	Kennedy, Iowa	Nicholls	Wilson, Ill.
Fairchild	Kennedy, Ohio	Olcott	Wolf
Fassett	Kimball	Olmsted	Woodyard
Favrot	Kinkaid	Overstreet

So the appeal was laid on the table.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. WATSON with Mr. WEISSE.

Mr. TOWNSEND with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. ROBINSON.

Mr. MCCREARY with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. LOWDEN with Mr. MOORE of Texas.

Mr. LAFEAN with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. LINDSAY.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. LASSITER.

Mr. HUBBARD of Iowa with Mr. KIMBALL.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. HILL of Mississippi.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. FOCHT with Mr. GORDON.

Mr. DUNWELL with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. DIEKEMA with Mr. GODWIN.

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Mr. CARY with Mr. GLASS.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. FAVROT.

Mr. CALDER with Mr. CRAVENS.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. ADAIR.

Mr. KINKAID with Mr. HAMMOND.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES.

For this day:

Mr. WALDO with Mr. GILL.

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. WILLETT.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania with Mr. LEVER.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. ROTHERMEL.

Mr. COUDREY with Mr. NICHOLLS.

Mr. FASSETT with Mr. BRODHEAD.

Mr. COOK of Pennsylvania with Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. CHANEY with Mr. DIXON.

Mr. REYNOLDS with Mr. WOLF.

Mr. COLE with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. THOMAS of Ohio with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. BARCHFELD with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. LILLEY with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. HAWLEY with Mr. GRANGER.

Until further notice:

Mr. FOULKROD with Mr. HAMLIN.

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. MEYER.

Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. LENAHAN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa.

Mr. DENBY with Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. POWERS with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. AMES with Mr. LAMAR of Florida.

For the session:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Mr. ADAMSON with Mr. WANGER.

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill, and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. FINLEY as a member of the Printing Commission under the act approved March 4, 1907.

CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House that to-morrow, immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of pension business on the Calendar, I will move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill providing for the taking of the thirteenth and subsequent censuses.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. PADGETT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William Johnson (H. R. 9821), Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be authorized to have meetings of the committee during the session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the resolution distributing the annual message of the President; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be considered closed. If I may be indulged a word, I would like to dispose of this resolution distributing the President's annual message. I have introduced a resolution, which has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which will report a resolution distributing the last message from the President. So that there will be ample time for general debate upon that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the understanding that there will be opportunity for debate when the committee reports the resolution distributing the last message of the President, having no demands for time at present, I have no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be considered closed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. VREELAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House resolution No. 43, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A resolution distributing the President's message.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this resolution was read in full in the Committee of the Whole and has been most thoroughly and conscientiously debated in the committee by a great many Members of the House, extending over quite a good many days. I have no doubt it is thoroughly understood, although not a word was said about it during the whole debate; and, unless some gentleman has some amendment to offer to the resolution, I shall move that the committee rise and report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I agreed with the gentleman from New York that I would not oppose this motion provided he would at an early day introduce a resolution to distribute this last message.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have introduced a resolution, which has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, for the distribution of the last message.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. PAYNE. I intend to call a meeting of the committee this week to consider that resolution, and if there are votes enough we will report it to the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire whether the resolution has ever been read?

Mr. PAYNE. It has.

Mr. MANN. The resolution will have to be read. We concluded general debate. I am sure that the gentleman from New York would not want to inaugurate a system of reporting a measure from the Committee of the Whole without having been read.

Mr. PAYNE. The resolution is all in one section, and it is not necessary to read it a second time, but in order to please the gentleman from Illinois, I will ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read again by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the resolution be again read.

Mr. MANN. It has to be; it is not a matter of unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman; it is a matter of right.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois is well taken.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I desire to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following words: "So much as relates to new legislation be referred to the 'big five' of the House."

[Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I shall have to raise the point of order on that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what ground does the gentleman from New York raise the point of order—that it is new legislation or a new rule?

Mr. PAYNE. Because there is no such committee in the House except as it exists in the exuberant imagination of my friend from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a change of existing customs of the House at all?

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that it is the function of the House and not this committee to appoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. There is an amendment pending. Has the Chair ruled on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled on the amendment and sustained the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the committee rise and report the resolution to the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. VREELAND, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 43, relating to the distribution of the annual message of the President of the United States, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint submitting an estimate of appropriation for coal bunkers at the Philadelphia mint—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for carrying out the obligations of the Rio de Janeiro conference—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing certain maps—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate for the construction of a barge office building in New York City—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred, as follows:

Mr. HIGGINS, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17055) to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 964), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13465) to amend the laws concerning transportation between ports of the Territory of Hawaii and other ports of the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 965), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3330) for the relief of William L. Best, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909—to the Union Calendar.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 17289) for the further protection of interstate trade—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 17290) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 17291) to supplement an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous train brakes, and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, and March 2, 1903—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CALDWELL (by request): A bill (H. R. 17292) granting pensions to teamsters of the war of the rebellion and Indian wars from 1861 to 1865, inclusive—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 17293) providing for daily reports of amount of cotton ginned—to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A bill (H. R. 17294) conferring upon the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and upon any judge thereof, the jurisdiction to hear and determine the constitutionality or legality of any public expenditure—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 17295) to aid the Lincoln Farm Association, of New York, to build and endow a national memorial to Abraham Lincoln on the site of the Lincoln birthplace farm in Kentucky—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17296) providing for the restoration of the motto "In God we trust" on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17297) authorizing the extension of New York avenue from its present terminus, near Fourth street NE., to the Bladensburg road—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17298) to define the size and capacity of receptacles used in the sale of farm and garden produce generally, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 17299) to authorize the Commissioner of Education to conduct special investigations and report and diffuse information and advice respecting the same—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17300) to establish a Department of Labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 17301) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease allotted or unallotted Indian lands for mining purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 17302) appropriating $5,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to complete the Federal building at Mason City, Iowa, according to the original plans and specifications—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17303) authorizing the extension of Girard street NW. from its western terminus to Fifteenth street NW.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17304) to amend an act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia, approved June 18, 1898—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17305) to regulate the establishment and maintenance of private hospitals and asylums in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOWLAND: A bill (H. R. 17306) to provide for the cancellation and revocation of certain rights of way over public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PATTERSON: A bill (H. R. 17307) to restore to certain citizens the proceeds arising from the sale of their lands under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17308) to permit distilled spirits to be transferred from the original packages into bottles and cases while in distillery bonded warehouse—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17309) providing for a vacation for storekeepers, storekeeper-gaugers, and gaugers in the Internal-Revenue Service—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17310) to fix the proof of spirits bottled in bond—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 17311) to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile and New Orleans Railway Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line approximately east of the north boundary line of the city of Mobile, Ala.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BEDE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 140) authorizing the printing of 10,000 copies of the complete orders of Gen. George Washington during the war of the Revolution—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. WEBB: Resolution (H. Res. 243) referring to the Court of Claims the bill H. R. 16303—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 244) referring to the Court of Claims the bill H. R. 16302—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Resolution (H. Res. 247) for payment of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: Resolution (H. Res. 248) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to the House certain information concerning the subtreasury at St. Louis—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Resolution (H. Res. 249) for the payment of a messenger to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 17312) granting a pension to Ruben Driskill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: A bill (H. R. 17313) granting an increase of pension to John Ropp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARCLAY: A bill (H. R. 17314) granting an increase of pension to James C. Stephens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17315) granting an increase of pension to George W. Brink—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 17316) to correct the military record of Balsor Gudermuth—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17317) authorizing the President to appoint E. Russell Mears captain and paymaster, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 17318) granting an increase of pension to Wiley Lype—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17319) granting a pension to Nancy West—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17320) granting a pension to D. W. Crawford—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON of Delaware: A bill (H. R. 17321) granting a pension to Isaac R. Jester—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 17322) for the relief of J. W. Causey—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 17323) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Robert E. Peyton, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17324) for the relief of William H. Robinson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17325) for the relief of the estate of James T. Ball, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 17326) granting an increase of pension to Thompson H. Withers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17327) granting an increase of pension to William W. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCKS of New York: A bill (H. R. 17328) granting an honorable discharge to James F. De Beau—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: A bill (H. R. 17329) for the relief of the heirs of Asa O. Gallup—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17330) granting an increase of pension to Shadrach Stacy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17331) granting an increase of pension to John Mogg—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17332) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo H. Chism—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17333) granting an increase of pension to James R. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17334) granting an increase of pension to Henderson Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17335) granting an increase of pension to John Doss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17336) granting an increase of pension to George W. Mason—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17337) granting an increase of pension to Laban McGahan—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17338) granting an increase of pension to William S. Gregory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17339) granting an increase of pension to John P. Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17340) for the relief of Thomas J. Wells—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17341) granting a pension to Margaret E. Cole—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17342) granting a pension to Martha Jones—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17343) granting a pension to Warner Raiser—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 17344) for the relief of Frederick Daubert—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 17345) granting a pension to Frances J. Dalrymple—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FOSS: A bill (H. R. 17346) granting life-saving medals to Edward Spencer, Charles H. Fowler, and Joseph C. Hartzell—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FAVROT: A bill (H. R. 17347) for the relief of heirs of Martha Bennett Slack and Charles A. Slack, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17348) for the relief of the estate of Henry Ware, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17349) for the relief of heirs or estate of Edward Gaudin, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17350) for the relief of heirs or estate of Mrs. Emiline J. Penny, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17351) for the relief of heirs or estate of Mrs. Hyacinth A. Morgan, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GORDON: A bill (H. R. 17352) for the relief of the estate of Jacob Glenn, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOULDEN: A bill (H. R. 17353) granting a pension to Thomas Cline—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 17354) granting an increase of pension to James M. Eudailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17355) authorizing the Court of Claims to investigate and report the facts on the claims of Emmetta Humphreys, administratrix of Gen. John Sevier and of John Sevier, jr.—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 17356) granting an increase of pension to O. A. Stine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17357) granting an increase of pension to John H. Bull—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17358) granting an increase of pension to Robert F. Appleby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDWICK: A bill (H. R. 17359) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Walker—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDING: A bill (H. R. 17360) for the relief of Oglesby & Barnitz Company, of Middletown, Ohio—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 17361) granting an increase of pension to L. C. Hodges—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 17362) for the relief of heirs of Samuel R. Garner, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 17363) granting an increase of pension to Edward L. Bradley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 17364) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the legal heirs of John Harper, deceased, to certain lands in the State of Virginia—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 17365) granting a pension to Elizabeth Parham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17366) granting a pension to Joshua Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17367) granting a pension to Andrew J. Sells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17368) granting an increase of pension to John Bush—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17369) granting a pension to John H. Case—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEIFER: A bill (H. R. 17370) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIMBALL: A bill (H. R. 17371) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Kincaid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17372) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Prudence Hensley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17373) for the relief of Mrs. Helen S. Hogan—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17374) for the relief of the heirs of Henry Cohen—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17375) granting a pension to Nannie Kenny Thomas—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17376) granting a pension to John B. Skidmore—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANING: A bill (H. R. 17377) granting a pension to Sarah Goff Beach—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17378) granting a pension to Abbie C. Fleharty and Louise Fleharty—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEGARE: A bill (H. R. 17379) for the relief of the heirs of Denis O'Callaghan, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17380) for the relief of Sarah Watts—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 17381) granting an increase of pension to Peter L. Cramer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 17382) granting an increase of pension to John H. Plush—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17383) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hibner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 17384) granting an increase of pension to James H. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17385) granting an increase of pension to John Lewis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17386) granting an increase of pension to Cosma T. Coleman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McMILLAN: A bill (H. R. 17387) granting an increase of pension to Trowbridge Suwarrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 17388) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Hadley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17389) granting an increase of pension to John Boyle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17390) to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to readjust the accounts of transportation companies for the transportation of troops, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 17391) granting a pension to Charles M. Stebbins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 17392) granting an increase of pension to Newton F. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17393) granting a pension to Alexander Lamont—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17394) for the relief of Emma T. Reid, widow of John B. Reid—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17395) granting a pension to Emma T. Reid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 17396) granting an increase of pension to Harvey N. Tennant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STAFFORD: A bill (H. R. 17397) to refund certain taxes paid by the S. C. Herbst Importing Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17398) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Dunham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STURGISS: A bill (H. R. 17399) granting an increase of pension to William H. Shriver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17400) granting an increase of pension to Noah Gross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 17401) for the relief of Mrs. George Goldthwaite—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17402) granting an increase of pension to Louis Fricke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 17403) granting an increase of pension to A. B. Hawkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17404) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert F. Gould—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: A bill (H. R. 17405) granting a pension to Emma C. Peterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 17406) to complete the military record of Reuben K. Deaver—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 17407) granting an increase of pension to George W. Musto—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17408) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Duffield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17409) granting an increase of pension to William W. Ritchey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of Lake Seamen's Union of Buffalo, N. Y., for H. R. 14941, preventing insufficient crews on steam vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: Papers to accompany bills for relief of William Wilson (H. R. 15989), Francis M. Bennett (H. R. 16108), and Ruben Driskill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Petition of Farmers' Institute of Defiance, Ohio, February 10, 1908, for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Road.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of board of directors of St. Louis Merchants' Exchange, for an amendment to interstate-commerce act—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of board of directors of St. Louis Merchants' Exchange, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Bottlers' Local Union of St. John, Mo., against legislation favoring prohibition—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of friends of the public school, against legislation favoring prohibition—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, against S. 42 and other kindred bills of House and Senate—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Buffalo Oil, Paint, and Varnish Company, against further commercial legislation as regards the paint industry—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of South Bend National Bank, of South Bend, Ind., favoring currency legislation—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Irving T. Bush, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of United States Plumbers' Steam Company, Local Union No. 137, for building battle ships in United States navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CANDLER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of J. W. Causey—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHANEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William W. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of New York Board of Trade, against S. 42 and kindred bills of House and Senate—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DUNWELL: Petition of H. J. Swift, department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, against abolition of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Buffalo Oil and Paint Company, of New York, against commercial legislation to affect the paint industry—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of South Bend National Bank, of South Bend, Ind., for currency legislation—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for a permanent tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Irving T. Bush and others, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Central Federated Union of Greater New York, for battle ship construction in United States navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, against S. 42 and kindred House and Senate bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DUREY: Petition of H. B. Settle, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., against amendment of proposed copyright law inimical to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill granting a pension to William H. Lewis (H. R. 10835)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of Commercial Club of Eugene, Oreg., for appropriation to improve channel at mouth of Siuslaw River, Oregon—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Chicago city council, for arbitration of telegraph strikes—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of Milwaukee Association of Credit Men, approving present bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FAVROT: Papers to accompany bills for relief of estate of Mrs. E. J. Penny, estate of Mrs. Hyacinth A. Morgan, estate of Edward Gaudin, and heirs of Martha Bennett Slack and Charles A. Slack—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of Charles Hallen, of New York City, against amendment of copyright law relative to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FOWLER: Petition of Christian Endeavor Union of Plainfield, N. J., against traffic in intoxicants—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Washington, State of New Jersey, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of W. H. Klinedinst, of Morristown, N. J., against proposed amendment to copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Union County Trades Council; International Moulders' Union, of North Dover, N. J., for building battle ships in United States navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Union County Board of Agriculture, of Elizabeth, N. J.—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Marion Campbell, president South Bend National Bank, for guaranty of bank deposits—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Edward J. James for H. R. 7619, for relief of Col. W. W. Robinson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Southern Indiana Teamsters' Association, for bill to pension Army teamsters (Fifty-ninth Congress, H. R. 12243; Sixtieth Congress, H. R. 8487)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of E. W. Hickman—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GORDON: Papers to accompany bills for relief of estate of John Millington and estate of Jacob Glenn—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of Lake Seamen's Union of Detroit, Mich., favoring H. R. 14941, to correct the undermanning evil on steam vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of James A. Garfield Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of San Francisco, Cal., for H. R. 220—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York City, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa: Petition of people of Grinnell, for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARDWICK: Petition of Credit Men's Association of Atlanta, Ga., for H. R. 13266, amending bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of Chicago Commercial Telegraphers' Union, for legislation on various subjects relating to telegraph companies—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Iowa State Traveling Men's Association and Council Bluffs (Iowa) Council, United Commercial Travelers' Association, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HINSHAW: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Dallas Seaburg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Mississippi: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Samuel R. Garner—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOWARD: Memorial of mayor and council of city of Brunswick, in behalf of the Atlantic and Great Western Canal—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, memorial of mayor and council of Chattanooga, Tenn., for establishment of a brigade post at Chickamauga Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Matthias J. Brower (H. R. 17252)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Petition of Mrs. M. B. Fuell, secretary Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisville, Ky., for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Irving T. Bush et al., against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, against S. 42 and H. R. 6089, S. 3043 and H. R. 12675 and 13460—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation until Immigration Commission has reported—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of H. J. Swift, representing veterans of New York, against consolidation of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Grand Street Board of Trade, for building battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LEE: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Andrew J. Casey and Zebudee Slaton—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEWIS: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Peter L. Cramer and Benjamin F. Finical—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McDERMOTT: Petition of Henry Wiegel and 1,700 others, for Federal investigation of methods of telegraph companies under certain conditions, and for legislation to cause telegraph companies to show plainly time of delivery of messages, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petition of F. F. Hull et al., of Washington County, Kans., for H. R. 40, prohibition of liquor selling in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of legal voters of the Fifth Congressional District of Nebraska, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Boston Newspapers, International Typographical Union, for repeal of tariff on white paper, wood pulp, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PRINCE: Petitions of George H. Thomas Post, No. 5, and U. S. Grant Post, No. 28, of Chicago; Jesse K. Dubois Post, No. 44, of Lawrenceville; Hiram McClintock Post, No. 667, of Lagrange; Post No. 107, of Macomb; Dixon Post, No. 299, of Dixon; Barthson Post, No. 6, of Joliet; John W. Lawrence Post, No. 296, of Carbondale; Dunham Post, No. 141, of Decatur; Veteran Post, No. 49; John A. Parrott Post, No. 543; Mattoon Post, No. 404, and Kilpatrick Post, No. 276, Grand Army of the Republic, all of the State of Illinois, for a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REID: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Beverly D. Hunt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: Petition of Irving T. Bus, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SABATH: Petition of Chicago Local, No. 1, of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, for legislation to investigate in certain particulars the status of telegraph companies—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: Petition of Phoenix, Ariz., Board of Trade, in favor of amending section 4 of an act to regulate commerce, approved June 29, 1906—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Local Union No. 352, of Phoenix, Ariz., International Typographical Union, for repeal of duty on white paper, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of National German-American Alliance, against immigration legislation—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SPIGHT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Thomas Fahey—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STERLING: Petition of Chicago Local No. 1, Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, for Federal investigation of telegraph companies—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, against S. 42 and kindred House and Senate bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Buffalo Oil, Paint, and Varnish Club, against commercial legislation affecting the paint industry—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of South Bend National Bank, of South Bend, Ind., for currency legislation—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for a permanent tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Petitions of D. W. Coffin and 15 others; of James S. Blair and 27 others; and M. L. Grist and 13 others, all of Tioga County, Pa., for S. 3152 (additional protection to dairy interests)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Local Union No. 141, International Typographical Union, of Williamsport, Pa., for repeal of duty on white paper and wood pulp—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG: Memorial of Montcalm County Farmers' Institute, of Lakeview, Mich., against reduction of tariff on sugar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 18, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 16882. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16956. An act to authorize the Hydro-Electric Company to construct a dam across White River near the village of Decker, in Knox County, Ind.; and

H. J. Res. 138. Joint resolution to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in Northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 2756. An act for the relief of L. K. Scott;

H. R. 6231. An act to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district;

H. R. 9218. An act amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes;"

H. R. 12398. An act to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain land now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation;

H. R. 12420. An act to extend immediate transportation privileges to the subport of Alburg, in the customs collection district of Vermont;

H. R. 13430. An act to authorize the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the city of Hammond, Ind.;

H. R. 14040. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties;

H. R. 14781. An act to authorize Campbell County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across Powells River; and

H. R. 16050. An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Company to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Merchants' Association of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Aldrich emergency currency bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the free frank or privilege for the transmission of messages by telegraph or telephone, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WHYTE presented a petition of the congregation of the Jones Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cecil County, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the proceedings of the Civic Center at its annual meeting held in Washington, D. C., relative to the reports of the industrial, charitable, and educational departments of the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of John Sedgwick Post, No. 4, Department of New Hampshire, Grand Army of the Republic, of Keene, N. H., praying for the passage of the so-called "Sherwood bill," granting more liberal rates of pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kent City, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Hastings, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to secure the use of the United States mail equipment; to place the rural service on a paying basis, and also against the consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry organizations of St. Peter, St. Paul, Janesville, Winona, and Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 630, International Typographical Union, of St. Cloud, Minn., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a memorial of the Southeastern South Dakota Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, of Yankton, S. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to secure the use of the United States mail equipment; to place the rural service on a paying basis, and also against the consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Citizens' Business Association, of Newport, R. I., praying that an adequate appropriation be made for the completion of the defenses at Narragansett Bay, in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Industrial Club of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pay of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue-Cutter Service, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Albany and Laramie counties, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the leasing of public grazing lands, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULBERSON presented memorials of sundry organizations of Kerrville, Nordheim, Denison, and Weimar County, all in the State of Texas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented memorials of sundry organizations of Grand Rapids, St. Croix Falls, Algonia, Plymouth, and Augusta, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to abolish certain pension agencies throughout the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 23, Web Pressmen's Union, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Milwaukee Association of Credit Men, of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the repeal of the present national bankruptcy law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WARNER presented the memorial of Edward J. Davison, of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the present copyright law relating to photographic reproductions, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of St. Louis and St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 1676) to create in the War Department a roll to be known as the volunteer retired list, to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers of the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LONG presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Marys, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the guaranty of national bank deposits, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Chapman Post, No. 362, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chapman, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called "Sherwood bill" granting more liberal rates of pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Wellington, Kans., praying that an appropriation be made for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at that city, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BURKETT presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase and equalize the pay of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue-Cutter Service, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry organizations of Kenesaw, Nebr., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the disfranchisement of citizens on account of sex, which were referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of Local Union No. 21, International Photo-Engravers Union of North America, of New York City, N. Y., and a petition of Local Union No. 167, International Typographical Union, of Schenectady, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 128, United Garment Workers of America, of Syracuse, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of all battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Gallinger bill," to prevent the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded foods, drugs, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. DOLLIVER presented a petition of Local Union No. 1, Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation placing the telegraph systems of the United States under the provisions of an act whereby any controversies threatening to interfere with the telegraph service may have Federal investigation, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Decatur County, Iowa, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Decatur County, Iowa, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prevent Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Perry, Iowa, and a memorial of the State Traveling Men's Association, of Des Moines, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of Whatsoever Circle of Burlington; of the Shakespeare Club of Burlington; of the Tourist Club of Fairbank; of the Iowa Congress of Mothers, of Des Moines; of the XV Club of Albia; of the Elkader Coterie, of Elkader, and of the Ladies' Literary Club of Laporte, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the employment of child labor, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 73, International Typographical Union, of Ottumwa, Iowa, praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Harlan Post, No. 197, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, of Harlan, Iowa, praying for the passage of the so-called "Lefean pension bill," which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary societies of Sioux City, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Vinton, Iowa, praying for the ratification of international arbitration treaties, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry retail merchants of Badger, Iowa, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend an act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PENROSE presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3136) granting an increase of pension to Annie T. Penrose, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 4957) to grant an honorable discharge to Alfred L. Dutton, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Assembly of New Athens, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of the proposed new battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BAILEY presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 796) for the relief of L. F. Gower, Laura Gower, M. R. Gower, and Mrs. Sarah P. Boykin, heirs of Dr. James Gower, deceased, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 797) for the relief of Mrs. S. E. Underwood, formerly widow of Samuel Ward, deceased, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

CARE OF INSANE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present the report of the Board of Charities to the Commissioners on the care of the insane in the District of Columbia. I move that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5083) to amend section 1 of the passenger act of 1882, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5330) for the relief of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 450) for the relief of the State of North Carolina.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 140) for the establishment of a park on the northern portion of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1559) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3923) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4171) to provide for continuation of investigations of the rivers and water resources of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey, which was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4916) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee to the board of missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church for certain lands situated in the State of Idaho, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INQUIRY AS TO CERTAIN WESTERN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. FULTON. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the joint resolution (S. R. 48) instructing the Attorney-General to institute certain suits, etc., and I submit a report thereon. I ask that the joint resolution may be read and given present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the proposed substitute will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute and prosecute any and all suits in equity, actions at law, and other proceedings which he may deem adequate and appropriate, to enforce any and all rights and remedies of the United States of America in any manner arising or growing out of, or pertaining to, either or any of the following-described acts of Congress, to wit: "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts approved June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869; also "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," approved March 3, 1869; also "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon," approved May 4, 1870, including all rights and remedies in any manner relating to the lands or any part thereof, granted by either or any of said acts; and in and by any and all such suits, actions, or proceedings, the Attorney-General shall, in such manner as he shall deem appropriate, assert all rights and remedies existing in favor of the United States relating to the subject of such suits, actions, and proceedings, including the claim on behalf of the United States that the lands granted by each of said acts, respectively, or any part thereof, have been and are forfeited to the United States, by reason of any breaches of violations of any of the terms or conditions of either or any of said acts, which may be alleged and established in any such suits, actions, or proceedings; it not being intended hereby to determine the right of the United States to any such forfeiture or forfeitures, but it being intended to fully authorize the Attorney-General, in and by such suits, actions, or proceedings to assert on behalf of the United States, and the court or courts before which suits, actions, or proceedings may be instituted or pending, to entertain, consider, and adjudicate the claim and right of the United States to such forfeiture or forfeitures, and, if found, to enforce the same.

Resolved further, That the authority and direction hereinbefore given shall extend to any and all suits, actions, or proceedings which may be instituted or pending under the authority of the Attorney-General at the time of the adoption and approval hereof.

Mr. FRYE rose.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I was going to ask the Senator from Oregon why such directions and instructions to the Attorney-General are necessary?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I was about to make a statement. My own view is that the Attorney-General would have authority probably without this joint resolution to prosecute such suits and actions as are contemplated by it; but the Department of Justice is not thoroughly satisfied that it can maintain the suits to the extent of having at least a forfeiture declared, in case it shall appear that the conditions of the grants have not been complied with, without some expression by Congress and authorization to proceed to that extent. As the Department of Justice will have charge of the litigation and is responsible for it, it seems to me proper to give it such power and authority as it deems possibly may be requisite and necessary.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the joint resolution does not assert any fact; it does not assert that there has been a violation of the terms of the grant, or declare a forfeiture. It simply authorizes the ascertainment of the fact, and authorizes the court, in case it shall determine, that a grant has been so violated as to justify a forfeiture, to decree a forfeiture.

The original joint resolution was brought in by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and this is substantially his measure, but as re-formed and put in different language by the Department of Justice itself. This joint resolution was prepared by the Department of Justice and sent to the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was a member.

Mr. TELLER rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I thought the Senator had gotten through.

Mr. FULTON. I was going to say briefly that this measure has reference to certain grants of land within the limits of the State of Oregon. I think it does not apply to any outside of that State. That is my recollection. The grants were made by Congress on the express stipulation that the lands should be sold to actual settlers only in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, and at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. It is contended that they have sold in quantities exceeding 160 acres to one party at prices exceeding $2.50 per acre. In fact there is no question but what that is true, because it was admitted at the hearing before the subcommittee.

Therefore it would seem that there has clearly been a violation of the conditions of the grant, and some action should be taken. The joint resolution simply authorizes the Department of Justice to prosecute the necessary suits and actions to determine whether there has been a violation of the grant, and to secure by judicial decree the proper relief in case it shall be so determined.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, from the reading of the joint resolution, it strikes me that it confers no authority upon the Attorney-General that he has not now. I do not know whether that is so or not, because it is almost impossible to determine a question like that from a casual reading of it. I do not want to interfere with the measure, but I think it is a pretty important question. I myself should like to look at it.

Mr. President, I do not like the idea of Congress instructing an executive officer as to what he ought to do. If the statutes are violated in any way I understand that the Department has charge of these things to look into them and determine them. For instance, if when people come for their patents the companies have sold differently from what the statutes provide, it is quite within the power of the Secretary of the Interior to withhold the patents. Then, if there has been any controversy, the Department can determine that question.

I believe it would be a very vicious practice for the legislative department to instruct an executive officer what he should do. I do not know that we can do it. I am not certain whether we can. It seems to me that this is a pretty broad and far-reaching proposition. While, undoubtedly, the inquiry ought to be made, it does not seem to me that it is necessary that we should pass a bill of this character, or what is tantamount to passing a bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the joint resolution was read, but I glanced over it hurriedly yesterday afternoon and I think I understand the scope of it.

As I introduced the original resolution for which this is in a measure a substitute, prepared by the Department of Justice itself, I will state the motives and purposes I had in view when I introduced it. I was on the Pacific coast during the last year, making two visits there, and in talking with gentlemen about the timber lands, and irrigable lands, and other lands that are much sought after in that region, I came in possession of the fact that there was a cloud on the title or the ability to purchase that nobody seemed to know how to get hold of a large area of railroad lands and some military road lands, which were held by the railroad corporations and by the corporation which had built the military road. I thought that it would be just as well for us to understand whether or not the public have any rights that are involved here. Therefore, I introduced a resolution of inquiry calling on the President to send to the Senate his version, or the version of the Department of Justice, of the situation, and I believe that paper came in yesterday, but it has not yet been printed.

I also introduced a joint resolution instructing the Department of Justice to make report and to indicate just what, in its view, was the proper step to be taken by the Government, if any, to safeguard the rights of the people as against these corporations. I understand that the Department of Justice has revised the joint resolution which I introduced, and with the explanation given by the Senator from Oregon, who is more familiar with the facts than I am, while I am perfectly willing of course that the resolution shall go over until we can all examine it more fully, I am sure that there is a great wrong being perpetrated out there, and lands which are very valuable, and which under the original grants were ordered to be sold by the railroads to purchasers, are withheld from sale and people can not get them, while a few millionaires somewhere, who own the Northern Pacific and the Southern Pacific and the Oregon and California road, are holding lands that are worth millions, which ought to be opened for entry by actual purchasers who want to buy them to make homes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the proposed substitute, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if he has requested unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. FULTON. I have, Mr. President. I will state, however, to the Senator——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, there is a request pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas requested the reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to object, so that the joint resolution may be printed and go over. Senators can then read it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have it read anyway.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is to be printed it would hardly seem necessary that we should have it read again. It is a rather long resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have it read, and I do not think it is usual to object to the reading of a joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to it, if the Senator wishes to listen to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary again read the proposed substitute.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, before the joint resolution goes over, if the Senator from New Hampshire does not at this moment insist upon his objection, I should like to make an inquiry.

I saw the joint resolution yesterday, through the kindness of the Senator from Oregon, who was polling the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, and from which it is reported, I suppose, this morning by the Senator. I read it rather carelessly. I did not see any objection to it, but as I listened to the reading of it now two or three questions arise.

In the first place, I doubt the propriety of Congress directing the Attorney-General with respect to any matter concerning which he is already fully authorized by statute, if he may be authorized. In the second place, I do not understand that there is any necessity for us to confer upon the Attorney-General by this joint resolution, or by any other provision, authority to prosecute any suit of the character mentioned in the resolution. Therefore, when it comes up I hope the Senator from Oregon will advise us whether or not in his opinion there is any lack of authority to the Attorney-General as the statutory provisions of the country now stand to bring any and all the suits that are mentioned there.

As I understand it, we are proceeding upon the theory, in passing the joint resolution, that the Attorney-General has no right to assert the rights of the United States in respect to these lands granted under the several statutes.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FULTON. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I was not through. On that point I should like the Senator, either now or to-morrow, or whenever the matter comes up, to give us the benefit of his opinion. He has doubtless investigated the subject and knows why it is thought a joint resolution of this kind may be necessary.

I do not understand that we confer any jurisdiction on any court. We simply say that the courts shall entertain these proceedings. They would entertain them, anyhow, if the Attorney-General has a right to bring the suits. So I do not see any necessity for a measure of this kind. We are bound to presume that the Attorney-General, certainly when his attention has been called to the subject, would proceed to start whatever legal proceedings he might deem necessary in order to protect the rights of the United States and to recover for the United States any rights that might be in jeopardy or that may have been lost to the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator to withhold the objection for a moment. I wish to say just a word before it goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will do so.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to say, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, that I think if he takes into consideration one fact he will urge no objection to this course of proceeding, namely, that where a grant is made on a condition subsequent, as I think it quite possible that these grants will be held to have been made, there is a rule which requires a declaration of forfeiture and reentry on the part of the grantor in order to recover his estate.

The joint resolution does not declare a forfeiture, but it authorizes the Attorney-General, in behalf of the Government, to take the proceedings necessary to reentry for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been a violation of the stipulation, and, if there has been one, then to assert the right on behalf of the grantor to reenter and reinvest itself as of its original estate.

I do not say as a matter of law that this is absolutely necessary, but it is at least a debatable question. It is in the mind of the Attorney-General a debatable question. I am rather inclined to think myself that proceedings could be had without the passage of the joint resolution, but certainly there is no objection to doing whatever is necessary on behalf of the Government to assert its title and recover its estate if the conditions have been violated.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will allow me a moment, I think this is the true explanation. Our Supreme Court years ago, in the matter of a Wisconsin land grant, I think, decided that in case a land grant was subject to forfeiture for condition broken that forfeiture could be enforced in one of two ways—either Congress itself, which gave the grant, could declare an absolute forfeiture, or it was a matter that could be enforced in the courts.

Now, there being pursuant to that decision two tribunals that could pass on this question we are simply expressing by the joint resolution that we prefer that the courts should take action in it rather than Congress, and for this reason I think that there may be equities in the case which can be adjusted.

All we could do would be to declare an absolute forfeiture, but if a suit is instituted in a court of equity the court can adjust the equities and declare a conditional forfeiture. In other words, it can say to the railroad company what we could not say, "If you comply with the conditions of the grant and do not sell your land in larger quantities than 160 acres to each settler and sell to actual settlers, and if you will not charge more than $2.50 an acre, we will not declare your grant forfeited."

We are handicapped in that way. We could not do what a court of equity could, but as one of the tribunals that would have jurisdiction in declaring a forfeiture we indicate by the joint resolution that we prefer it should be done through the Department of Justice, which is eminently proper.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Minnesota for the suggestion he has made. I was only asking for information. I am not familiar with the subject. I do not know anything about what an investigation would disclose. I was only speaking of the joint resolution as it appears on its face. It does not appear to be a declaration by Congress that there has been a forfeiture or that there should be a forfeiture declared, but simply a direction to the Attorney-General to bring certain suits, which he is already authorized to bring, so far as I have any knowledge.

My point in calling attention to the matter was to make an inquiry of the Senator from Oregon, or anyone else who is informed, so as to learn whether there is any lack of authority. If so, I have no objection whatever to giving the Attorney-General full authority to investigate it; but if he already has authority, it is his business to proceed, and I doubt the propriety of directing him to do what he seems to be already engaged in doing, for the joint resolution recites that it shall apply to pending cases of the character mentioned as well as to others that he may see fit to bring.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, there are no pending cases. That was put in, I suppose, thinking there might be delay in passing the joint resolution, to cover any suit that might be instituted. The Department of Justice is, I understand, prepared to file the suits at the present time.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Attorney-General have authority to bring such suits as the recitation of the fact that this shall apply to pending cases indicates that it was thought by those who drew the resolution he does have, I do not see how we are adding to his authority. It was unnecessary to say that he has authority, and if he have authority and is already engaged, as the pendency of suits indicates he is engaged, in trying to regain the rights of the Government, if any be lost, there is no necessity to direct him. But I was not saying that there is no lack of authority; I was only asking to be informed on that point.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will let me have just one other sentence——

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state the other point I had in mind and to which I referred. I supposed the joint resolution would proceed to confer jurisdiction of some special kind on some special courts. But I do not understand that it does.

Mr. FULTON. No, it does not do that. What I was going to suggest to the Senator is that the very circumstance that the Department of Justice prepared the joint resolution and requested that it be passed is evidence of the fact that it is in some doubt, at least, that it has the authority necessary in order to allow it to proceed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the question involved is confined to the land in Oregon by the joint resolution, but facts of a kindred character are common to nearly all the land-grant States. Within the land grants of the several Pacific railroads this question has been one of very great importance for a number of years. The only action that could be brought by the Attorney-General would be one for the declaration of a forfeiture upon conditions subsequent to the grant.

Now, the United States is interested, of course. If the lands are forfeited, they are forfeited to the United States, and would be open to sale by the United States under the land laws. But the people who are really interested in this question are the thousands and thousands who have sought to purchase the lands throughout the last forty years and who have been refused the right to do so. The Attorney-General can afford them no relief. They, of course, have been unable to maintain any kind of legal proceedings to accomplish the right to buy the land. A pioneer would go to the land office of the railroad company and make a request that he be permitted to purchase a quarter section of land at the maximum price of two dollars and a half per acre, and they would advise him that it was not on the market. That was a violation of the act under which they took the land. Had the settler been able to do it, he might have brought a suit to compel them to sell him the land, because under the terms of the land grant they were obliged to sell it to the settlers of the class and upon the conditions expressed in the act granting them the land.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator that it has been held, at least in some cases, that no one can take advantage of the condition subsequent to the grant, such as this is, excepting the grantor himself.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was coming to that question. That is the nub of the subject to which I am referring. The settler could not maintain the action for two reasons. He could not maintain it because he was not financially able, as a rule, although perhaps some of them were, and he could not maintain it, under the rule, as has been held in these cases, because, it being a condition subsequent, he could not take advantage of it; the grant had attached and it could only be detached by a proceeding brought for that purpose by the Government, from whom the grant flowed.

This question involves millions of acres of land, and the amount involved has been growing from year to year. I have within my own knowledge a number of cases where parties desire to purchase this land, because, forsooth, they found themselves upon railroad sections when the surveys were made, while they had been living in peace for many years, supposing that they were upon even-numbered sections, and had made valuable improvements. I have one case in mind where the improvements consisted of orchards, cultivated fields, and fences, a fine residence and barns, and an established business, and the terms offered were, "You will pay us the price of the land and you will pay us also for the value of the improvements which you have put upon it." I know of one case where the settler yielded to it rather than to be dispossessed of a home he had occupied for years. I know of another case, the one to which I referred, where negotiations are pending now between the settler and the railroad company.

Under the law the railroad company were obliged to throw this land open for settlement. The Government never would have given them this vast grant had they not agreed that they would do it, because to do otherwise would have retarded the settlement of the country, the very thing which the lawmakers had in mind should be acccomplished. So they have violated the terms under which they took the grant. These grants are worth hundreds of millions of dollars. We have a very large item of governmental enterprise in the sale of lands to the railroad companies upon a condition that runs with the grant—that they shall sell them within a maximum price to a settler and that they shall not sell them in greater quantities than the homestead limit. I know of instances in which the railroad companies have sold lands upon which this limitation of area was placed in quantities hundreds of times in excess of the limitation of the act under which they took their grant, but there was no one in a position to bring a suit to enforce the terms of the grant except the Government of the United States, because the condition was one subsequent to the grant, of which an individual might not take advantage in the courts. The United States for forty or fifty years has stood by and seen the settler deprived of his right to select and pay for a homestead and has allowed the railroad company to hold the lands for advanced prices to the detriment and discouragement of settlers and the prevention of the settlement of the public lands of the United States. That is the real question involved in the joint resolution.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether any limitation attached to the original Northern Pacific land grant?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. By the act of 1864?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, Mr. President; the land grant which to-day belongs to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as much as it did when the grant was made had conditions attached to it. I would refer the Senator to the very plain language of the act itself. There are now pending proceedings in this body before one of the standing committees to inquire as to the facts under which the pretended reorganization of that road took place, when a fictitious mortgage, called the "consolidated mortgage," for $260,000,000, I believe, was foreclosed in order to make an excuse for the transfer of the title to the lands to a company that was reorganized by changing one word in the name of the company. It was done by the foreclosure of a mortgage they had made in violation of the law that organized the corporation and granted the land, and which provided that they should make no mortgage without the consent of Congress. They made a mortgage of $50,000,000 without the consent of Congress, and then they proceeded to make two more mortgages, the last one called the "consolidated mortgage," which they foreclosed when it was not due and when it was made without authority of law; and the title to those lands is to-day—and it was part of those lands that I referred to when I said that there are pending to-day negotiations between the claimant to those lands and the settler upon them involving the question as to whether they shall be permitted to purchase without paying for the valuable improvements which he himself has placed upon the lands——

Mr. DIXON. What I especially wanted to inquire of the Senator from Idaho was whether or not there was a specific limitation of two dollars and a half per acre upon the original Northern Pacific land grant?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that was the maximum price of the land.

Mr. DIXON. As I remember, from an examination of the act of 1864, something like two or three years ago there was no such limitation in the act; and for that reason I make the present inquiry, as I have had several communications from my State regarding this same matter and complaint from the settlers that lands have been withdrawn from the market. The Senator now states that this condition did attach to the grant of 1864 in the case of the Northern Pacific.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Northern Pacific Railroad Company were compelled to sell its lands to the bona fide homesteader or to the men entitled to purchase them at the maximum price fixed by the Government for the sale of those lands, and that they had no option in doing it.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not care to go into an extended discussion of this question, but I am very much in hope that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will allow the joint resolution to be considered at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Oregon feels that he can get a vote on the joint resolution speedily, I certainly will withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was thinking of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who has given notice that he wishes to address the Senate, when I thought that it ought to go over, because there seemed to be such a wide difference of opinion amongst the lawyers on this question.

Mr. FULTON. Then I will not take up further time, but will simply say, to supplement what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has said, that in the State of Oregon the railroads are now refusing absolutely to sell these lands at any price and have withdrawn them from the market. We want these suits prosecuted to determine whether or not they can be compelled to conform to and comply with the conditions of the grant. I am anxious that this shall be disposed of speedily.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether or not the joint resolution applies to anything except the Oregon land-grant roads?

Mr. FULTON. It only applies to three grants that are in Oregon—two railway grants and one wagon-road grant. I will say that my recollection is different from that of the Senator from Idaho. I do not think that any such conditions were in the Northern Pacific grant at all.

Mr. DIXON. That was my impression from my examination of the act.

Mr. FULTON. But that is not material here, because the lands are in fact the specific lands covered by the joint resolution and are pointed out by it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I have here the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I will not take the time of the Senate to read it, but I think from an inspection of the act that the Senator from Idaho is mistaken. There was no such condition as he states in that grant.

Mr. FULTON. I looked the matter up myself, and I am confident that the statement as to there being any such condition in that grant is a mistake.

Mr. President, I reported the joint resolution as a substitute; therefore I move to indefinitely postpone the original, and ask that the one now reported may take its place.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is a matter that ought not to be passed upon without some consideration. I am going to object to its further discussion at this time if the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] withdraws his objection.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; then I move to indefinitely postpone the original joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the circumstances I insist upon my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks that the original joint resolution for which the one he has reported is a substitute be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator I think—I do not know what the particular ruling may have been heretofore—but I think the Senator is mistaken in making that motion.

Mr. FULTON. I may be.

Mr. BACON. If the joint resolution is indefinitely postponed before the substitute is adopted, of course, the whole thing goes out.

Mr. LODGE. I thought this was an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. FULTON. It is.

Mr. BACON. It is, and consequently the original can not be disposed of until the substitute has been acted upon.

Mr. FULTON. I was under the impression that reporting a substitute required that the original be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BACON and Mr. LODGE. No, no.

Mr. FULTON. If not, I withdraw the motion that the original joint resolution be indefinitely postponed. It is perfectly immaterial to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his motion. The joint resolution will go to the Calendar.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee and to have the same printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 5415) granting an honorable discharge to John H. Smith; and

A bill (S. 5416) granting an honorable discharge to John Hebner.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5417) granting an increase of pension to William W. Sechler;

A bill (S. 5418) granting an increase of pension to Sophia Hale; and

A bill (S. 5419) granting an increase of pension to Ira Hess (with the accompanying papers).

Mr. OVERMAN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5420) for the relief of the Zion African Methodist Episcopal Church of Beaufort, N. C.; and

A bill (S. 5421) for the relief of Grace Protestant Episcopal Church of Plymouth, N. C.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5422) to renew and extend certain letters patent, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BROWN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5423) granting an increase of pension to John S. McCammon; and

A bill (S. 5424) granting an increase of pension to John M. Bayley.

Mr. BRYAN introduced a bill (S. 5425) to amend section 1624, article 34, of the Revised Statutes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5426) for the relief of Robert Broadbent, Barger Holst, James A. Dunham, Byron Dawley, Axel Rosendahl, and Will J. Elliott; and

A bill (S. 5427) for the relief of Armstead James.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5428) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Abraham Collinsworth, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5429) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square No. 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. By request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia I introduce a bill. I ask that it be read twice and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 5430) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the powers of a public service commission, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 5431) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5432) for the relief of the board of county commissioners of Shawnee County, Kans., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 5433) granting an increase of pension to James T. Ramey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 5434) to provide for finishing the crypt of the chapel, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5435) for the relief of the heirs or the legal representatives of the estate of George W. Foster; and

A bill (S. 5436) for the relief of the heirs or the legal representatives of the estate of George W. Foster (with accompanying paper).

He also (by request) introduced the following bills, which were severaly read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5437) for the relief of heirs and estate of James H. Ware, deceased;

A bill (S. 5438) for the relief of Amanda M. Warren;

A bill (S. 5439) for the relief of James T. White;

A bill (S. 5440) for the relief of Francis Wilkes;

A bill (S. 5441) for the relief of Phillip D. Wright;

A bill (S. 5442) for the relief of William M. Underwood;

A bill (S. 5443) for the relief of Sarah Autrey;

A bill (S. 5444) for the relief of Mrs. Cassa Simpson;

A bill (S. 5445) for the relief of J. W. Smart;

A bill (S. 5446) for the relief of Thomas Seymour;

A bill (S. 5447) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Sanders;

A bill (S. 5448) for the relief of heirs and estate of Sidney F. Tate, deceased;

A bill (S. 5449) for the relief of heirs and estate of Elizabeth Thompson, deceased;

A bill (S. 5450) for the relief of heirs and estate of Marcus M. Massengale, deceased;

A bill (S. 5451) for the relief of heirs and estate of W. J. Langston, deceased;

A bill (S. 5452) for the relief of heirs and estate of Mary McCaa, deceased;

A bill (S. 5453) for the relief of James R. Nance;

A bill (S. 5454) for the relief of heirs and estate of J. E. Prestridge, deceased;

A bill (S. 5455) for the relief of heirs and estate of Preston Smith, deceased;

A bill (S. 5456) for the relief of heirs and estate of Bradford Hambrick, deceased;

A bill (S. 5457) for the relief of heirs and estate of Thomas Knight, deceased;

A bill (S. 5458) for the relief of heirs and estates of Enoch R. and Louisa J. Kennedy, deceased;

A bill (S. 5459) for the relief of John T. Graves;

A bill (S. 5460) for the relief of heirs and estate of Mirah Ballard, deceased;

A bill (S. 5461) for the relief of heirs and estate of David Crowell, deceased;

A bill (S. 5462) for the relief of Griffin Callahan;

A bill (S. 5463) for the relief of heirs and estate of William Cunningham, deceased;

A bill (S. 5464) for the relief of heirs and estate of Elizabeth and Stephen Cordell, deceased;

A bill (S. 5465) for the relief of heirs and estate of Annie Dunn, deceased;

A bill (S. 5466) for the relief of Ransom Day;

A bill (S. 5467) for the relief of heirs and estate of Minor Gwin, deceased;

A bill (S. 5468) for the relief of heirs and estate of Mathew N. Grimmett, deceased;

A bill (S. 5469) for the relief of heirs and estate of Joseph Logan, deceased;

A bill (S. 5470) for the relief of D. M. Snowden;

A bill (S. 5471) for the relief of William C. Bragg; and

A bill (S. 5472) for the relief of heirs and estate of Solomon Smith, deceased.

Mr. BURROWS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service; and

A bill (S. 5474) for the relief of Harry Kimmell, a commander on the retired list of the United States Navy (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 5475) for the relief of the estate of J. W. W. Marshall, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULTON introduced a bill (S. 5476) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5477) authorizing States and Territories to select lands in lieu of lands included within forest reserves, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 5478) granting a pension to Harriet L. Curtis, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5479) for the relief of the Christian Church of Suffolk, Va.; and

A bill (S. 5480) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Onancock, Va.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5481) for the relief of Richard Cole, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 5482) for the relief of the estate of Francis Mayerhoff, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 5483) granting an increase of pension to John Whitaker, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 5484) granting an increase of pension to James Ross, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 5485) for the relief of the board of trustees of the public schools of Darlington, S. C., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5486) to provide for the arrest of deserters from the naval service of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 5487) for the relief of the heirs of Aaron W. Da Costa, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5488) granting an increase of pension to James G. Thompson, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5489) granting an increase of pension to William Milford Ingraham, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORE introduced a bill (S. 5490) for the relief of the legal representatives of Anthony W. Cannon, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5491) to increase the efficiency of the pay department, United States Army, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that 100 additional copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 57) providing for reciprocal trackage arrangements between the Brightwood Railway Company and the Washington Railway and Electric Company in the District of Columbia, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment relative to the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the surveyor-general of Utah from $2,000 to $3,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment relative to the office of assistant treasurer at Boston, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment relative to the restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of certain land in Oklahoma, and enabling Nicey Haikey, a full blood Creek, to sell or encumber her interest in the land free from such restrictions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15732, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. WARNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF THE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BRYAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2803) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to try, adjudicate, and determine certain claims for compensation for carrying the mails and pay for the discontinuance of postal service, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Post-Office Department 15,000 copies of Annual Report of the Postmaster-General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907.

I will state that the printing called for by this order will cost a little over $400 and that the order is introduced at the request of the Postmaster-General.

The order was agreed to.

SURVEY OF PROVIDENCE RIVER AND HARBOR, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of Providence River and Harbor between Kettle Point, Rhode Island, and Gaspee Point, Rhode Island, with a view to widening and straightening the channel and dredging the same to a depth of 25 feet at mean low water, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

GROUNDS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The concurrent resolution was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the lowest purchase price of blocks numbered 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 292, 293, 294, 295, 349, 350, 380, 381, 382, 461, 575, 576, reservation A, reservation B, reservation C, reservation D, reservation 12, according to the official plat of the city of Washington, not already owned in whole or in part by the Government of the United States, report to be made to Congress at the earliest practicable day, the proposed price of the land and the proposed price of the improvements thereon being separately stated in each case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to say, Mr. President, that the resolution covers the land on the south side of the Avenue concerning which there has been a great deal of discussion. I thought it desirable that we should ascertain if we can how much money it is going to cost the Government before we get any deeper into the project. I simply ask that the concurrent resolution may be printed and go over to come up to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. HOPKINS submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Congress of the United States recognizes with satisfaction the traditional friendly feeling existing between the Russian people and the people of the United States and the friendly relations past and present between the Russian Government and the Government of the United States, and gladly acknowledges the service rendered by His Imperial Highness the Czar of Russia in summoning the Hague Peace Conference, whose beneficent purpose has been not only to prevent wars between nations but to reduce the horrors of wars which may in future arise; and

Whereas, the Congress has received a petition signed by well-known American citizens in which on the authority of official reports of the Russian Government it is declared "women, children, and aged and decrepit men—patently noncombatants—are maimed and killed," "tortures are applied to prisoners within fortresses and prisons to elicit information," "massacres are planned and effected by the police and military authorities for the purpose of terrorizing the population;" and

Whereas widowed, orphaned, and impoverished survivors of such massacres and cruelties have found their way in large numbers to this country, ofttimes bereft of their natural supporters and in great destitution: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States deplores such acts of violence and inhumanity which shock the civilized world and retard universal progress.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JAMES W. HOUSER.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, it was Ordered, That James W. Houser, the beneficiary named in the bill (S. 569) to correct the military record of James W. Houser, be allowed to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers filed in support of said bill, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE FUTURE OF COMMERCE.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 277, Sixtieth Congress, first session, "The Future of Commerce," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

MAN AND ABNORMAL MAN.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, on Friday, February 14, the Senate entered an order for the reprinting of a document known as "Man and Abnormal Man." It has not yet gone to press, and I move that the vote by which that order was made be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I have opposed the reprinting of that document every time it has been offered here, and I shall continue to do so.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 12401. An act to legalize a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rice, Minn., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 15660. An act to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public laws was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 16882. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 16956. An act to authorize the Hydro-Electric Company to construct a dam across White River near the village of Decker, in Knox County, Ind., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. J. Res. 138. Joint resolution to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in Northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

STATUE OF JABEZ LAMAR MONROE CURRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the statue of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, presented by the State of Alabama to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished civic services.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of Alabama.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) for the appointment of a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than Members of Congress" shall be filled by the appointment of Charles F. Choate, jr., a citizen of Massachusetts.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 57. An act granting a pension to Alvah Moulton;

S. 523. An act granting an increase of pension to John S. Hyatt;

S. 524. An act granting an increase of pension to John Lowder;

S. 638. An act granting a pension to Emily Ayres;

S. 920. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Kenny;

S. 1171. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Sands;

S. 1403. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Stewart;

S. 1404. An act granting an increase of pension to John Lourcey;

S. 1405. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. O'Neal;

S. 1406. An act granting an increase of pension to Hester Kite;

S. 1408. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Sweat;

S. 1423. An act granting an increase of pension to Nancy Motes; and

S. 1757. An act granting an increase of pension to Jane C. Stingley.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

ACCOUNTS OF POSTMASTERS IN COLORADO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on February 17, 1908, relating to accounts of postmasters in Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution may lie over subject to call. Some Senators may want to look at it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over, subject to call, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 3023 be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss in its larger aspects the financial system or the banking system which has grown up in this country under the fostering care of the Republican party, but I do desire to submit a few observations pertinent to existing conditions and to the pending bill. The panic through which we have been passing for some months, and which still prevails, both as an existing evil and as a menace, is, in a general way and in most discussions, attributed to shortage in available currency. Undoubtedly, this contention has a basis of fact; but it is also true that this shortage was not so much due to an inadequate money volume as to the fact that the money of the country was too much concentrated at given points—or at a given point—instead of being properly distributed. Even under ordinary and normal conditions an undue amount of the nation's money supply is concentrated at New York, and in times when speculation is at fever heat the banks of New York entice still larger sums to their vaults by offering extraordinary inducements in the way of high interest to their interior correspondents. Under these circumstances when a crash comes, as it did last fall, the money of the interior banks is in danger of being withheld from them at a time when it is most sorely needed. When the banks of New York refuse to return the money they have borrowed according to the terms of their contracts, the banks from whom it was borrowed are necessarily embarrassed. As soon as the banks are unable to meet the checks of their depositors and to furnish currency with which to supply the industrial necessities of their respective communities, public confidence is shaken, large sums are stored in secret places, and industrial stagnation results, for money is the lifeblood of business.

When a bank refuses to pay what is due to a customer, it is no answer, or at best but an unsatisfactory answer, to say that the bank has abundant securities, that it is solvent, and that it will be all right as soon as it can get its money from other banks with which it has been deposited. That does not restore confidence nor bring forth the cash which has sought hiding in safety vaults and secret places; that does not calm unrest, nor prevent runs upon and the wreck of banks. We are told that it was to meet conditions arising from these and like causes—causes that produce a scarcity of money—that the pending bill, known as the Aldrich bill, was prepared and reported by the majority of the Finance Committee. Its avowed purpose is to provide a temporary currency to meet an emergency like that through which we have been passing. I am not prepared to say that the bill as it came from the committee, if enacted into law, would be valueless in times of stress or that it would wholly fail to accomplish the end it is intended to subserve; but at most it is only a makeshift, and though possibly it may be better than nothing, although as to that I am far from satisfied, it is constructed on wrong lines, and it is too narrow and circumscribed in its scope. In the first place, I am opposed to conferring these great additional favors and powers upon national banks. In fact, I have never been enamored of this national banking system we have. The idea of a corporation usurping and exercising the functions of the sovereign has always been obnoxious to me. The power they can exercise upon the political and industrial well-being of the nation is enormous; and although it is no doubt entirely true that the national banker is as patriotic as the average citizen, yet money and business with him, as with others, are generally selfish and grasping things, and dividends are often regarded as of more consequence than patriotism. I regard with extreme disfavor the policy of vesting in banking corporations such power as gives opportunity to unduly influence the financial policy of a great people. I object to giving to banks the power to regulate in any degree the volume of the people's currency by expanding or contracting it as it may happen to suit their whim or their interests. We have practically turned over to the 6,000 national banks in this country the high prerogative of supplying the people with money wherewith to transact their business. Under the law they have the right now to take out additional circulation in the form of bank notes to the amount of hundreds of millions above and beyond the circulation it has pleased them to furnish the people, and under the law they have the right now to retire millions of their outstanding circulation from year to year. In other words, they have the high prerogative of supplying a large proportion of our currency and the power to expand and contract it within certain limitations as it may please them to do. To pass this bill in its present form would augment that power. It would afford a new opportunity to expand and contract the currency on a larger scale and with greater rapidity than under the present law. Five hundred millions of emergency currency could be taken out, and it could afterwards be returned to the Treasury whenever and as rapidly as the banks might wish to return it.

Counting the present sum of cash money available for ordinary business at $2,000,000,000, if we should add $500,000,000 to that sum, under the authority of this bill, it would increase the total available cash to $2,500,000,000. Of this sum one-fifth, or $500,000,000, being emergency currency, could be taken out and returned in such a way and with such manipulation as to materially affect property values through a process of rapid expansion and contraction. I fear we may open a "Pandora's box" if we pass this bill in its present form. There is a community of interest between the banks, and cooperation along the whole line to accomplish given objects is not difficult. Combined and under trained and adroit leadership, these institutions can, as they have often in the past, exercise a tremendous influence on our financial and business affairs and on our national public policies. Instead of conferring additional powers and privileges upon them I would esteem it by far the wiser course to curtail the powers and abridge the opportunities they already enjoy. Mr. President, I am not altogether opposed to what is called an "emergency currency," but I would have the Government itself issue the money instead of the banks. I would have the Government issue the currency—full legal-tender currency—instead of delegating the power of issuing it to corporations it had created; and the return of the money to the Treasury should be so regulated and made so gradual as to prevent a destructive depreciation of values by a too rapid contraction. So far as the redemption of this proposed new currency goes, the Government is ultimately liable in any event, even though the money issued under the terms of the bill should be in the form of bank notes put out by national banking associations. True, the Government would hold the securities of the banks to indemnify it against loss whenever it should redeem any of this currency on the demand of the holder, but why go about the business in this circuitous way? Why authorize the banks to issue emergency notes, which would not be legal tenders, when the Government might issue a full legal-tender currency, and therefore a more valuable currency, and take securities in its own name sufficient to insure the return of the money to the Treasury when the necessity for its issue had passed?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. Would it disturb the Senator if I asked him a question?

Mr. STONE. Certainly not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask for information.

The Senator is now suggesting a new method of currency, to be issued by the Government. I should like to ask the Senator if during his speech he will develop how such an emergency as occurred in the latter part of October last could be reached by the Government currency such as he speaks of.

Mr. STONE. Reached in what way?

Mr. HOPKINS. How would you get a hundred million or two hundred million or three hundred million dollars of money out within a few days in order to stop such a crisis as we had the latter part of October, 1907?

Mr. STONE. It could be deposited in depositories.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I think I now understand the Senator. The Senator would have Government money and allow the banks to take the money the same as they hold it now.

Mr. STONE. Money issued by the Government, legal-tender money, could be placed in the banks as an emergency currency substantially as is provided for in the Aldrich bill for placing bank notes in the banks.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose the Government was to issue $200,000,000 under a call of that kind. The Senator, if I understand him, would have the money deposited in the various banks. How would the Senator have the Government protected in the distribution of the $200,000,000?

Mr. STONE. Protected in what way?

Mr. HOPKINS. Under the Aldrich bill if $200,000,000 are to be distributed to the banks the banks are required to put up bonds with the Secretary of the Treasury to protect the Government.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. If they are municipal bonds, the banks can receive in currency only 90 per cent of the value of the bonds; if railroad bonds, only 75 per cent.

Now, the Senator from Missouri says he would do away with this plan entirely. He would not have the banks issue the money at all, but would have the Government do it, and he would have the Government's money deposited with the banks. Now, what method of security does he favor for the Government?

Mr. STONE. The Senator goes into a matter of detail, but substantially the same process could be followed in putting out Government money, the same securities could be provided for, the same rate of interest could be charged, and the same provision made for its return that might be made in case the issue was of bank notes. Why not?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was simply getting at the manner by which the Senator would make his bill practical. As I understand the Senator under these inquiries, he would make the national banks the Government agents in nearly the same form that they would be under the Aldrich bill?

Mr. STONE. That might be. Mr. President, there is pending a substitute to the Aldrich bill, offered by the Senator from Texas, to substitute Government notes for bank notes, with a provision for depositing it, for putting it in circulation, with interest charges upon it, and for its return to the Treasury. I do not care to discuss the details of that proposition, but that proposition furnishes an answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say that I am familiar with the amendment which is to be proposed by the Senator from Texas, but I did not understand the Senator's remarks to be in favor of that measure. I had supposed, from his remarks, that he had a scheme of his own——

Mr. STONE. I have no special scheme.

Mr. HOPKINS. And that was the reason why I put to him the question that I did.

Mr. STONE. It is not my purpose to discuss the details of any particular bill, unless it be to some extent the Aldrich bill, but I desire merely to indicate in general terms my preference for some such plan as I have outlined in favor of Government currency instead of bank currency.

I am one of those old-fashioned Democrats who still believes that it is the constitutional function and duty of the sovereign, in this case the Government of the United States, to make money for the use of the people, and I feel that the Government is engaged in a sorry business whenever it abdicates that high function and delegates that sovereign power to an individual or corporation. After all we depend upon the Government, not upon the banks, to uphold the stability of our currency. The permanent value of the bank note depends ultimately—aye, primarily—upon the fact that the Government of the United States is behind it. Its value rests upon the faith our people and the world have in the credit of the Government. Sweep aside the banks and substitute the Government instead and the currency you are seeking to provide against emergencies can be supplied just as readily and conveniently by the Government itself as it can be in a secondary way through the agency of the banks. I shall vote therefore, Mr. President, for the emergency Treasury note instead of the emergency bank note.

Mr. President, at this juncture I wish to add that it seems to me that no good reason exists why State banks and trust companies, as well as national banks, should not be permitted to avail themselves of the privileges of this proposed enactment. The currency to be issued is an emergency currency intended to be used to bridge over a temporary strain upon the resources of banks, and to be subject to such interest charges as will compel its return to the Treasury when the need for it is past. If a State bank, serving important constituencies, can furnish the required securities, why should it not be permitted to avail itself of the benefits of this emergency issue and thereby serve a public necessity? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has introduced a bill having this object in view, and if he can embody the substance of that bill in an amendment to this bill in such a way as to make it germane and pertinent I will take pleasure in supporting it.

RESERVES.

Mr. President, while we are dealing with this subject of an emergency currency there are two or three other things so related to it that they ought to be dealt with at the same time. The sole purpose of the pending bill is to provide for emergencies arising in times of financial panic. While in the business of legislating to ameliorate the evils of an effect, why should not we at the same time do something to eradicate the cause? Today we see and feel the effect, and anticipating its continuance and repetition, the Finance Committee, or a majority of it, are proceeding with the narrow and single idea of softening the severity of this effect, while leaving untouched the causes which produced it. We may not know all of these causes, but we do know some of them. While striving to alleviate the effect, why not at the same time strive to eradicate as far as possible the cause? One cause which produces these financial lockups and panics is due to the fact that too small a percentage of the legal bank reserves are held in the banks to which the reserves belong. Under the law the average national bank is required to keep at least 15 per cent of its deposits as a reserve. A few of the larger banks in the larger cities—reserve cities and central reserve cities, as they are called—are required to keep 25 per cent of their deposits in reserve. But the law also permits the average bank to deposit three-fifths of its reserve in the reserve city banks, retaining only two-fifths in their own vaults, and the reserve city banks can loan out practically one-half of this money when deposited with them—money which the banks depositing it could not themselves ordinarily loan to their own customers. Last fall when the New York banks arbitrarily refused to pay currency to their customers the outside banks found that three-fifths of their legal reserves were caught in the trap. If this money, or the greater part of it, had been kept at home and had been in the vaults of the banks to which it belonged, there would have been millions of ready cash available, and there would have been doubtless little occasion for the interior banks to suspend cash payments across their counters, and they would no doubt have been able to supply an adequate volume of currency to move the crops and transact the business of their communities. It has been said that even if these reserves had been kept in the local banks they could not have been used without contravening the law, the theory being that reserves are held as a security or safety fund and can not be introduced into the ordinary course of business; but I do not think that that is absolutely true under the terms of the law, and it is certainly not true in the actual practice of the banks. The reserves are held not alone as a foundation of solvency, but also as a base upon which business may be transacted in times of emergency and stress. I have no doubt that reserves can be trenched upon, at least for the purpose of paying depositors. But in any event if this emergency legislation upon which we are now engaged is to be enacted, the banks should be required to keep a larger percentage of their reserves at home, instead of farming them out to distant banks.

They could invest these reserves in State, county, and municipal bonds, bearing 3 and 4 per cent, and hold them as a part of their reserves. A bond bearing 4 per cent per annum would produce as much in the long run as money loaned to the New York banks, which yields a part of the time as low as 2 per cent, and rarely ever higher than 6 per cent to the depositing bank. If that should be done, then in times of emergency the banks could, under the provisions of the proposed law, use their bonds, or a part of them, to procure emergency currency at the Treasury to tide them over. The Senator from Rhode Island himself put a provision in his original bill requiring the banks to hold at least three-fifths of their reserves in their own vaults, and he said in the debate on Tuesday last that he still believed that provision to be wise, but that he had consented to its elimination in order to confine the pending measure to the single purpose of providing an emergency issue; but, Mr. President, if the evil we are legislating against can be even partly traced to this cause is it not the height of folly to ignore the cause while providing a temporary relief for the immediate effect? Unless we strike at the root of the evil we fail at the most important juncture of our duty, and all we can hope to accomplish will be only a piece of patchwork of little consequence. Therefore, I shall vote to embrace in this measure some remedy for this productive source of financial misfortune.

GUARANTY FUND.

Mr. President, some provision ought also to be made in this bill to protect depositors in national banks against loss in the event of a bank's insolvency. These banks enjoy great special privileges, and loss by a depositor who intrusts his money to their care should be made as nearly impossible as may be, and the fact that provision was made to guarantee depositors against loss would greatly strengthen the credit and increase the usefulness of the national banks. Two propositions having that end in view are pending. One of these is in the form of a bill (S. 3028) introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. This bill provides in substance for an association of national banks, and that whenever a bank belonging to the association fails the Comptroller of the Currency shall as speedily as practicable assess the remaining banks in the association their pro rata of the indebtedness due depositors by the insolvent institution, and to collect and pay the same to the depositors entitled thereto. It further provides that when the affairs of the insolvent bank are wound up the revenue realized from its assets, after paying expenses, shall be distributed pro rata among the contributing banks of the association in proportion to their respective contributions. The bill of the Senator from Texas does not make it compulsory upon any bank to enter the association, but it would deny certain privileges to those who refuse to enter which would be enjoyed by those who become parties to the compact. If this plan should be adopted, I have no doubt that practically every national bank in the country would sooner or later take membership in the association. The bank refusing to do so would place itself more or less under suspicion and would operate at a disadvantage.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has given notice that he would propose an amendment to the pending bill to the general effect that one-third of all taxes to be paid by national banking associations upon the average amount of their notes in circulation should be set apart in the Treasury of the United States as a permanent special fund, to be termed the "Depositors' fund," to be used in paying all depositors, except the United States, the amount of their deposits in any national bank that had become insolvent and for which a receiver had been appointed. This proposed amendment would make it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay all depositors of an insolvent bank, except the United States, the amount of their several deposits out of this special fund, and the United States would be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the depositors, and the moneys collected by the United States as a result of such subrogation, or so much as might be necessary to restore the amount taken from the fund would be returned to the fund. The Senator for Minnesota would limit the amount of this special fund to the sum of $10,000,000. I think it would have improved the proposition if the Senator had provided for a fund of $20,000,000 instead of $10,000,000, and also to have provided for a special additional tax—a small tax, of course—for the purpose of creating and maintaining the fund. However, that is a matter of detail, and it is not my purpose at this moment to discuss this question of a guaranty in detail, or to make comparison of the respective merits of the two propositions to which I have referred. I am not so particular about the form as I am about the substance of such a law. I am measurably indifferent as to the exact method that may be adopted to secure the end. What I want to see done is to have some provision inserted in this legislation that would accomplish the end in view. I shall vote, therefore, to incorporate some such provision in the pending bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly interrupt the Senator, but I should like to have his view upon one consideration in connection with the matter which he is now presenting to the Senate, and which I understand he has practically concluded.

I presume it will be recognized that no bank can do a profitable business unless it has a reasonable line of deposits. I presume it will also be recognized that if the national banks were under the law so situated that they could guarantee deposits and avail themselves of the opportunity, they doubtless would do so for the reason suggested by the Senator, that those who did not avail themselves of the opportunity would be under suspicion and at a disadvantage. Is it not true that under such a condition of affairs the national banks would have a monopoly of deposits, and would not the inevitable result be to run all State banks out of business?

Mr. STONE. I have not any doubt, Mr. President, that if it were the law that depositors in national banks were secured against loss by reason of a fund in the Treasury provided for that purpose, or by reason of an association of banks under a law authorizing it, or in any other way, it would have the effect of strengthening them, and might also injure the deposit business of State banks, unless the States should also take some legislative action of like kind, so as to secure the depositors who intrusted their money to the custody of State institutions.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. STONE. Just a moment. I understand that that has been done in the State of Oklahoma recently.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. And refused to be done in Kansas.

Mr. BACON. As suggested by the Senator from Illinois, it has been refused in another State. It would be very difficult to secure uniformity of action in forty-six different jurisdictions.

But there is a serious practical result involved in the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, to which I desire to call his attention. In the first place, there is not the opportunity for the States to hold out the inducements to the State banks which there is to the Federal Government to hold out inducements to the national banks, owing to the fact that there is no such large amount available for deposits on the part of the State authorities as there is on the part of the Federal Government for deposits in national banks, or not even in a proportional degree.

But the point I want to call the attention of the Senator particularly to, from a purely practical standpoint, is this: National banks are under an obligation to issue a certain proportion of their capital in bank notes. That is the original purpose really of the organization of national banks, and in so doing to make a market for United States bonds. The amount of bonds which is available as a basis for the issuance of bank notes is limited. Of course it varies.

This statement from which I now quote was obtained probably a month ago from the Comptroller: The circulation of national banks, which at that date was the largest circulation that had ever been issued in the experience of national banks, was $694,336,586. The amount of bonds of all kinds which were available at that date as a basis for circulation was $898,210,050, showing a surplus of some $200,000,000. In other words, the entire bonded indebtedness available as a basis of currency only exceeded the amount of currency by $200,000,000.

We know the fact that the proportion of national banks to State banks is of a degree which would not be covered by that margin. In other words, I know, although I have not the figures before me, the proportion of State banks to national banks is very much greater than the proportion of $200,000,000 to $700,000,000, which is now the proportion between the amount of bonds available as a basis of currency and the amount of currency actually issued.

If all the State banks were driven out of existence, there is not a bond issue sufficient to supply the place of the State banks. The State banks would not, by reason of that deficiency, endeavor to remain in existence. State banks would then, as now, only remain in existence for the purpose of making money, and if you adopt a system by which confidence would be destroyed in State banks, or, rather, by which the preference for the national bank is so great that everybody will choose the national bank as a place of deposit rather than the State bank, you necessarily drive the State banks out of business. There is not enough of bond issue upon which to then rest a basis of currency which would be sufficient to so increase the number of national banks as to fill the vacancy that would be caused by the disappearance of the State banks from the business of the country.

I will not interrupt the Senator to press that matter further, but there are other reasons to me equally grave and potential why we should not favor any system of guaranteeing the deposits of banks.

Mr. STONE. The State banks of course are not banks of issue, but of deposit. The existence or nonexistence of State banks would not affect the volume of the currency. Whenever there was need of a bank a State bank would be established if for any reason a national bank was not or could not be established.

Mr. President, I believe in the wisdom of the policy of guaranteeing depositors, or, rather, of providing a fund out of which depositors of insolvent banks may be paid. I think that is a policy that ought to be established in the States who deal with State banks, as well as by the General Government in dealing with national banks. There is to my mind every good reason in favor of the State governments, which charter banks and authorize them to do business substantially as the National Government charters national banks and authorizes them to do business, to make some provision through the banks themselves by levying special taxes or otherwise, to safeguard the depositors who have intrusted their funds to them against loss when a bank, through improvidence, becomes insolvent.

I say I think that that policy ought to obtain in the States as well as in the National Government. But from this place we can not deal with State policies. We can, however, deal with the national banks, and if the policy is fundamentally right and economically sound, then it ought to be established, in my judgment, in regard to national banks, and let the States take such action as they please or as they may deem proper with reference to banks established under their local laws.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKELEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think if the Government guaranteed the deposits in national banks almost every schemer and promoter who thought the banking business was a very easy business to handle and there was a great deal of money in it would start up banks all over the country, and if it would not be the means of increasing to a very large extent the failures in national banks, so that instead of a loss by failures as there now is of one-tenth of 1 per cent on an average that that would be multiplied a great many times?

Mr. STONE. I do not see any force in that objection. There may be something in the objection made by the Senator from Georgia. Indeed, that is the principal objection urged to the plan of providing a guaranty fund for the national banks. Personally I do not think there is much in it. So far as the objection made by the Senator from Utah——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will again pardon me in this connection, I wish to say that, while I am not prepared to state what is the proportion of the capital of State banks to national banks, so far as deposits are concerned, I think the figures show that the deposits of national banks are only about one-third of the total deposits in the banks of the United States.

Mr. STONE. That is substantially correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the capital stock of the State banking institutions is a little more than the capital stock of the national banks

Mr. STONE. And the deposits are larger.

Mr. SMOOT. And the deposits are larger.

Mr. STONE. Much larger.

Mr. SMOOT. Very much larger.

Mr. BACON. Twice as large.

Mr. STONE. Now, as to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah; I think, Mr. President, that the Treasury officials, being—as they are, or ought to be—capable and experienced men, honest and upright, would sufficiently guard the public interest against the establishing of wild-cat banks. The Treasury officials always look into the character, standing, and ability of the men who ask for charters. It is their duty to do so. All the things that are necessary and proper to be looked into before granting the charter are examined, and if unworthy or discredited men should ask for the privilege of establishing a national bank, I assume they would be denied a charter. I do not see any special force in the objection made by the Senator from Utah.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

At the proper time, if no one else shall do so, I shall myself propose an amendment to the act approved March 4, 1907, amending the national-bank act, so as to require the Secretary of the Treasury in distributing the deposits of public moneys in national-bank depositaries to make the distribution according to population as shown by the last preceding census of the United States, and also requiring the banks accepting such deposits to pay to the Government of the United States interest upon the deposits at a rate not less than 2 per cent per annum upon their daily balances. The act of March 4, 1907, made it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute these deposits of public moneys as equitably as possible among the different States and sections of the Union. As a matter of fact, the distribution was most inequitably and partially made, the eastern banks, particularly those of New York, receiving vastly more than they were entitled to. If these deposits had been fairly distributed upon an equitable basis in obedience to the mandate of the law, there is every reason to believe that the strain upon the western and southern banks would have been greatly relieved and the financial conditions in those sections greatly improved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, who has charge of the unfinished business, I ask that it be laid aside for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, sophistical arguments about capital and surplus, volume of business, clearances, and centers of trade are not satisfactory. When we come to analyze the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency and the answer which the Secretary of the Treasury has made to criticisms of his action on this floor, we find that, even when the distribution made is justified on the basis of banking capital and surplus, the discrimination in favor of the northeastern section is still apparent. Undoubtedly New York is the chief financial center of the country, too much so for the country's good, and the volume of its clearances is vastly in excess of those of other cities; but, Mr. President, these clearances are not necessarily indicative of healthful and legitimate commerce or of an honest and legiti-mate business. What proportion of the New York clearances is due to stock gambling? Stock gambling is carried on in other centers, but the volume of these transactions in New York, often predicated on margins, and when not so predicated are still often fictitious and meretricious, is greater than all the other cities combined. I have read the defense of the Secretary, but it is not satisfactory or convincing. The law should be so amended as to compel an equitable distribution of the public deposits, instead of lodging the matter of distribution in the discretion of the Secretary, with a door open for the abuse of that discretion.

And, Mr. President, the banks receiving these deposits ought to pay interest upon them. In many States, my own among them, the banks receiving deposits of public moneys pay interest upon them. Why should not the same rule apply in the case of the Federal Government? Hundreds of millions of public moneys are placed in these depositaries without interest, and banks receiving them loan the money to the people as they loan any other money committed to their custody. In this way they reap a large reward; it is a source of large profit to them, and why should they not pay to the Government some small per cent in the way of interest for the use of the public funds? To be sure these funds are subject to the call of the Treasury Department, but so are the moneys, at least the great bulk of the moneys, deposited by private customers, and the bank depositaries can calculate with greater certainty when the Government will call for money than when an individual will call. True it is, also, that these depositaries are fiscal agents of the Government and are supposed to transact more or less business for the Treasury, for which they received no compensation except that derived from the use of the public deposits. I assume that the business which these depositaries transact for the Government or the Treasury is not such as would ordinarily entitle them to much compensation, and it would be better for the Government to collect interest on its deposits and in turn pay for any services the banks might render. It would be wise, as has been suggested, to charge interest on public deposits and cover the sum realized into a guaranty fund for the protection of private depositors. In view of these considerations I shall vote to add a provision to the pending bill to establish and enforce the policy I have indicated.

In this connection I might say that I have recently read an interesting article in the American Banker of December 7 last, written by Mr. H. E. Trader, cashier of a bank at New Cambria, Mo. In this article Mr. Trader advocates, among other things, the creation of a board of governors or directors for the Treasury. He makes complaint, a complaint too often justified by the facts, that the Secretary of the Treasury is clothed with too great discretionary powers, powers that may be abused by him or by his subordinates. No bank president or cashier, he says, would be permitted to run the affairs of a banking corporation without the supervision of a governing board, and he regards the policy of permitting one man to manage the stupendous affairs of our National Treasury almost at discretion as crude and remarkable. Strange things have happened about the Treasury. It has come to pass in recent years that men holding even subordinate yet responsible positions in the Treasury—men without special training in the science of banking, and who had not previously demonstrated any special abilities as financiers—have graduated from the Treasury into responsible positions, such as president and vice-president of great financial institutions at opulent salaries. If some great bank or combination of banks should desire some millions of dollars for some special uses of their own, and could persuade some subordinate official of the Treasury holding a place of authority and influence to have the sum desired taken from the Treasury vaults and deposited with the banks, that official would render the banks a signal service—a service for which some signal reward might be expected. Such a thing might be done in conformity with law, and done even without the special knowledge or direction of the Secretary. It is practically impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury, however great his abilities or high his purposes, to keep the enormous transactions of the Treasury Department under his own eyes. Abuses are possible, and where they are possible they should be guarded against. I do not know that the suggestion of Mr. Trader is the best that could be made, but it is upon a right line, and, although I do not expect to have anything done in that behalf at this time, I have deemed it a matter of sufficient moment to call attention to it.

STOCK GAMBLING.

Mr. President, there is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and that is the stock-gambling mania in New York. Stock gambling has grown to be an evil of such dimensions as to threaten the stability of our banking system. The present panic is as much due to this monstrous evil as to anything else. I do not expect that any effort should be made in this bill to curb this evil, for an effort of that kind would not be germane to the pending legislation, as it affects only in a collateral way the banking system, and then again if any legislation upon that line is to be attempted it would necessitate careful and elaborate treatment, for the subject is both complex and difficult. Nevertheless I think it is a subject upon which legislators should bend their thought and ascertain if some plan can not be devised to end, or at least greatly restrain, the gambling concerns known as stock and produce exchanges. As I have said, the greater part of this gambling is carried on in New York, although it is also carried on on a large scale in nearly all the important cities of the country. The banks advance enormous sums to speculators in stocks and futures and take the things in which the gamblers speculate as security for their loans. Recently I read the following from a leading New York paper:

> When the recent panic became acute in November the clearing-house banks reported deposits of over $1,000,000,000. Of these deposits one-half were due to other banks. Of the loans, which slightly exceeded the deposits, over half were on stock exchange collateral—that is, the money collected from millions of depositors throughout the country by their local banks was used as the basis of Wall street credit and was the real money in the stock-exchange game.

Interest rates charged by the banks ran up to a point impossible to be thought of in legitimate business transactions, reaching in some instances as high as 200 per cent. Because these high rates of interest, so tempting to greed, were offered by speculators in stocks, and because of the fact that the banks themselves by reason of their vast loans to speculators had become involved in stock transactions, their commercial customers were denied accommodations. It has been reported that between 1896 and 1906 the New York bank loans on stock-exchange collateral increased from $162,361,654 to $442,210,705, while commercial loans increased in the same period from $151,795,029 to only $259,340,272. Nearly twice as much was loaned to stock speculators as was loaned to commercial customers. This shows to what extent the banks have become involved in stock transactions by holding stock-exchange collateral as security for their loans, and it shows how the money of the people, committed to the banks, is being diverted from the legitimate channels of trade into the vortex of the gambling exchanges. Last autumn when the country banks called for the money they had deposited in New York their demands could not be met for the reason that their money was tied up in stock speculations. Mr. President, these gigantic gambling schemes, carried on in the great commercial and banking centers of the country, would not be tolerated in any other civilized country on the globe. Undoubtedly stock speculations are engaged in on the exchanges abroad, but in many countries of Europe these transactions are regulated by the government and in some the transactions are subject to a special tax. In Germany transactions in futures on agricultural products, and selling of industrial stocks are forbidden except in certain cases between registered parties. The French system is said to be analogous to the taxing, licensing, and regulation of ordinary gambling houses by the Government. Such a thing as a great bank standing behind these gambling houses is unknown in the leading countries of Europe. The policy of American banks in discounting what are called finance bills—or in other words, making loans and passing credits on stock securities involved in stock transactions or speculations—has been disapproved by the leading banks of Europe. I am told that the Bank of France declines any longer to make advances on American finance bills, so called, although willing to loan on cotton, wheat, corn, and other like tangible properties. The Bank of England not only refuses to discount American finance bills, but has notified its customers that they must not do so, and the Bank of Germany has adopted the same policy. In this country it is different. Here the stock broker arranges with his bank through a system of time and call loans on stock-exchange collateral, and for the right to overdraw this balance to some given amount. At the end of a day's transactions, the brokers get certified checks for the sums they are to pay, which they exchange for the stock certificates they have purchased, and these they deposit with their banks to make good their overdrafts. When the banks become loaded with these securities they are more or less compelled to uphold their value in order to protect their loans, and the strain necessary to accomplish this is sometimes so great that the banks are compelled to curtail and even to deny accommodations to their commercial customers, and render themselves unable to take care of their depositors. A very interesting commentary on stock-gambling transactions, and the manner and extent to which banks become involved in them, was recently made in one of the New York papers, and anyone having time to read it would find it to be instructive.

But, Mr. President, aside from the fact that these gambling transactions disturb the financial conditions and menace the financial safety of the country, they are demoralizing and most injurious to legitimate business in other ways. They are bad from every point of view and, in order to save the country from much of the harm resulting from them, ought to be put under rigid governmental regulation. It may be that primarily it is the duty of the States to deal with the subject within their respective jurisdictions. But there is one thing the Government of the United States may do; it may impose a revenue tax upon each transaction. If the Government of the United States can not constitutionally prohibit and wipe out this gambling saturnalia, it can at least lay its hand upon the gambler and extort from him a tax for using the privilege the State permits him to exercise, and to the extent that regulation may be necessary to accomplish this, the General Government may assert itself.

As I have said, Mr. President, I do not call attention to this subject with any idea that it will be considered in a practical way at this time, or that anything relating to it shall be attempted in this connection, but it is so related to the panic, and has to such a great extent contributed to it, that it seems to me that the Congress is under an imperative obligation to give to the subject its most thoughtful consideration. It is a matter to which attention should not be longer delayed, and some effort should be made to extirpate this prolific source of financial ills.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, in conclusion I desire to say that the only compensation I derive from contemplating the widespread disaster which has prevailed for months past throughout the land, comes from the fact that this disaster falls upon the country at a time when the Republican party is supreme, and after it has been supreme in all Departments of the Government for more than a decade. During the memorable struggle of 1896, and in every recurring Presidential contest since that time, the Republicans sounded a note of promise and a note of warning. They promised that if the Republican party should be successful and Republican financial and tariff policies should prevail, the country would be not only prosperous, but that industrial disasters would be impossible; and at the same time they warned the country that the exact reverse would be true in the event of Democratic ascendency. Both of these notes were false notes, but, Lord, how they rung them with multitudinous variations. In 1896 the country was told that the Democratic party favored a cheap dollar, a dishonest dollar, and that if its policy should obtain we would have dollars of differing values and purchasing power. The position of the Democratic party was grossly and wickedly misrepresented. There never was a day when any Democrat advocated or desired a monetary system under which the different moneys issued by the Government would possess a different value. We believed as much as the Republicans or any others believed in the doctrine of parity. While it is true that the Chicago platform of 1896 enunciated the policy of free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, and while it is also true that at that time the commercial value of silver was below that ratio, yet we believed that if silver should be put on a par with gold in the mintage of the country it would have the double effect of depreciating the value of gold by relieving the pressure upon it, and of appreciating the value of silver by increasing the demand upon that metal; and we believed that as one metal rose and the other fell in commercial value they would come together, after careful and judicious experiment, at approximately the old ratio of 16 to 1.

But if it was found to be impossible to bring them together at that ratio, then it was the policy of the party to remit the question of changing the ratio, as had been done before, to the wisdom of Congress so as ultimately and as speedily as possible to insure the parity of the metals. It was always the fixed purpose of the party to hold the gold and silver dollars at a parity. The silver issue was born of the exigencies of that period. Beyond all reasonable controversy the volume of currency in America was at that time grossly inadequate to meet the needs of the people, and as a consequence values and wages had fallen and the industrial activities of the country were stagnated. We believed then that the one crying need of the hour was more money with which to do the business of the country—not cheap money, but good money, every dollar worth a hundred cents. We saw no opportunity or means of increasing the money volume at that time except by a restoration of free silver coinage. We did not care for silver per se any more than for gold. If we had known then that within the next ten years there would be new discoveries of gold deposits in such vast quantity as practically to double the world's supply of that metal, there would probably never have been what was known as "the silver issue." We recognized the crying necessity for additional money, and our contention was that an adequate increase in the volume of money would eventuate in the revival of our industries and in the enhancement of property values and labor wages. The history of the last decade has demonstrated the correctness of that contention. Enormous additions to the gold supply have come from new discoveries, and additions to our money volume have been made from year to year, until to-day the aggregate sum of our possible circulation is nearly double what it was in 1896. As the money volume grew business conditions improved, industries revived, values rose, and wages increased. In other words, what we said would happen did happen as the result of the increase in the money volume. With plenty of money to meet the business needs of the country the country moved out from the shadow into the sunshine along the pathway of national prosperity. This prosperity was really due to the realization of a Democratic policy. It came not because of the Republican party, but in spite of it. As a matter of fact, the progress of this prosperity was delayed and its continuance made impossible by reason of the fact that the Republican party was in power. Upon the flanks of this prosperity hung the dead weight of Republican policies—policies often not even related or but remotely related to the coinage, which sooner or later was sure to precipitate new vexations and fresh disasters.

Gentlemen, you have given us a financial system which is but a patchwork, a sort of crazy quilt, which turns the financial well-being of the country over to the keeping of a great association of banking corporations, without taking pains to sufficiently safeguard the people against abuses, and you have fastened upon us a taxing system under the operation of which grasping monopolies are created to plunder the people. At last the chickens have come home to roost, as they were bound to come in time, and at last we have learned in the painful school of experience that the Republican party is not, after all, the evangel of prosperity. Now they may take off the armor in which they boasted and put on the sackcloth of humiliation. I prophesy that many moons will wane before they will again point at Democrats and sing in strident chorus the "song of the soup house." The full dinner pail will not be again blazoned as an emblem of triumph on the Republican shield. Caricatures of workingmen tramping in tattered apparel will be no longer borne on Republican transparencies as a warning to the wage-earner to flee from the Democratic party as from the breath of a pestilence. The disguises, shams, and pretenses under which Republican victories have been won will not be so potent in the future as in the past, and this year at least they must meet us unmasked, face to face. Mr. President, this panic, bad as it is, might have been infinitely worse if the Democrats of the country had imitated the example set them by their political opponents. During the latter years of the Cleveland Administration and during the contest of 1896 Republicans throughout the country seemed bent on making things worse than they were and of precipitating instead of preventing a panic. Not a hand among them was raised to stay the tumult, but there was an ever-swelling clamor to increase it. Banks coerced their customers, corporations coerced their employees, politicians thundered denunciations, and millions of money were contributed to create false impressions and achieve party success. How differently have Democrats conducted themselves in the present crisis. Democratic newspapers, Democratic business men, Democratic Congressmen, Democrats everywhere, have striven to allay excitement, to stem the tide and restore normal conditions as speedily as possible. Republicans themselves, who are primarily responsible for this disaster, have not been more diligent in this behalf than have the Democrats of the country. The contrast is remarkable, and it is a source of inexpressible gratification to me. I regret that these ills have befallen the country, I regret the injuries they have done, but they afford a good reason for looking to the future with satisfaction. I look around me and see and hear so much to encourage that I am inspired with a feeling of profound confidence that the day is at hand when the destinies of this country will be again committed to the party of Jefferson and Jackson. When that auspicious day shall come, as come it will, we will go forward sanely along a mounting way developing great enterprises and fostering our splendid industries; and though we shall strive to lift the country to a higher eminence than ever before, we will not forget to reverence the Constitution and guard our institutions against all who would undermine them.

ACTION OF NEW YORK CITY BANKS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Idaho kindly to yield to me in order that I may now ask to have considered a resolution in reference to the action of New York City banks which I heretofore offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution named by him.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose before the unfinished business is taken up.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that Senate resolution No. 88 be laid before the Senate and put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution named by him, which will be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state that I have consulted the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], chairman of the Committee on Finance, and he has assured me that he has no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON February 3, 1908, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if any national banks outside the city of New York complained by telegrams or letters to the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, or the Comptroller of the Currency, between October 1, 1907, and November 15, 1907, of the refusal of national banks of New York City to pay in cash New York exchange or to respond to calls for reserves; and if so, the Secretary is directed to send to the Senate copies of all such telegrams and letters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution. At the end of the resolution I move to insert the words "and answers thereto."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to insert the words "and answers thereto," so as to read:

The Secretary is directed to send to the Senate copies of all such telegrams and letters and answers thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I now call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first section passed over will be stated.

The first section passed over was section 51, on page 28, as follows:

SEC. 51. [Whoever shall cut, or cause or procure to be cut, or shall wantonly destroy, or cause to be wantonly destroyed, any timber growing on the public lands of the United States; or whoever shall remove, or cause to be removed, any timber from said public lands, with intent to export or to dispose of the same; or whoever, being the owner, master, or consignee of any vessel, or the owner, director, or agent of any railroad, shall knowingly transport any timber so cut or removed from said lands, or lumber manufactured therefrom, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Nothing in this section shall prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing his land in the ordinary working of his mining claim, or in the preparation of his farm for tillage, or from taking the timber necessary to support his improvements, or the taking of timber for the use of the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has an amendment which he proposes to offer to that section.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I propose the amendment to that section, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the section, it is proposed to insert the following:

And nothing in this section shall interfere with or take away any right or privilege recognized or conferred by existing law of the United States to cut or remove timber from any public land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 112. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, directly or indirectly, ask, accept, receive, or agree to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value to him or to any person designated by him, for his attention to, or services, or with the intent to have his action, vote, or decision influenced, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding, which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress or before any committee thereof, or which by law or under the Constitution may be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount asked, accepted, or received, and imprisoned not more than three years; and shall, moreover, forfeit his office or place, and thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment offered to section 112—and the same amendment is also proposed to sections 113 and 114—is to strike out the words "being elected" in the first line of each section—though of course we will take them up one at a time, and we are now considering section 112—the amendment is to strike out the words "being elected" in the first line of the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 1, after the word "Whoever," it is proposed to strike out the words "being elected."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it strikes me that both those words, "being elected," ought not to be stricken out. The section then would read "Whoever a Member of or Delegate to Congress." The amendment should be to strike out the word "elected" alone.

Mr. HEYBURN. The word "elected" is the one that should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 1, after the word "being," it is proposed to strike out the word "elected," so as to read:

Whoever, being a Member of or Delegate to Congress—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. The next amendment is in the third line, to strike out the words "after his election."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 3, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out the words "after his election," so as to read:

Or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States shall and either before or after he has qualified—

Mr. HEYBURN. The word "and," after the word "election," should also be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 3, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out the words "after his election and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Those are the only amendments to section 112. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the amendment was to strike out in the first line the word "elected," so that it will leave the law stand as it is now.

Mr. BACON. In other words, the Senator designs that the law shall remain as it has been construed by the court.

Mr. HEYBURN. As it is now.

Mr. BACON. As it is now as construed by the court, to wit, that after one has been elected and has begun to enjoy the emoluments of office——

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. BACON. He is not responsible to this provision of law unless he has taken the oath?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is intended that until he becomes a Member of Congress he shall remain a private citizen; in other words, it leaves the law as it is now. "Whoever being a Member of Congress" is prohibited from doing these things.

Mr. BACON. We had that matter up the other day, though on a different section, I think, and the Senator will remember the case which arose which is familiar to Senators, of one who was a member-elect of this body and who was charged with having violated a provision of law, if it were applicable to him. He was indicted, and, as I understand, acquitted upon the ground that while he had been elected and his term had begun and he was enjoying the emoluments of office, nevertheless, not having been sworn in, he was not amenable to the law. That is the construction of the court upon the present law to which I refer. It may not have been upon this section, but upon a kindred section, in which possibly the same language is used. In other words, the word "member" was construed to mean not simply a man who had been elected and whose term had begun and who had begun to receive the emoluments of the office, in the case of a Senator, but one who had absolutely appeared at the Vice-President's desk and taken the oath of office. Does the Senator desire that this section shall be construed that way?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President. It is sought to provide that whenever a member-elect begins to draw his pay as a member of either House, he shall be considered to be a member of that House. We have a provision of existing law that the responsibility of the Government, and consequently of the member, begins with the term for which he is elected. Whether or not Congress is in session so as to afford him an opportunity to take the oath of office, he has impliedly assumed the obligations of the office and has impliedly assumed the duties of the office——

Mr. BACON. The Senator says we have a statute to that effect?

Mr. HEYBURN. And is being paid. That is the fact. We have a law that provides that the pay of a Senator shall begin from the time when his term of office would begin were the Senate in session. That is the law.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand that that is the Senator's view.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the responsibility should begin then and not before, because he is not in the employ of the Government or drawing pay until that time.

Mr. BACON. Very well; but the trouble about it is, Mr. President, in the case which I have cited that the court has construed the law differently from what the Senator thinks it ought to be. The case of which I speak, though I do not think it was under this particular section, was under that section of the law which prohibits a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives from entering into a contract with the Government, for instance, for the lease of a building. That was a case where a Senator-elect to this body after his term began, to wit, after the 3d of March, and during the time when he was drawing a salary as a Senator, did enter into a contract—there were some other alleged features, I do not know whether correctly alleged or not—for the rent of a post-office to the Government. The language of that section of law is the same as that in this section, to wit, "a member," if I recollect aright; and the court held that he was not amenable to the law because, while he was in the condition and occupying the position that the Senator from Idaho thinks ought to be applicable to one under this provision of law, he had not been sworn in, the court said he was not amenable to the law. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Georgia if that case is reported.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it would be well——

Mr. BACON. It was certainly reported in the public press.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would prefer to have it reported as cases in court are reported.

Mr. BACON. Every Senator who was then a member of this body knows to what case I refer.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Georgia was a member of the committee that investigated that matter.

Mr. TELLER. If I may interrupt——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The case which is referred to is the case of a former member of this body. There was another case in which a Member of the House was concerned where the court held just the reverse of the holding in the case to which the Senator from Georgia refers. The court held that, although he had not been sworn in, he was liable under the law, and he paid a large fine to get out of it. So I suggest to the Senator that he better make that explicit and put in words that will determine the matter, so that a Senator or Member-elect will know when he is to come under the provisions of the act.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objections at all to having the section made to conform to the law as the court has interpreted it, if it does not. Of course the presumption is that the law and the decisions are in harmony, because the court was interpreting a section——

Mr. TELLER. You have two interpretations, one one way and the other the other. It was not a decision of the Supreme Court, but of a subordinate Federal court, in both cases.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I think we should put in the act "from the time of his election," or something of that kind, to make it specific.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not intend to contend for this amendment, because, as a member of the committee which reported the section in the form in which it is now before us, I only reserved the right to call the attention of Congress to the fact that it was proposed to widen the scope of the statute.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. When we were going over this bill on a former occasion we had under consideration section 115, which is the particular section to which I had reference when I illustrated my contention by the case of a member-elect of this body. The Senator will remember the debate we had upon it, and the Senator himself, I think, contended that while he was unwilling that the responsibility should begin at the time of election and prior to the time of the beginning of service, he did insist that it should begin at the time of the service, and I recollect my responding to him that the same reason which would debar one who was a member-elect and whose term had begun would perhaps in a less degree debar one who was a member-elect and whose term had not begun.

I made the suggestion in that connection that one reason why the law prohibited a member from practicing before the Departments, for instance, was that he was presumed to have more influence than one who was not an official, especially a Member of Congress who had the control of the Departments. I have forgotten what was the final determination in regard to the matter. But section 115——

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 116 is the one regulating contracts.

Mr. BACON. Section 116 it is. Section 115 is a different thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 115 regulates the practice.

Mr. BACON. That reads this way:

SEC. 116. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office—

Those are the words which we adopted as to section 116. It seems to me that exactly the same reasoning would require us to use the same language in section 112, because it relates to the same class of matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it becomes evident that the Senate does not care to insist upon the restoration of the language of existing law, I will withdraw my amendment, because I made it only that it might be called to the attention of the Senate that we were enlarging existing law so to include the period between election and the succeeding 4th of March, and I did not desire that this section should be passed without the attention of the Senate being directed to that.

Mr. BACON. Section 112 contains the same language as that which I have read from section 116.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho proposed to amend it so as to eliminate the amendment and restore that section in the language of the present law, and that is the point to which I objected. I think the language as expressed in the present section as amended is preferable. Aside from all other considerations, I think we owe it, as expressed by the Senator from Colorado, to those who will be responsible to the law to have it made so definite and certain that there will not be the uncertainty which grows out of the conflicting decisions on that subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. It appearing that no Senator desires to suggest any change in the section as reported, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. What is the amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment was simply to eliminate the word "elected," so that it would not cover the period between election and the time when the duties of the office are assumed, on the 4th of March.

Mr. TELLER. The words in line 4, "either before or after he has qualified," it seems to me make it definite. I think that is sufficient. Is this the section in which the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] wanted to insert the word "court" somewhere?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is in another section—section 115. Mr. President, then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to suggest another matter to the Senator from Idaho. It has been called to my attention by the Senator from Maryland, and I think it worthy of consideration.

The Senator will remember that the discussion which we had upon this language arose upon the section which related to appearing before the Departments for a compensation, and the question then arose, and was suggested by the Senator from Idaho himself, as to whether or not it was competent for Congress to pass a law which should affect a citizen who, while he had been elected, was still a private citizen until the beginning of his term of office. My reply to that was that it was competent for the Government to prescribe the terms upon which anyone could appear before a Department or under which certain classes of people could be debarred from practicing before the Departments.

But the suggestion in reference to this section is a very pertinent one. It has been suggested to me by the Senator from Maryland and is this: This relates not to the matter of appearing before one of the Departments of the Government, but to the conduct of the citizen himself before his term of office begins, and it is a matter certainly worthy of consideration whether that is in this particular section the proper language, and whether it ought not in this section, while correct in the other section, because it related to the regulations of appearing before the Department, to be limited to acts done after the beginning of his term, because the fact that he is a private citizen relates to his outside acts, and it is gravely to be doubted whether the Government could impose a penalty on him for an individual act performed before he becomes a Member.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think section 112 pertains really to lobbying, and I am in thorough accord with the criticism of the Senator from Georgia, because the acts there are not——

Mr. BACON. The section, in order to express my view of it, would have to make him amenable to the law in case after his term of office began he transgressed any of these prohibitions. If the Senator will frame an amendment to cover that view, it seems to me it would be the proper course to pursue.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand the Senator from Georgia is referring to section 112.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir, 112.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It occurs to me that that section ought to remain as it is. It provides:

SEC. 112. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, directly or indirectly, ask, accept, receive, or agree to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration—

For what?

For his attention to, or services, or with intent to have his action, vote, or decision influenced, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding, which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress or before any committee thereof.]

So what he is forbidden to do is to receive money prior to the time he has qualified, to do something after he has qualified. Certainly it would be just as great an offense to receive money before his qualification, to affect his vote afterwards, as to receive the money after he had qualified.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BACON. I had not at the time I made the suggestion had the opportunity to read the section clear through, and the considerations for the services had not been suggested to my mind as they are now suggested by the words of the Senator from Utah. I think he is correct in his view of the matter. While it would relate to an independent act outside, it is entirely a pertinent prohibition, for it relates to what he himself shall afterwards do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw his amendments in lines 1 and 3?

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw all amendments to the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All amendments to section 112?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next passed-over section.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 113, which is the next passed-over section, has been read, and there is no objection to having it considered and disposed of under the same rule as prevailed with respect to the last section. The same is true of section 114. It has been read. I withdraw any suggestion of amendment, and it may go under the same rule as section 112.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next passed-over amendment is one submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], on page 57, section 115, line 24, before the word "Department" to insert:

Court in any civil cause or before any—

So that, if amended, it will read:

Is a party or directly or indirectly interested, before any court in any civil cause or before any Department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next passed-over section will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read section 185.

Mr. HEYBURN. This section has been read several times.

Mr. BACON. I do not understand whether any amendment is suggested.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have very pronounced views upon this question, as I have frequently indicated, but my objections I have stated so fully that I do not believe I would be justified in repeating them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I recall, the amendment which the Senator from Georgia desired to this section was adopted, and some Senator entered the Chamber and requested that the section be passed over. I do not remember just now why it was passed over. At any rate the amendment desired by the Senator from Georgia was adopted.

Mr. BACON. I am content if that is the case. I understood the Senator from Idaho to the contrary.

Mr. HEYBURN. I said there was no amendment pending.

Mr. BACON. Ah!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next passed-over section will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHAPTER TEN.

THE SLAVE TRADE AND PEONAGE.

SEC. 242. Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any foreign vessel engaged in the slave trade, or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for or in behalf of any citizen of the United States, forcibly confines or detains on board such vessel any person as a slave, or, on board such vessel, offers or attempts to sell as a slave any such person, or on the high seas, or anywhere on tide water, transfers or delivers to any other vessel any such person with intent to make such person a slave, or lands or delivers on shore from on board such vessel any person with intent to make sale of, or having previously sold such person as a slave, is a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to say why it is necessary to mention the United States, and I will state the reason for my inquiry. The purpose of this entire chapter I approve, and I desire that the language of the law shall be such as to make that purpose absolutely effective. Now, the general provisions of the law which make everyone engaged in the slave trade a pirate affects all those who are engaged in the business, regardless of their nationality, and affects every ship engaged in the business, regardless of the nationality.

The jurisdiction of the United States under this law is not limited to the case of a citizen who violates it, but extends to all the peoples of all the earth or anyone of them who may violate it, and the provisions of this law, so far as the ships are concerned—the general law, I speak of—are not limited to the ships which fly the American flag, but extend to any ship that may be engaged in the slave traffic, regardless of the flag it flies or whether it flies any flag. In each case the man who is engaged in the business is a pirate under the law, liable and subject to be dealt with as a pirate, regardless of the country from which he comes or to which he may owe allegiance, and every ship engaged in it is taken and denominated a pirate ship, regardless of the country from which it comes.

Now, why should this chapter in any particular refer to the United States? If it be true that it is necessary to designate the United States in order to make the law effective, then the answer to my question is complete and ready. But if it be true that every one engaged in the business is denominated a pirate and subject to punishment as a pirate, regardless of his nationality, and if it be true that every ship engaged in the business is a pirate ship, regardless of the flag it carries, or the absence of a flag, why should there be a designation of any country in regard to slavery or the slave trade?

Now, I ask that for information from the learned Senator, and would be glad to have him explain why there is any necessity for it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Georgia should move to strike out the words "United States," I would, so far as I may, accept the amendment. A little embarrassment might arise because of the change that is made in the character of the punishment. We could put to death a party who was guilty of piracy and dispose of him without regard to his nationality, but whether we could imprison him in our prison for life is another question and might make some embarrassment.

Mr. BACON. I do not think so.

Mr. HEYBURN. But if it would not, and the Senator from Georgia should move to strike out "United States," there would be no opposition, I think, to its being done.

Mr. BACON. A pirate is an offender against the law of every nation, and is subject to the jurisdiction of every nation wherever he may be found, and is subject to the penalty which that nation may impose upon him in the same way that the violator of a law within the jurisdiction is subject to whatever penalty the State may elect to impose upon him. So I have no doubt about the fact that, while the ordinary punishment of a pirate is death, the same authority which could impose the death penalty would have authority to impose any minor penalty.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think so. I merely suggested that difficulty.

Mr. BACON. I would not have any possible hesitation in that opinion.

What I would suggest to the Senator is this, and it may shorten his labors. We had a very interesting discussion upon this chapter when it was formerly before the Senate, and there were suggestions made which the Senator himself showed the impolicy and impropriety of adopting. But the general ground upon which my objection was finally rested was the one I have indicated, and that is that since the slave trade is under the ban and condemnation of the law of every civilized nation, and since the law of our country makes everyone engaged in it a pirate, and every ship engaged in it a pirate ship, it is not necessary that there should be any language in this chapter—not only this section, but the cognate sections—which would indicate that there was particular reason for the enactment of a law against slavery and the slave trade in connection with the United States which does not exist as to other nations.

The Senator from Idaho has, very much to my gratification, indicated a concurrence in that view. I do not think there is any other features of this chapter—that is, so far as it relates to the slave and the slave trade—which needs amendment or which has met with any objection. It may require some little time to eliminate these objectionable features of the chapter and to adapt the changes to the remainder of the chapter. I would suggest to the Senators in charge of the bill that if they would take that chapter and go through it and eliminate all allusions to the United States and adapt the remaining language, it will be unnecessary to consume any further time in the consideration of the sections.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to one phase of this matter. The Senator will observe that the original section, 5375 of the Revised Statutes——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me a moment until I can get the other copy of the bill. The clerk is reading from the bill, and he gives us the paging from the bill, and consequently it is necessary to follow that. But that has not the original section indicated, and I will have to turn to the copy the Senator refers to. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Section 242 is the section we are now considering.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And opposite that the Senator will find the original section.

Mr. BACON. I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Being section 5375 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me read just a part of that section:

> Every person who, being of the crew or ship's company of any foreign vessel engaged in the slave trade—

Let us stop there for just a moment—who does any of the things that are provided for by the statute, is a pirate. The section proceeds:

> Or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for on in behalf of any citizen—

Does any of these things, is a pirate. So the original law makes this distinction. The only thing the committee has done is to make clear what is meant by the word "citizen," by saying "citizen of the United States." The original law includes the word "citizen."

It occurs to me that perhaps the explanation of it may be this: I state it with some hesitation, because I am not entirely certain about it myself. Any person a member of a crew or ship's company, which vessel is engaged in the slave trade, is a pirate under the law of nations.

Mr. BACON. And under this statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; and under the statute, but he is a pirate independently of any provision of the statute. He is a pirate under the law of nations. We need not have characterized him; he would have been a pirate. The section proceeds and says that:

> Or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for or in behalf of any citizen—

Does these things, is also a pirate. That particular person might not be a pirate by the law of nations.

Mr. BACON. But we are not dealing with the law of nations. We are dealing with the statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand.

Mr. BACON. And if he was not under the law of nations, he would be under this statute.

All I want to suggest to the Senator, if he will pardon me, is this: The law from which the Senator has read was enacted in 1820, at a time when there were slave traffic and slave trade and when there was a necessity not only to deal with those who were engaged in the slave trade under a foreign flag, but to deal especially in the case of those who were engaged under our own flag, for the reason that there was great temptation for those who had business connections in this country to engage in the trade. But if you will strike out the word "foreign," so that it will read "any vessel," it will include not only foreign vessels, but domestic vessels, and the purpose I have is to make the law general, just as I have no doubt the law of England is general, or the law of any other civilized country which has endeavored to suppress the slave trade.

I can see no possible reason why, when the general language will cover all domestic vessels and all of our own citizens who violate the law in the same way that it does foreign vessels or foreign people, we should keep up the distinction and make an enumeration of each class.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am inclined to think the Senator is correct about it.

Mr. BACON. I think it very probable the Senators will find it necessary to go carefully through the various sections of this chapter so as to eliminate all reference to the United States and adopt the remaining language so that it may be harmonious.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that while the discussion has proceeded I have gone through this chapter, and I find that the changes are very few. For instance, in this chapter the Senator's proposition, as I understand it, is to strike out the word "foreign," in line 2, and to strike out the words "of the United States," in line 5 of the section. That would leave the section stand as it is suggested by the Senator it should read, and it is entirely acceptable to the committee that that change should be made, and it might as well be made now and disposed of.

Mr. BACON. All right. Let us take each section as we come to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 131, line 4, before the word "vessel," strike out the word "foreign," and in line 7 strike out the words "of the United States."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I would suggest——

Mr. BACON. That is not sufficient. There are so many different prints of the bill it is almost impossible to follow the suggestion, even from the Clerk's desk or from the Senator from Idaho. For instance, the print which I have has the word "foreign" in the fourth line. I understood the Senator to say that in the print he has it is in the second line.

Mr. HEYBURN. The words stricken out are in the second and the fifth lines of the section. The print of the section is the same. It is printed in the same type always.

Mr. BACON. There is no print I have which corresponds to that. It is a great misfortune which has pursued us throughout the entire consideration of the bill that we have so many prints of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the reprint.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I think, in order to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, it would be necessary to strike out the word "foreign," in line 4, and also beginning with the word "or," in line 4, strike out the words "or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for or in behalf of, any citizen of the United States."

Mr. BACON. That is the very suggestion I wished to make.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Strike out all that clause, so as to make the section read:

> Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel engaged in the slave trade, forcibly confines, etc.

That would cover it.

Mr. BACON. That is right. That amendment ought to be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. That amendment will be accepted, to strike out, commencing with the word "or," in the second line, and including the words "United States," in the fifth line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 131, line 4, after the words "slave trade," strike out the words "or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for or in behalf of, any citizen of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Now, the same amendment exactly should be made in the next section.

Mr. HEYBURN. Two hundred and forty-three is the next section. Let the word "foreign," in the second line of the section, be stricken out.

Mr. BACON. On the fourth line of the page.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, line 4, before the word "vessel," strike out the word "foreign," and in the same line, after the words "slave trade," strike out down to and including the words "United States," in line 7, in the following words:

Or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel, owned in whole or in part, or navigated for, or in behalf of, any citizen of the United States.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 243. Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel engaged in the slave trade, lands from such vessel, and, on any foreign shore, seizes any person with intent to make such person a slave, or decoys, or forcibly brings, or carries or receives such person on board such vessel, with like intent, is a pirate and shall be imprisoned for life.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 244 does not contain those provisions and is probably not objected to. It might as well be read and then it will be before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 244. Whoever brings within the jurisdiction of the United States in any manner whatsoever any person from any foreign kingdom or country, or from sea, or holds, sells, or otherwise disposes of, any person so brought in, as a slave, or to be held to service or labor, shall be fined not more than $10,000, one-half to the use of the United States and the other half to the use of the party who prosecutes the indictment to effect; and, moreover, shall be imprisoned not more than seven years.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an ordinary prohibition against slavery.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 245. Whoever builds, fits out, equips, loads or otherwise prepares, or sends away, either as master, factor, or owner, any vessel, in any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, or causes such vessel to sail from any port or place whatsoever, within such jurisdiction, for the purpose of procuring any person from any foreign kingdom or country to be transported to any port or place whatsoever, to be held, sold, or otherwise disposed of as a slave, or held to service or labor, shall be fined not more than $5,000, one-half to the use of the United States and the other half to the use of the person prosecuting the indictment to effect; and shall, moreover, be imprisoned not more than seven years.

SEC. 246. Whoever, being a citizen or other person resident within the jurisdiction of the United States, takes on board, receives, or transports from any foreign kingdom or country, or from sea, any person in any vessel, for the purpose of holding, selling, or otherwise disposing of such person as a slave, or to be held to service or labor, shall be punished as prescribed in the section last preceding.

Mr. BACON. I think possibly section 246 would be improved by striking out the words "being a citizen." It would make it applicable to any person within the jurisdiction of the United States. It would certainly be a violation of the spirit of the law if done by any person, and I see no reason why there should be any alternative about it. I suggest to strike out the words "being a citizen or other person."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So as to read, "Whoever, being a resident?"

Mr. BACON. I do not know but that I would strike out the word "resident." Let it read "Whoever, within the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. HEYBURN. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "being a citizen or other person resident," so as to read:

Whoever, within the jurisdiction of the United States, takes on board, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 247. Whoever, being the captain, master, or commander of any American vessel found in any river, port, bay, harbor, or on the high seas, within the jurisdictional limits of the United States, or hovering on the coast thereof, having on board any person, for the purpose of selling such person as a slave, or with intent to land such person for any such purpose shall be fined not more than $10,000, and imprisoned not more than four years.

Mr. BACON. There ought to be some change in the language of this section. I wish to say that if it were not for the fact that there are some countries now within the jurisdiction of the United States where there is at least a partial, sporadic attempt occasionally, I presume, to subject individuals to slavery, I should desire to have the entire section eliminated, because I am unwilling to leave upon the statute books anything which would suggest that there is in the contemplation of any part of the people of the United States the restoration of the institution of slavery or any connivance at the effort to sell any person into slavery.

I am glad of the opportunity, in passing upon this section, to put upon record the statement that it is purposed to leave this section as it shall probably be amended simply for the purpose of reaching territory altogether outside of what is known as the "proper limits" of the United States. With that statement I think the language ought to be eliminated which limits it to an American vessel. With an amendment to that effect, I should myself make no further opposition to the section.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest further to the Senator from Georgia that the words "jurisdictional limits of" should be stricken out and the word "jurisdiction" substituted as being applicable to the territorial condition.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Both those amendments will be accepted.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please indicate the exact words he desires to strike out?

Mr. HEYBURN. In the second line of the section strike out the word "American."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, line 17, before the word "vessel," strike out the word "American."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the third line of the section I move to strike out the words "jurisdictional limits" and insert in lieu thereof the word "jurisdiction."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18 strike out the words "jurisdictional limits" and insert in lieu thereof the word "jurisdiction," so that if amended it will read, "within the jurisdicton of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. It will be necessary to strike out the words "or hovering on the coast thereof," because the word "jurisdiction" is broad enough to cover that.

Mr. BACON. I am not sure about that. I may be wrong; but the jurisdiction of the United States, except so far as we extend it to cover a pirate, is limited to 3 miles off the coast, and this hovering might be outside of that jurisdictional limit, and at the same time it could be brought within the jurisdiction of a statute of this kind by express enactment. Therefore I am inclined to think that the words "or hovering on the coast thereof" had better remain. I may be in error, but that is the way it strikes me.

Mr. HEYBURN. We regarded the words as superfluous. If the 3-mile limit would be sufficient scope in which to capture this class of vessels, then it would not be necessary to insert the words; but if the Senator from Georgia thinks it might be necessary to protect more than 3 miles from the coast, then the words should remain in the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw the amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 248. Whoever, being a citizen of the United States, or other person residing therein, voluntarily serves on board of any American vessel employed or made use of in the transportation of slaves from any foreign country or place to another, shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than two years.

Mr. BACON. We have an existing law and also a provision in the pending bill which makes every person found upon a slaver a pirate, and I do not see why this section should be allowed to remain. It is limited to the case of a citizen of the United States, whereas under the previous section, 243, such person is denominated as a pirate, and it says he shall be imprisoned for life. I see no difference between the offense committed in either case except that here it is limited to a citizen of the United States and the penalty is made less. It seems to me that the section is entirely superfluous and that it may do harm.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is a different character of action expressed in section 243 from that which is expressed in section 248.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a different character of offense. Section 248 is intended to punish American citizens for engaging in this trade upon American vessels. Section 243 applies to the vessels of all nations and to citizens of all nations.

Mr. BACON. Why should it be limited to the case of American vessels?

Mr. HEYBURN. That law was passed on the 10th of May, 1800, and it was passed at a time when conditions, of course, were different from what they are now; but it seems to me it is very appropriate to have on the statute books a law prohibiting American citizens from engaging in so nefarious a business on American ships.

Mr. BACON. Or any other ship.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true; but still we may always appropriately legislate with reference to those things that belong distinctively to our own country and carry our own flag. An American ship carries an American flag.

Mr. BACON. I call the attention of the Senator to a fact which illustrates the thought that was in my mind. The succeeding section broadens it so as to make it apply to a citizen of the United States serving on any foreign vessel and gives it the same penalty. So it appears to me it would be entirely sufficient to amend section 248 so as to strike out the word "American," and then strike out section 249 altogether, because it has exactly the same penalty and relates to the same person. One is limited to the case of service upon an American vessel, and the other is limited to the case of service upon any foreign vessel. If we simply make it read "any vessel," it will cover both foreign and domestic. And I can see no reason whatever for both sections remaining if the word "American" is stricken out of section 248.

Mr. HEYBURN. The two sections were enacted at the same time, being a part of the same act. What the purpose of Congress was in dividing the offense I do not know, but the committee were inclined to leave the existing law as they found it. It may be that in the interest of form we might consolidate them.

Mr. BACON. If you strike out the word "American," you do consolidate them. Then section 248 will include all that is now in the section and also that which is in section 249.

Mr. HEYBURN. One applies to American vessels and the other to foreign vessels.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but in each case it applies to the American citizen. In the former case the American citizen who does a certain act upon an American vessel is punished in a certain way. In the second case the American citizen who does the same act upon a foreign vessel is punished in the same way. Consequently, if you strike out the word "American" from section 248 you have what is included now in both sections.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should not object at all to consolidating the two sections, and it can readily be done, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, by striking out the word "American" in section 248. I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 134, line 1, before the word "vessel," strike out "American."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 249, as follows:

SEC. 249. Whoever, being a citizen of the United States, voluntarily serves on board of any foreign vessel employed in the slave trade, shall be punished as prescribed in the section last preceding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section passed over, as follows:

SEC. 250. Whoever, being the master or owner or person having charge of any vessel, receives on board any other person, with the knowledge or intent that such person is to be carried from any State, Territory, or District of the United States to a foreign country, state, or place, to be held or sold as a slave, or carries away from any State, Territory, or District of the United States any such person, with the intent that he may be so held or sold as a slave, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. BACON. That section, I think, needs material amendment. I repeat in regard to it substantially what I said in regard to the former section, that were it not that we have some remote countries now within the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States I should favor the striking of it out altogether. The section, of course, as found now in the present law, was enacted at a time when conditions were entirely different from what they are now. There is no possibility that from any State or Territory or District of the United States there should be an attempt to put anyone into slavery or that one should be carried from such place to any other State, Territory, or District for the purpose of placing that person in a condition of slavery.

There was at the time it was enacted, of course, dangers of that kind, which it was the intention to guard against; but those times have entirely, absolutely, utterly passed; there is no possibility that they can ever be restored. State, Territory, or District are technical terms in our classification of political divisions, and so far as it relates to a State of the Union, or to a Territory of the United States, which means now only Arizona and New Mexico, or District, which means the District of Columbia, it is an utter, absolute impossibility.

But there is a country within the control of the United States Government where such a thing is still a possibility, and I think the language of the section ought to be so amended as to limit it in its application to that particular country, or we should use such general language, if you please, as will not specify a State or a Territory or a District. You may simply use the word "place," if you wish, which would cover everything.

I am unwilling, Mr. President, that there should remain language here which was used properly to meet conditions at the time of the enactment, which would now have no signification and no application to present conditions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will permit me to make a suggestion. If the words "any State, Territory, or District of the United States" were stricken out and the word "place" substituted therefor, it would cover everything and at the same time we would not have a classification which might mislead as to our intention.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had in mind to suggest this amendment. On the fourth line strike out the words "State, Territory, or District" and insert in lieu thereof "place subject to the jurisdiction," so as to read:

That such person is to be carried from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, etc.

Then in line 6 of the section strike out the words "State, Territory, or District" and insert the same language "place subject to the jurisdiction," so as to read:

To be held or sold as a slave, or carries away from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States any such person.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator, if he has interlined the amendment which he proposes, read the entire section as it will then be amended?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The section would then read:

Whoever, being the master or owner or person having charge of any vessel, receives on board any other person, with the knowledge or intent that such person is to be carried from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, state, or place, to be held or sold as a slave——

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator that he say "any other place" instead of "foreign country, state, or place." That would make it more comprehensive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I move to strike out the words "a foreign country, state, or place" and insert "any other," so as to read:

To any other place, to be held or sold as a slave, or carries away from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States any such person, with the intent that he may be so held or sold as a slave, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. BACON. That will cover it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 134, line 12, strike out the words "State, Territory, or District" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place subject to the jurisdiction;" in line 13 strike out the words "a foreign country, State, or," and in lieu thereof insert "any other," and, in lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "State, Territory, or District" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place subject to the jurisdiction;" so that if amended it will read:

Whoever, being the master or owner or person having charge of any vessel, receives on board any other person, with the knowledge or intent that such person is to be carried from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to any other place, to be held or sold as a slave, or carries away from any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States any such person, with the intent that he may be so held or sold as a slave, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next section passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 251. No person shall, for himself or for another, as master, factor, or owner, build, fit, equip, load, or otherwise prepare any vessel in any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, or cause any vessel to sail from any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of procuring any person from any foreign kingdom, place, or country to be transported to any port or place whatsoever, to be held, sold, or otherwise disposed of as a slave, or to be held to service or labor; and every vessel so built, fitted out, equipped, laden, or otherwise prepared, with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and lading, shall be forfeited; one moiety to the use of the United States and the other to the use of the person who sues for the forfeiture and prosecutes the same to effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there have been eleven cases decided by the United States court under section 251 since 1860. That section seems to be a very necessary provision of the law, and I suggest that it stand without amendment.

Mr. BACON. I have no suggestion to make in the way of amendment at all.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 252. Whoever so builds, fits out, equips, loads, or otherwise prepares or sends away any vessel, knowing or intending that the same shall be employed in such trade or business, contrary to the provisions of the section last preceding, or in any way aids or abets therein, shall, besides the forfeiture of the vessel, pay the sum of $2,000; one moiety thereof to the use of the United States and the other moiety thereof to the use of the person who sues for and prosecutes the same to effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest, also, Mr. President, that there have been comparatively recent cases under that section, and it is necessary.

The Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

SEC. 253. Every vessel employed in carrying on the slave trade or on which is received or transported any person from any foreign kingdom or country, or from sea, for the purpose of holding, selling, or otherwise disposing of such person as a slave, or of holding such person to service or labor, shall, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and the goods and effects which may be found on board, or which may have been imported thereon in the same voyage, be forfeited; one moiety to the use of the United States and the other to the use of the person who sues for and prosecutes the forfeiture to effect.

SEC. 254. Whoever, being a citizen of the United States, takes on board, receives, or transports any person for the purpose of selling such person as a slave shall, in addition to the forfeiture of the vessel, pay for each person so received on board or transported the sum of $200, to be recovered in any court of the United States; the one moiety thereof to the use of the United States and the other moiety to the use of the person who sues for and prosecutes the same to effect.

SEC. 255. Every vessel which is found in any river, port, bay, or harbor, or on the high seas, within the jurisdictional limits of the United States, or hovering on the coasts thereof, and having on board any person, with intent to sell such person as a slave, or with intent to land the same for that purpose, either in the United States or elsewhere, shall, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and the goods or effects on board of her, be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I move to strike out the words "jurisdictional limits," in the second and third lines of the section, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "jurisdiction."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to strike out the words "jurisdictional limits" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "jurisdiction."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 256. It shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or other person residing therein, directly or indirectly to hold or have any right or property in any vessel employed or made use of in the transportation or carrying of slaves from one foreign country or place to another, and any such right or property shall be forfeited, and may be libeled and condemned for the use of the person suing for the same. Whoever shall violate the prohibition of this section shall also forfeit and pay a sum of money equal to double the value of his right or property in such vessel; and shall also forfeit a sum of money equal to double the value of the interest he had in the slaves which at any time may be transported or carried in such vessels.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in line 2 of the section, after the word "therein," I move to insert the words "or under the jurisdiction thereof."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, line 21, after the word "therein," it is proposed to insert the words "or under the jurisdiction thereof," so as to read:

SEC 256. It shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or other person residing therein, or under the jurisdiction thereof, directly or indirectly to hold or have any right or property in any vessel, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 257. The President is authorized, when he deems it expedient, to man and employ any of the armed vessels of the United States to cruise wherever he may judge attempts are making to carry on the slave trade, by citizens or residents of the United States, in contravention of laws prohibitory of the same; and, in such case, he shall instruct the commanders of such armed vessels to seize, take, and bring into any port of the United States, to be proceeded against according to law, all American vessels, wheresoever found, which may have on board, or which may be intended for the purpose of taking on board, or of transporting, or may have transported any person, in violation of the provisions of any act of Congress prohibiting the traffic in slaves.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section merely provides for the execution of the preceding sections giving power to the President.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that that section might profitably be broadened so as to include all persons and all vessels, regardless of whether they are citizens of the United States or whether they are American vessels. There are various provisions in the second chapter which we have already gone through that would make such a vessel a pirate. We have jurisdiction to deal with them, regardless of the nationality of the crew or of the flag of the ship. I suggest that the Senator propose to amend the section to that extent.

Why should it be limited to the case of an American vessel? The whole civilized world is in a league to suppress the slave trade, and have united in denominating those engaged in it as pirates and all ships used in it as pirate ships. The Government of the United States is under as much obligation to suppress piracy in the one case as in the other; or, if you please to say that the obligation is greater in the case of an American vessel and an American crew, still the obligation is a general one to suppress it without regard to the nationality of the crew or without regard to the flag of the ship. I think it is very well to clothe the President of the United States with authority to fit out and send armed vessels to suppress piracy in any case, not to be limited to a case where it is an American crew and an American vessel; and, therefore, if the Senators in charge of the bill would consent to strike out the words "by citizens or residents of the United States," in lines 11 and 12, and the word "American," in line 16, everything which is provided for in this section would be accomplished, and it would still be a broadening of the section rather than a narrowing of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, from a humanitarian standpoint the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia would undoubtedly be right; but, if I am correctly advised, without mentioning the name of any other nationality or nation or country, it has been stated in the public press and in magazines frequently that at least one European nation does not consider the slave trade as an act of piracy, and that slaves are captured on the east coast of Africa under a tacit consent from the country under whose flag the ship sails.

It is hardly necessary, I think, or wise for us to create the President of the United States a general police officer of the world, and it might be rather dangerous for him to attempt to interfere. I think the Senator from Georgia recognizes the conditions to which I refer. It would hardly be proper for us to authorize the President of the United States to assume that the act of another nation or the people of another nation that was acquiesced in and permitted, and even licensed by that nation, was an act of piracy. I think if we would confine this to our own country it would be better.

Mr. BACON. On the statement of the Senator from Idaho, I will withdraw the suggestion I made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator withdraws it I call attention to the fact that with the amendment which the Senator from Georgia proposes the case the Senator from Idaho refers to would not be affected, because the section provides—

Wherever he may judge attempts are making to carry on the slave trade * * * in contravention of the laws prohibitory of the same.

That would not reach a case where it was carried on in conformity to the customs without any law against it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think we had better undertake to police the whole world.

Mr. BACON. It is possible, as suggested, that there may be at least, all other considerations being left out, a higher obligation upon us to make the prohibition apply to our own people and our own vessels than to others. I am not sure but what other civilized nations have similar enactments as to vessels carrying their own flag.

The Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

SEC. 258. The proceeds of all vessels, their tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the goods and effects on board of them, which are so seized, prosecuted, and condemned, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 259. [The officers of the vessel making such seizure shall safely keep every person found on board of any vessel so seized, taken, or brought into port for condemnation, and shall deliver every such person to the marshal of the district into which he may be brought, if into a port of the United States, or if elsewhere, to such person as may be lawfully appointed by the President, in the manner directed by law, transmitting to the President, as soon as may be after such delivery, a descriptive list of such persons, in order that he may give directions for the disposal of them.]

SEC. 260. The commanders of such commissioned vessels shall cause to be apprehended and taken into custody every person found on board of such offending vessel so seized and taken, being of the officers or crew thereof, and him convey, as soon as conveniently may be, to the civil authority of the United States, to be proceeded against in due course of law.

SEC. 261. [The President is authorized to make such regulations and arrangements as he may deem expedient for the safe-keeping, support, and removal beyond the limits of the United States of all such persons as may be so delivered and brought within its jurisdiction.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho what is the reference there in that section to "removal beyond the limits of the United States?"

Mr. HEYBURN. The original act, which was passed in 1819, was evidently intended to enable the President to make some authorized disposition of this class of capture. I think the language is quite explicit. The existing law on the subject reads:

SEC. 5561. The President is authorized to make such regulations and arrangements as he may deem expedient for the safe-keeping, support, and removal beyond the limits of the United States of all such negroes, mulattoes, or persons of color as may be delivered and brought within their jurisdiction; and to appoint a proper person residing upon the coast of Africa as agent for receiving the negroes, mulattoes, or persons of color delivered from on board vessels seized in the prosecution of the slave trade by commanders of United States armed vessels.

Mr. BACON. What section does the Senator read?

Mr. HEYBURN. I was reading the existing law opposite section 261. That is an executive statute to carry out the provisions of the preceding section. Section 262 merely prescribes the duty of the officers on the vessel, who, of course, will be acting under the powers that they derive under section 261. Section 262 reads:

SEC. 262. It shall be the duty of the commander of any armed vessel of the United States, whenever he makes any capture under the preceding provisions, to bring the vessel and her cargo, for adjudication, into some port of the State, Territory, or District to which such vessel so captured may belong, if he can ascertain the same; if not, then into any convenient port of the United States.

That is in order that it may be investigated and held subject to the provisions of the preceding section for the disposition of that class of capture. We could see no occasion for changing that except as the change in existing conditions required the elimination of the designation of the color and the substitution of the word "persons."

Mr. BACON. I did not have any question in my mind as to what the purpose was, because I read it in connection with the existing law; but the inquiry was suggested to my mind by the fact that the revised section does not contain the description of any persons, unless it is in some section which I have not read, and simply refers to removal beyond the limits of all persons who may be so delievered——

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will suggest that that change was suggested to the committee by reason of the fact that it would not be appropriate to remove all persons to the coast of Africa. Of course, under the existing law, which applies only to persons of African origin, it was appropriate enough, but inasmuch as the scope of the section is so much wider than that of the existing law because of changed conditions, it would not do to provide that all persons captured under this section should be taken to Africa.

The Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

SEC. 262. It shall be the duty of the commander of any armed vessel of the United States, whenever he makes any capture under the preceding provisions, to bring the vessel and her cargo, for adjudication, into some port of the State, Territory, or District to which such vessel so captured may belong, if he can ascertain the same; if not, then into any convenient port of the United States.

SEC. 263. Every owner, master, or factor of any foreign vessel clearing from any port within the jurisdiction of the United States, and suspected to be intended for the slave trade, and the suspicion being declared to the officer of the customs by any citizen, on oath, and such information being to the satisfaction of the officer, shall first give bond, with sufficient sureties, to the Treasurer of the United States that none of the natives of any other foreign country or place shall be taken on board such vessel to be transported or sold as slaves in any other foreign port or place whatever within nine months thereafter.

SEC. 264. The President is authorized to issue instructions to the commanders of the armed vessels of the United States, directing them, whenever it is practicable, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to proceed directly to the country from which they were taken, and there hand over to the agent of the United States all such persons, delivered from on board vessels seized in the prosecution of the slave trade; and they shall afterward bring the captured vessels and persons engaged in prosecuting such trade to the United States for trial and adjudication.

SEC. 265. Whoever kidnaps or carries away any other person, with the intent that such other person be sold into involuntary servitude, or held as a slave; or who entices, persuades, or induces any other person to go on board any vessel or to any other place with the intent that he may be made or held as a slave, or sent out of the country to be so made or held; or who in any way knowingly aids in causing any other person to be held, sold, or carried away to be held or sold as a slave, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 266. Whoever holds, arrests, returns, or causes to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aids in the arrest or return of any person to a condition of peonage, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 267. [Whoever obstructs or attempts to obstruct, or in any way interferes with or prevents the enforcement of the section last preceding, shall be liable to the penalties therein prescribed.]

SEC. 268. Whoever shall knowingly and willfully bring into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any person inveigled or forcibly kidnaped in any other country, with intent to hold such person so inveigled or kidnaped in confinement or to any involuntary servitude; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully sell, or cause to be sold, into any condition of involuntary servitude, any other person for any term whatever; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully hold to involuntary servitude any person so brought or sold, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to offer an amendment to be now considered by the Senate, but I do not think that the provisions which are contained in this section will accomplish that which I hope that an amendment which I shall offer for consideration by the committee as a separate section will accomplish.

I have in my mind a case which occurred some time ago, as reported to me in New Orleans, where a boy under 21 years of age—I do not know his exact age, but it is immaterial—was induced to take a drink, as he thought, of whisky in a saloon and which turned out to be doctored, and when he woke up he was on board a ship and was required to serve on that ship. I do not know whether that would be called slavery or being held to slavery. I do not know whether any provision of the proposed law which has thus far been agreed upon would reach a case of that kind. Therefore, I shall ask that the amendment I shall offer be referred to the committee for its consideration. I ask that it may be now read at the desk, so that if it does not accomplish the purpose—I have drawn it hastily here at my desk—some legislation may be proposed which will do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi propose an amendment?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel in any river, port, bay, or harbor, or on the high seas, within the jurisdictional limits of the United States, or hovering on the coasts thereof, shall decoy, inveigle, induce, persuade, or accept any minor without consent of his parents, or any person intoxicated or under the influence of opiate or dope, with intent to require such minor or person to perform service or labor on such vessel, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the proposed amendment which has just been read can, under the rules of the Senate, be referred to the committee I should like to have it so referred, not for action now, but hereafter for consideration of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi—the committee which has considered and reported this bill being a joint committee of the two Houses which may not be able to meet readily—that he may probably be able to get some disposition of his amendment if he will offer it in the Senate when the bill shall have been reported from the Committee of the Whole. If the Senator will let his amendment now lie on the table, if we do not report the bill to the Senate to-day, we can take up the matter when the bill is next considered.

Mr. McLAURIN. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, I suggest to the Senator that the amendment he proposes be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. McLAURIN. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire an executive session, and I hope the Senator from Idaho will now yield for an executive session and ask for the resumption of the consideration of the bill on to-morrow.

Mr. HEYBURN. Inasmuch as the Senator from Ilinois expresses that hope, I feel justified in saying that I regret exceedingly that at this early hour, with only three sections to be considered, which can probably be disposed of in a few minutes, that an executive session should be called for.

Mr. President, it is the intention of the committee as soon as we dispose of these three sections to ask that the bill be reprinted as amended in Committee on the Whole, so that it will be ready for consideration in the Senate. We can not possibly do that until we have disposed of these sections. I do not anticipate any protracted consideration of the remaining sections. Of course, the Senator has a right to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but with a work of the magnitude of that before us in this case, it seems to me that we ought under the circumstances to have disposed of this bill to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I would be very glad to accommodate the Senator, and I know his ambition to get through with this work, which is a great work—and he is doing a great work in taking care of it—but I think he has done about as much to-day as he will get done; and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 19, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 18, 1908.

PENSION AGENTS.

Joab N. Patterson, of New Hampshire, to be pension agent at Concord, N. H., vice Grovenor A. Curtice, deceased, and John S. Beach, temporary appointee.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Gilbert S. Galbraith to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy from the 7th day of January, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander James G. Doyle, promoted.

I nominate the following-named chief engineers, who were confirmed by the Senate on December 11, 1906, for advancement from the grade of passed assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant, to the grade of chief engineer with the rank of lieutenant, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 29, 1906, to be chief engineers with the rank of lieutenant-commander on the retired list from the date of their advancement, in accordance with an opinion of the Attorney-General, dated January 13, 1908:

Caleb E. Lee,
Alexander V. Fraser,
Charles H. Greenleaf,
Rudolph T. Bennett,
John J. Bissett,
Henry C. Blye,
James W. Holihan,
Jonathan M. Emanuel,
Charles H. Manning,
William A. H. Allen,
David M. Fulmer,
William L. Bailie,
Charles F. Nagle,
Robert D. Taylor, and Robert Crawford.

The following-named passed assistant engineers, who were confirmed by the Senate on December 18, 1906, for advancement from the grade of assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) to the grade of passed assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 29, 1906, to be passed assistant engineers with the rank of lieutenant on the retired list from the date of their advancement, in accordance with an opinion of the Attorney-General, dated January 13, 1908:

Henry D. Sellman,
Alexander H. Price,
Joseph S. Greene,
Daniel A. Sawyer,
James W. Patterson,
James G. Littig,
William G. McEwan, and
William H. Platt.

POSTMASTERS.

IDAHO.

Francis Ball to be postmaster at Pocatello, Bannock County, Idaho, in place of Francis Ball. Incumbent's commission expired February 1, 1908.

ILLINOIS.

Harry K. Alexander to be postmaster at Palestine, Crawford County, Ill. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

Milton T. Hunt to be postmaster at Warsaw, Hancock County, Ill., in place of James F. Crawford, removed.

INDIANA.

Winfield S. Hunter to be postmaster at Jasper, Dubois County, Ind., in place of Winfield S. Hunter. Incumbent's commission expires March 30, 1908.

IOWA.

Lars E. Bladine to be postmaster at Marathon, Buena Vista County, Iowa, in place of Lars E. Bladine. Incumbent's commission expired January 14, 1908.

William W. Hawk to be postmaster at Colfax, Jasper County, Iowa, in place of Hamlin W. Robinson. Incumbent's commission expired January 4, 1908.

KANSAS.

Sheridan Crumrine to be postmaster at Longton, Elk County, Kans. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

KENTUCKY.

William C. Balee to be postmaster at Guthrie, Todd County, Ky., in place of William C. Balee. Incumbent's commission expires April 12, 1908.

John S. Miller to be postmaster at Greenville, Muhlenberg County, Ky., in place of John S. Miller. Incumbent's commission expired February 2, 1907.

LOUISIANA.

Edgar A. Bassett to be postmaster at Kentwood, Tangipahoa Parish, La., in place of Albert H. Bassett, resigned.

Edward Eagles to be postmaster at Winnfield, Winn Parish, La., in place of Edward Eagles. Incumbent's commission expires April 27, 1908.

MARYLAND.

Henry L. Arthur to be postmaster at Aberdeen, Harford County, Md., in place of George W. Evans. Incumbent's commission expires March 1, 1908.

MASSACHUSETTS.

John F. Mitchell to be postmaster at North Grafton, Worcester County, Mass., in place of John F. Mitchell. Incumbent's commission expires March 2, 1908.

MINNESOTA.

Arthur H. Rowland to be postmaster at Tracy, Lyon County, Minn., in place of William R. Edwards. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1908.

MISSOURI.

Henry J. Bernhard to be postmaster at Palmyra, Marion County, Mo., in place of Isaac R. Huggins, deceased.

NEW YORK.

Arthur Hartt to be postmaster at Ravena, Albany County, N. Y., in place of Arthur Hartt. Incumbent's commission expires March 12, 1908.

Wesley Mulford to be postmaster at Unadilla, Otsego County, N. Y., in place of Wesley Mulford. Incumbent's commission expires March 22, 1908.

OKLAHOMA.

David C. Blossom to be postmaster at Atoka, Atoka County, Okla., in place of David C. Blossom. Incumbent's commission expired February 12, 1907.

William R. Casteel to be postmaster at Mounds, Creek County, Okla., in place of William R. Casteel. Incumbent's commission expired January 14, 1908.

Joel E. Cunningham to be postmaster at Konawa, Seminole County, Okla. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

Louis M. Merritt to be postmaster at Roff, Chickasaw County, Okla., in place of Louis M. Merritt. Incumbent's commission expired November 24, 1907.

TENNESSEE.

James Rogers, jr., to be postmaster at Dyer, Gibson County, Tenn. Office became Presidential January 1, 1907.

TEXAS.

John A. Couch, sr., to be postmaster at Munday, Knox County, Tex. Office became Presidential October 1, 1907.

Jose V. Palacios to be postmaster at San Diego, Duval County, Tex. Office became Presidential October 1, 1907.

VIRGINIA.

C. G. Duffy to be postmaster at Stonega, Wise County, Va. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

Archie W. Moses to be postmaster at Cambria, Montgomery County, Va. Office became Presidential April 1, 1907.

WASHINGTON.

Francis M. Clow to be postmaster at St. John, Whitman County, Wash. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

WYOMING.

Arnold O. Heyer to be postmaster at Shoshoni, Fremont County, Wyo. Office became Presidential July 1, 1907.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 18, 1908.

AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Merritt O. Chance, of Illinois, to be Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Charles H. Bartholomew to be postmaster at San Diego, San Diego County, Cal.

Arthur Spencer Fleming to be postmaster at Auburn, Placer County, Cal.

Clarence S. Merrill to be postmaster at Berkeley, Alameda County, Cal.

MAINE.

Arthur A. Dinsmore to be postmaster at Dover, Piscataquis County, Me.

Eugene A. Fairfield to be postmaster at Kennebunk, York County, Me.

Lorenzo B. Hill to be postmaster at National Soldier's Home (late Togus), Kennebec County, Me.

George L. Hovey to be postmaster at North Anson, Somerset County, Me.

John M. Thurlough to be postmaster at Fort Fairfield, Aroostook County, Me.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles A. Haskell to be postmaster at Newton Center, Middlesex County, Mass.

Abbie H. Souther to be postmaster at Cohasset, Norfolk County, Mass.

WASHINGTON.

Grant C. Angle to be postmaster at Shelton, Mason County, Wash.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 18, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF SENATE BILL 902.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for reprint of Senate bill 902 as reported by the District Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate bill 902 as reported by the District Committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAM ACROSS CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6195) to authorize A. J. Smith and his associates to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the original bill and substitute the following:

"That Andrew J. Smith and his associates, their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Choctawhatchee River about one-eighth of a mile below or west of the bridge across said river on the road known as the Newton and Ozark public road, in Dale County, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, usually when we pass bridge bills they run to corporations, so that there is some control over them. This bill seems to run to Andrew J. Smith and his associates.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, of course usually that form of bill means a speculative enterprise. I wish the gentleman would give us information in reference to that matter.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is entirely in error in his proposition, if I may so term it, that this is a speculative enterprise. It is a bona fide enterprise among several gentlemen to construct a dam across a river down in the district that I have the honor to represent, a river that by law has been declared navigable and is for the most part navigable in fact.

At this particular point where the dam is proposed to be constructed, it may be said not to be navigable now for the most part of the year. It is toward the head of the river, near the origin of the river, where the dam is to be constructed. It is to utilize a water power there that is now going to waste. The near-by towns I am told desire to utilize this for power for the operation of an electric-light plant and perhaps factories and for machinery of various sorts. I can assure the gentleman that, in my opinion, and from the knowledge I can get, it is a meritorious measure and for an honest purpose to utilize a valuable water power that is now going to waste.

The gentleman may know that the attention of the country, and particularly the southern people, has been directed toward the development, or perhaps, to be more accurate, the utilization, of the water power in the South within the last few years. A great many projects are being gotten up now, and I may say to the gentleman, in perfect good humor, I believe when the present Republican panic shall have subsided, that not only in Alabama, but throughout the South, thousands of water powers, hundreds of streams, will be utilized in the turning of the wheels of industry. As it is now, the impetus it is giving to the development of this water power has been set back a little.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask whether this stream that the gentleman refers to at any time heretofore has had an appropriation made to improve it and make it navigable?

Mr. CLAYTON. It has.

Mr. KEIFER. It is proposed to abandon that now?

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir; it is not proposed to abandon it at all.

Mr. KEIFER. It is proposed to abandon it for the purpose of navigation and transform it into a power for electric light or for machinery?

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir; it is not proposed to abandon the navigation.

Mr. KEIFER. How can you use it for both?

Mr. CLAYTON. As I said in the beginning, this dam is proposed to be erected at a point on the river where I do not believe it will interfere with the improvement of the river for the purpose of navigation. This river, I may say for the benefit of the gentleman, and because the House seems to be interested in it, rises in my district and flows through my district into Florida, and it furnishes a continuous water navigation from counties in my State down through the southeastern portion of the State, down through Florida, and to the Gulf and on to Pensacola and on to New Orleans.

Mr. KEIFER. What sort of vessels navigate the stream?

Mr. CLAYTON. Steamboats.

Mr. KEIFER. Of what size?

Mr. CLAYTON. Stern-wheel steamboats. The old side-wheel steamboats have been practically abandoned on the small rivers. The project on hand now is to improve this river, and since I have had the honor to represent here in Congress the people of the greatest district in God's universe $25,000 has been appropriated for the improvement of that stream. I am now asking this House or Congress to appropriate $100,000 to improve the stream. If the Congress of the United States knows a good and meritorious project, this House will pass my measure giving to that river $100,000.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice that the bill gives this authority to Andrew Smith and his associates. Does not the gentleman think that there ought to be a provision that Andrew Smith shall be required to inform the War Department who his associates will be, in case Andrew Smith should drop out?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; I do not think that is any more necessary than it would be to put a provision in to inform the War Department as to who the stockholders of any corporation were that asked authority in a bill to build a dam. This proposition is a meritorious one, and I may say it is well under way. I am informed and believe that they await the action of Congress, in order to begin at once the utilization of this power. I want to say to the distinguished leader of the Republican party that I believe that this project will be begun even before the present Republican panic shall have passed away.

You know down there in Alabama we have not suffered, in such a district as I represent, as greatly as have the commercial centers of the country on account of the present panic.

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman, that while I might object to the bill, running in that way to Smith and his associates, ordinarily I am so much in favor of developing the southern country that I am inclined to let this bill go through on the assurance of the gentleman that it is for the purpose of developing the country and encouraging capital and labor.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that, while on the subject of water, Alabama, as we all know, on account of some recent very wholesome legislation down there, will turn her attention almost entirely to water after the 1st of January next. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. But that is not for navigating purposes, I understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that he hoped after this Republican panic had passed there would be great development of the water power.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under this bill it is necessary to commence this dam within one year. Does the gentleman expect that the Republican panic will have passed away so much more quickly than did the Democratic panic?

Mr. CLAYTON. I explained my attitude in regard to this measure by saying a while ago—perhaps the gentleman did not understand me, as I am unfortunate sometimes in the use of language and fail to make myself clear——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is always clear and lucid.

Mr. CLAYTON. I thank the gentleman very much for his complimentary reference, but I desire to repeat what I attempted to say a few moments ago, and that is that the Republican panic had not affected us in the cotton-growing South up to this time as much as it had affected those in the great commercial centers of the East and of the West and of the Northwest, perhaps. It certainly has not affected the honest farmers down in Alabama as much as it has the gamblers and the rotten banks of New York City, and I believe that the South to-day is in better condition and is the most inviting field in the country for investment. On one occasion our amiable Speaker accused me of being optimistic, and he spread out his arms and said:

CLAYTON, you and the other optimists get out there and you talk about our glorious country."

Now, he sometimes indulges in that evidence of optimism himself, but I want to say to the gentleman to-day that the farmers of the South hold 3,000,000 bales of cotton.

That cotton does not belong to Wall street. Nobody has a mortgage on it. It belongs to those people in the South, and they have it in the South to-day. The gentleman can realize that that cotton is worth from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000. The South is in better condition to hold that cotton than it ever was, and we are going to hold it until the British spinners give us a reasonable price for it. The gentleman may not have observed the trend of events, particularly in the matter of cotton—he is more interested in beef and pork, and hence he evinces always a lively interest whenever there is a pork barrel brought into the House [laughter]—but we have this enormous amount of cotton, and the South to-day is indebted to the British spinners almost altogether for the maintenance of the present price of cotton. During the last cotton year the South produced 13,600,000 bales of cotton. Before that cotton year had expired, and in the face of the new crop, cotton advanced to 13½ cents a pound in the interior. This year, when we have a cotton crop of only about 11,500,000 bales, cotton is quoted in New York, I think, to-day at about 10.45 cents or 10.50 cents. Now, why is a cotton crop of 11,500,000 bales worth only 10½ cents, while a cotton crop of 13,500,000 bales was worth 13½ cents? I give this to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to think about, and to help us to remedy the situation, and I appeal to his party to remedy the situation as far as legislation may do it. It is on account of a Republican panic; it is on account of your failure to enact proper laws; it is on account of your failure to enact proper financial legislation, to enact proper tariff laws, to do something for the good and for the benefit of the country, and you can not wonder why the cotton growers of the South continue and will continue to vote for the Democratic ticket in the face of all of this Republican inefficiency, and I may say, stupidity. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to have the gentleman state from his statistics what the price of cotton was in the years 1893 and 1894. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. It went down pretty low, but it went down lower under McKinley in 1898. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am always willing to hear from the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, particularly when I want to indulge in ancient historical references and to hear a sweet voice from the long-gone past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the right to object as far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none. [Laughter and applause.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSION BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like to prefer a request of the House, always with the consent of the gentleman from New Hampshire. I would like to ask permission of the House, Mr. Speaker, to address the House for a few minutes, not to exceed thirty minutes, before the House enters upon the consideration of pension bills.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding thirty minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TRIBUTE TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, to-day, the 18th of February, is the anniversary of an important event in the life of one of our fellow Members. The spirit of friendship that often unites the opposing sides of this Chamber on questions not strictly political, arousing, as it does, our interest in everything that pertains to the personal welfare of our associates, makes it singularly pleasant for us to recall this incident in the career of our colleague. In 1872 he was first elected to this House as a Republican from a country district, a district in the glorious corn belt of the golden West. Already, at the age of 36, he had established his reputation as a lawyer and earned a comfortable competency as a farmer.

FIRST VOTE IN CONGRESS FOR BLAINE.

In the following year, at the assembling of the Forty-third Congress, on December 1, he answered "Present" on the call of the States, and later in the day cast his first vote. It was for James G. Blaine for Speaker. [Applause.] Four days later, when the committees were announced, he found that he had been placed on the important Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. On the 18th of February, 1874, thirty-four years ago to-day, he made his first speech in this Chamber. It was a notable assemblage that he addressed. Great spirits were in this hall on that day. Some already had achieved distinction; others were destined soon to sit in the seats of the mighty. Facing the new Member, in yonder chair, sat the illustrious parliamentarian, statesman, and orator, Speaker Blaine.

GREAT MEN HEAR HIS FIRST SPEECH IN THE HOUSE.

Near him on this side of the House were gathered Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut; WILLIAM P. FRYE and EUGENE HALE, of Maine; four remarkable men from Massachusetts—Henry L. Dawes, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, an able lawyer, economist, and financier; the famous jurist, E. Rockwood Hoar; his no less famous brother, George F. Hoar, and the bold and picturesque Benjamin F. Butler; JULIUS C. BURROWS, of Michigan, and James A. Garfield, of Ohio. On the other side of the aisle shone a no less brilliant galaxy of statesmen—Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia [applause]; William R. Morrison, of Illinois [applause]; William S. Holman, of Indiana; Lucius Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi [applause]; Richard P. Bland, of Missouri; Fernando Wood, of New York; Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania [applause], and Roger Q. Mills, of Texas. [Applause.]

REDUCES POSTAGE ON PAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Mr. Packer of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, had been recognized and had moved to take up for consideration a bill reported by his committee. This bill reduced the rates of postage on books, papers, and periodicals; gave to Government officials the franking privilege for public correspondence; provided for the free distribution of public documents and seeds, and for the carrying of newspapers free within the counties of their publication.

Although there was then determined opposition to the bill, most of its provisions are in force to-day. So great was the interest in this measure that a motion by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to give precedence to an important financial bill was voted down. Mr. Packer then yielded his time to the Member from the West, who had been selected to present the views of the committee and who was to make his first speech in Congress. He made a carefully prepared, logical argument in support of the bill, reenforcing his proposition by a well-ordered array of convincing figures. It was a speech that could only have been made after hard work and thorough preparation. Let me read a few extracts that revealed to his hearers the character of their unknown western colleague:

EXTRACTS FROM HIS SPEECH—WANTS THE PEOPLE TO KNOW WHAT PUBLIC OFFICIALS ARE DOING.

"Suppose, however, that it really will cost to send these public documents through the mails free as much as the postage at full rates would be if it were prepaid, still I think it would be wise to distribute them. In this Republic of ours the people are sovereign, and to govern properly they must have not only patriotism and honesty, but also intelligence and a knowledge of the principles of the Government and the manner in which the Government is administered, and therefore they have established free schools all over the country for the instruction of the people at the public expense; and the temper of our people is to make that instruction compulsory, and properly so, for each citizen practically is as much interested in the proper exercise of the right of franchise by the humblest and poorest citizen of the Republic, as he is in his own proper action; and as the different executive officers of the Government, as well as persons constituting the legislature, are only for the time being acting as the agents of the people, it is important, aye, not only important, but indispensable, if the genius of our institutions is preserved and the Government properly administered, that the people should keep track of the acts and doings of their agents. It is true that now news is given very generally to the people through the newspapers of the country; but when we consider the hurried manner in which it is prepared, as well as in which it is read, and that the papers frequently, I may say generally, contain a mere digest of the proceedings of Congress, of the transactions of the different Departments connected with the Executive, and that from the very nature of things the reports, as digested and published, frequently contain errors, and are warped by partisan feeling, the necessity of a correct and complete record of the proceedings of the legislative and executive branches of the Government being published in convenient form for use and preservation, and distributed to the people for their information, is at once seen.

* * * * * * *

PROUD THAT HE REPRESENTS COUNTRY DISTRICT.

"The truth is, the people get valuable information concerning the administration of the Government in all its departments and branches from these documents, and my observation is that information obtained therefrom passes orally from man to man; and while I am proud of our great cities, and many of the citizens who reside therein, noted for their proficiency in their respective callings and their great energy and industry in accomplishing that which they undertake, yet in the country, among the producers, the men who earn bread by the sweat of their faces, you find equally as great industry, and I dare say more general intelligence and patriotism; and this class of men especially are anxious to receive public documents and read them."

HAS OATS IN HIS POCKET.

A MEMBER. "The gentleman must have oats in his pocket."

"I understand the gentleman. Yes; I have oats in my pocket and hay seed in my hair [great laughter]; and the western people generally are affected in the same way; and we expect that the seed, being good, will yield a good crop, I trust tenfold; and the sooner legislation is had, not only as proposed by this bill, but in all other respects as the people desire and equity and justice shall dictate, the better it will be in the long run for all people in this country, whatever may be their calling or wherever they may reside."

* * * * * * *

NOT AFRAID OF THE CITY PRESS.

In closing he said:

"And last, but not least, we are told that the city press of the country oppose this bill, or any other measures that will give the people free public documents, for the reason, as alleged, that the individuals or incorporated companies conducting the same are desirous of monopolizing the means of information touching the affairs of the Government, at least to the exclusion of information to be furnished by the Government at the general expense. And it is also claimed by some that Members can not afford to advocate and vote for this bill, for the reason that the city press will declare war upon them and continue the same until they lose standing with their constituency. I do not believe that the city press will as a unit oppose this bill. A portion of it may from selfish motives, in some instances, and honestly in others. I certainly have no desire to call upon myself the assaults of the city press, or any portion of it. Nor do I fear it as long as I truly represent my constituents and act, in my representative capacity, for the interest of the people generally. Nor would I change the power of the press to assail my acts or those of anyone else. On the contrary, every Member of Congress, or other agent of the people, should court a fair criticism of his acts, and if he vitally misrepresents the people, they should, and no doubt would, fail to continue him in places of trust. But no man is a proper person to represent the people unless he has the honesty and the backbone to stand and do what is right and for the interest of the people, without reference to what anyone may say of him, or what the action of the press may be in the premises."

HAS MADE THE WHOLE NATION HIS DEBTOR.

Who was this man who thirty-four years ago to-day was ridiculed on the floor of this House as a country Member and taunted with having oats in his pocket; who proudly acknowledged the truth of the jest that he did represent a country district, good-naturedly silenced the jester, and then refuted the insinuation of narrowness and provincialism in the ringing words that I have read; words eloquent with the spirit of the truest statesmanship and the loftiest patriotism [Applause.] Who was this new Member who handled himself so well in his first debate in the House, and in the face of ridicule was so true and loyal to the folks at home on the farms in his district and to the millions of plain people, the farmers and toilers who form the heart of this Republic? What has he done since? Where is he now? He has made the whole country his debtor, and he now fills the second office in the nation. For the new Member who had oats in his pocket had sand in his make-up, and he is now our Speaker, whom Speaker Blaine then recognized as "The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Cannon." [Loud and long-continued applause.]

BORN IN NORTH CAROLINA.

In that first speech he was simply true, as he always has been, to his birth, his training, and his convictions. Born in the country, in North Carolina [applause], like Lincoln, he was reared in the country in Indiana [applause]; and, like Lincoln, when he had attained manhood he settled in the country in Illinois, and has lived in the same district for fifty years. [Applause.]

FIRST SPEECH GIVES HIM HIGH RANK AMONG COLLEAGUES.

That speech gave him a position at once as one of the strong men of the House and won for him the respect of his colleagues in both branches of Congress and of the leaders in official life.

Grant was then President and Wilson, of Massachusetts, Vice-President. Among the Senators Mr. CANNON met Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware; John B. Gordon, of Georgia [applause]; John A. Logan and Richard J. Oglesby, of Illinois [applause]; Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana [applause]; WILLIAM B. ALLISON, of Iowa; John J. Ingalls, of Kansas [applause]; Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine; Charles Sumner and George S. Boutwell, of Massachusetts; Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan [applause]; Carl Schurz, of Missouri [applause]; Roscoe Conkling, of New York; John Sherman and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio [applause]; Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania [applause]; George F. Edmunds, of Vermont [applause], and Matthew H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin. [Applause.] The association which he enjoyed with these leaders of public thought he has kept up with their successors, for his district has reelected him sixteen times. [Applause.] Honors and dignities and riches have not lured him, as they have so many successful men, away from the country to the city. He still likes to feel the oats in his pockets; he is still fond of old associations and still loyal to old friends.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICES.

The oats that he sowed here thirty-four years ago were not wild oats, and they have yielded him generous and rich returns. The ability and industry manifested in that first speech soon won him a place on the Committee on Appropriations. For many years his position as chairman of that great committee or ranking Member of the minority, brought him into intimate official relations with the President and all the members of the Cabinet, and through conference committee work with the ablest men in the Senate. Three times he has been elected Speaker, and his best services to the State have been rendered in this high office. His capacity for growth seems to have no limit [applause], while his vast knowledge and experience enable him to do easily what for any other man would be difficult or impossible. And so he has been able to carry through the important measures recommended by the President by giving to them the great weight of his authority. The passage of the employers' liability bill, the pure food, meat inspection, and railroad rate bills was made certain by his advocacy. In faithfully representing the farmers and toilers of his own district he has served all the workers of the country.

HAS EARNED NATION'S FINAL HONOR.

The people of his district have conferred upon him all the honors that are in their gift to bestow, single handed and alone. And the thought that comes to my mind on this anniversary of our country colleague's first triumph in this House, a triumph won in the interest of the workers of the country, is simply this: How gladly within the next few months the other plain people, who live on farms or work in mines or shops, will join the voters of his district to reward this their faithful servant, who went forth in their cause thirty-four years ago with oats in his pocket and returned bringing his sheaves with him, by conferring upon him the nation's final honor. [Prolonged general cheering and applause.]

PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the pension bills on the Calendar shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] will take the chair.

WILLIAM H. H. LANG.

The first pension business was the bill (H. R. 2200) granting an increase of pension to William H. H Lang.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Lang, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN SULLIVAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10442) granting an increase of pension to John Sullivan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Sullivan, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DANIEL H. SUMNER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9811) granting an increase of pension to Daniel H. Sumner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel H. Sumner, late of Company C, Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EDWARD M. LEE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3350) granting an increase of pension to Edward M. Lee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward M. Lee, late lieutenant-colonel Fifth Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the words "captain Company E, and."

In same line, before the word "Michigan," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8, strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CORNELIUS W. SMITH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8745) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius W. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelius W. Smith, late of Company D, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $46 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

In line 8 strike out the word "forty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL COZINE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8053) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Cozine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Cozine, late of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HIRAM STILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7879) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Still.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram Still, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JEREMIAH KEEFE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7223) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Keefe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeremiah Keefe, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ROSENIA WRITER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6736) granting an increase of pension to Rosenia Writer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosenia Writer, widow of Walstine Writer, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DAVIS E. JAMES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5636) granting an increase of pension to Davis E. James.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Davis E. James, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

AMOS FOUST.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2354) granting an increase of pension to Amos Foust.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Foust, late of Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELBERT M. WATTS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1496) granting an increase of pension to Elbert M. Watts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elbert M. Watts, late of Company B, One hundred and seventy-seventh Regiment Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "B" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

In line 7, after the word "Regiment," insert the word "Ohio."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES C. WEAVER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1062) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Weaver.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles C. Weaver, late of Company E, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

RANDOLPH SNELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14314) granting an increase of pension to Randolph Snell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Randolph Snell, late of Company F, First Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CALVIN MOREHEAD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14427) granting an increase of pension to Calvin Morehead.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Calvin Morehead, late of Companies E and H, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Companies E and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Company."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM HERBERT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13951) granting an increase of pension to William Herbert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Herbert, late seaman of United States ship Gamage, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "seaman."

In same line strike out the word "ship" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ships."

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "Great Western and Essex, United States Navy."

In line 7 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL A. SLEMMONS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13355) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Slemmons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel A. Slemmons, late of Company E, Eighty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Eighty-eighth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS J. SHOFFNER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13137) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Shaffner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enactcd, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas J. Shaffner, late of Company F, Fifth Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Shaffner" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Shoffner." In same line, after the word "Fifth," insert the word "Regiment."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Shoffner."

JOHN E. LAPSLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13065) granting an increase of pension to John E. Lapeley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John E. Lapeley, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Lapeley" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Lapsley."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John E. Lapsley."

JOHN RILEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12811) granting an increase of pension to John Riley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Riley, late of Company —, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Company," insert the letter "C."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM A. COUCH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11937) granting an increase of pension to William A. Couch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William A. Couch, late of Company E, Second Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL BECKLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11911) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Beckley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Beckley, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. STEPHENS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11286) granting a pension to John H. Stephens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Stephens, late of Company —, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 dollars per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Company," insert the letter "F."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John H. Stephens."

JOHN T. HOGG, JR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11120) granting an increase of pension to John T. Hogg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John T. Hogg, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Hogg," insert the word "junior."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John T. Hogg, jr."

JOSEPH PRICE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11055) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Price.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Price, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEONARD C. HILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10949) granting an increase of pension to Leonard C. Hill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leonard C. Hill, late of Company G, Twenty-ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ROBERT H. BARTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10930) granting an increase of pension to Robert H. Barton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert H. Barton, late of Company B, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MICHAEL P. DONLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10753) granting an increase of pension to Michael P. Donley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael P. Donley, late of Company E, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant Company C, and captain."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SUSIE HARKEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10307) granting an increase of pension to Susan Harkey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan Harkey, widow of Sidney L. Harkey, late chaplain Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Susan" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Susie."

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Susie Harkey."

JAMES M. NEAL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3339) granting an increase of pension to James M. Neal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Neal, late of Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LINSAY C. JONES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2846) granting an increase of pension to Linsay C. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Linsay C. Jones, late of Company K, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE S. BENNETT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5639) granting an increase of pension to George S. Bennett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George S. Bennett, late of Company E, Twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, before the word "dollars," insert the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. PRESSLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4539) granting an increase of pension to John W. Pressley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Pressley, late of Company K, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES F. READ.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4538) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles F. Read, late of Company F, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN B. SOUTHWORTH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4094) granting a pension to John B. Southworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John B. Southworth, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8, before the word "dollars," insert the word "thirty."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John B. Southworth."

MARY TEN EYCK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14632) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ten Eick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ten Eick, widow of Lieut. Col. Arthur S. Ten Eick, late of Company ——, Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Eick" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Eyck." In same line strike out "lieutenant-colonel."

In line 7 strike out the word "Eick" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Eyck." In same line, after the word "late," strike out the words "of Company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "captain Company A and lieutenant-colonel."

In line 9 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary Ten Eyck."

GEORGE W. EGGLESTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14570) granting a pension to George W. Eggleston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Eggleston, late of Company, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "of Company" and insert in lieu thereof the word "unassigned."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EDWARD CARR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14477) granting an increase of pension to Edward Carr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Carr, late of Battery F, Second Regiment United State Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Battery," insert the words "U. S. S. Dan Smith, Home, and Princeton, United States Navy, and."

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY H. TAYLOR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14453) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry H. Taylor, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CORNELIUS D. M'COMBS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14807) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius D. McCombs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelius D. McCombs, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Heavy Artillery."
In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW J. BLACK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14829) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Black.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Black, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CARLOS L. BUZZELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14869) granting an increase of pension to Carlos L. Buzzell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carlos L. Buzzell, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment New Hamphire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES TENBROOK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14916) granting an increase of pension to James Tenbrook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Tenbrook, late of Company I, Eighth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MISSOURI L. HERRON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14982) granting a pension to Missouri L. Herron.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Missouri L. Herron, dependent stepmother of Jonathan Herron, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Alexander Herron, late of Company F, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "and Alexander Herron, late of Company F, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CYNTHIA A. BENSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12936) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia Benson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cynthia Benson, late of Company ——, —— Regiment —— Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Cynthia," insert the letter "A."
In same line, after the word "Benson," insert the words "dependent mother of Joseph C. Benson."
In same line, after the word "Company," insert the words "H, Twenty-sixth."
In line 7, before the word "Volunteer," insert the word "Illinois."
In same line strike out the word "him" and insert the word "her."
In line 8, after the word "of," insert the word "twenty."
In same line strike out the word "he" and insert the word "she."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Cynthia A. Benson."

EDWARD B. WRIGHT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15305) granting an increase of pension to Edward B. Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward B. Wright, late captain of Battery B, Michigan Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "captain," insert the words "first lieutenant and."
In same line, before the word "Michigan," insert the words "First Regiment."
In line 7, before the word "Light," insert the word "Volunteer."
In same line strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS A. SORRELL, ALIAS THOMAS A. MARTIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14621) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Sorrell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas A. Sorrel, late of the U. S. S. Roanoke, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "late," insert the words "alias Thomas A. Martin."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Sorrell, alias Thomas A. Martin."

CLEANTHUS BURNETT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15380) granting an increase of pension to Cleanthus Burnett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cleanthus Burnett, late of Company G, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. HUDSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to John W. Hudson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Hudson, late of Company H, Sixty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN M. HOISINGTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4355) granting a pension to John M. Hoisington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John M. Hoisington, late of Company C, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."
In line 7 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve." In the same line, after the word "month" insert the words "the same to be paid to him under the rules of the Pension Bureau as to mode and time of payment without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW HIRAM WOODS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4934) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Woods.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram Woods, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Hiram," insert the word "Andrew."
In same line strike out the words "Company H, One hundred and" and all of line 7.
In line 8 strike out the word "and."
In line 9 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Andrew Hiram Woods."

DAVID H. HOUSE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10692) granting an increase of pension to David H. House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David H. House, late of Company B, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Company" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Battery."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN SAIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13152) granting an increase of pension to John H. Sain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Sain, late of Company C, Sixty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "H."
In line 8 strike out the word "forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Sain."

JOHN D. WELLS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13962) granting an increase of pension to John D. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John D. Wells, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY M. WATERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14716) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Waters.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry M. Waters, late sergeant of Company H, Second Ohio Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $46 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "sergeant."
In same line, after the word "Second," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."
In same line strike out the word "forty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MITTIE CHOATE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2175) granting an increase of pension to Mittie Mitchell Choate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mittie Mitchell Choate, widow of George W. Choate, late of Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mitchell."
In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mittie Choate."

JANE DORSEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5868) granting a pension to Jane Dorsey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane Dorsey, widow of Henry Dorsey, late of Company E, Sixty-fourth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Seventh Regiment Louisiana Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "and Company E, Seventh Regiment Louisiana Colored Volunteer Infantry."
In line 10 strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."
In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the soldier."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN J. BANKS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7288) granting an increase of pension to John J. Banks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J.

Banks, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH CHISAM.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7325) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Chisam.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Chisam, late of Company F, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "and Company F, First Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FLORENCE K. PATTERSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7431) granting a pension to Florence K. Patterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Florence K. Patterson, widow of Joseph B. Patterson, late of the U. S. S. Alleghany, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "the United States ship Alleghany" and insert in lieu thereof the words "U. S. S. Alleghany, Release, and Maratanza," United States Navy.

In line 8 strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WORTHINGTON FRINGER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7432) granting a pension to Worthington Fringer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Worthington Fringer, late of Third Regiment Maryland Volunteer Home Brigade, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Third," insert the words "Company G." In same line, before the word "Maryland," insert the words "Potomac Home Brigade."

In line 7 strike out the words "Home Brigade" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Infantry."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSHUA GILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7439) granting an increase of pension to Joshua Gill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joshua Gill, late of Company F, Second Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MILO L. PIERCE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R 7790) granting an increase of pension to Milo L. Pierce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milo L. Pierce, late of Company B, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SUSAN A. JACKSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7792) granting a pension to Susan A. Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan A. Jackson, widow of W. C. Jackson, late of Companies E and F, First Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "W." and insert in lieu thereof the word "William."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SARAH J. TONCRAY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7893) granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Toncray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah J. Toncray, widow of A. R. P. Toncray, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Charles P. Toncray, helpless and dependent child of A. R. P. Toncray, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Sarah J. Toncray the name of said Charles P. Toncray shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Sarah J. Toncray.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "A." and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alexander."

In the same line, after the word "late," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "captain."

In line 11 strike out the letter "A." and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alexander."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ADLADE HOLLAND.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8489) granting a pension to Adelaide Holland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Adelaide Holland, widow of Patrick Holland, late of Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Adelaide" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Adlade."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Adlade Holland."

BARBARA HAASE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8640) granting an increase of pension to Barbara Haase.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barbara Haase, widow of Charles Haase, late of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARGRET ORST.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4387) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Orst.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Orst, widow of the late Henry Orst, of Company K, First Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Margaret" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Margret."

In same line strike out the words "the late."

In same line, after the words "Henry Orst," insert the word "late."

In line 7, before the word "Virginia," insert the word "West."

In same line, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and First and One hundred and forty-seventh Companies, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps."

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Margret Orst."

HENRY B. KEFFER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4072) granting a pension to Henry B. Keffer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry B. Keffer, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Keffer."

IDA W. MAPLES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8644) granting an increase of pension to Ida W. Maples.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ida W. Maples, widow of Isaac B. Maples, late acting first assistant engineer, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MILTON FRAME.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8829) granting an increase of pension to Milton Frame.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milton Frame, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA A. ATKINSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9768) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Atkinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Atkinson, widow of Francis M. Atkinson, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY L. WILLIAMS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9813) granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry L. Williams, late of Company A, Eighty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MILTON WILLIAMS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to Milton Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milton Williams, late of Company A, Fifty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HESTER KITE.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1406) granting an increase of pension to Hester Kite.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hester Kite, widow of Benjamin Kite, late of Captain Stewart's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN S. HYATT.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 523) granting an increase of pension to John S. Hyatt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Hyatt, late of Captain Hancock's company, Utah Volunteers, Utah Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN LOWDER.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 524) granting an increase of pension to John Lowder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Lowder, late of Captain James A. Hunter's company, Utah Volunteers, Utah Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA STEWART.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1403) granting an increase of pension to Martha Stewart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Stewart, widow of Daniel Stewart, late of Captain Niblack's company, Second Regiment East Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELIZABETH SWEAT.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1408) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Sweat.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Sweat, widow of James A. Sweat, late of Capt. E. T. Kendrick's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read a third time and passed.

WILLIAM C. O'NEAL.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1405) granting an increase of pension to William C. O'Neal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. O'Neal, late of Captain Hardee's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN LOURCEY.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1404) granting an increase of pension to John Lourcey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Lourcey, late of Captain Brady's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JANE C. STINGLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Jane C. Stingley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane C. Stingley, widow of James D. Stingley, late of Capt. John Mathis's company, South Carolina Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

NANCY MOTES.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1423) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Motes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Motes, widow of Lewis Motes, late of Captain Thigpin's company, Second Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JERRY MURPHY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jerry Murphy, late of Company H, Regiment of United States Mounted Rifles, Indian wars, from 1855 to 1860, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Company" and insert "Troop."
In the same line strike out "Regiment of."
In line 7 strike out "Indian wars, from eighteen hun-"
In the same line insert "Texas and New Mexico Indian disturbances."
Strike out line 8.
In line 9, before "pay," insert "and."
In same line strike out "thirty" and insert "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES M. FITCH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3610) granting a pension to James M. Fitch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Fitch, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, Spanish-American war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "Volunteer" and "Spanish-American war."
In line 8 strike out "thirty" and insert "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES J. CALLAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4663) granting a pension to James J. Callan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James J. Callan, late of Company E, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "thirty" and insert "eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PAUL W. DRAHEIM.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7522) granting an increase of pension to Paul W. Draheim.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Paul W. Draheim, late of Company K, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after "Infantry," insert "war with Spain."
In line 8 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "ten."
Strike out all after "month" in the same line.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Granting a pension to Paul W. Draheim."

DAVID T. KIRBY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8629) granting a pension to David T. Kirby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David T. Kirby, late of United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before "United," insert "U. S. S. Minneapolis."
In same line, after "Navy," strike out "and pay him."
Strike out line 7.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANGELINE PHILLIPS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8654) granting an increase of pension to Angelina Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Angelina Phillips, widow of William Phillips, late of Dayton and Field's company, District of Columbia Militia, 1814, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the name of the beneficiary in the title and body of the bill so as to read "Angeline Phillips."
In line 6, before "Dayton," insert "Captains."
In line 7 change "company" to "companies."
In line 8 strike out "eighteen hundred and fourteen" and insert "war of eighteen hundred and twelve."
In line 9 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PENELOPE L. NEWMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9837) granting an increase of pension to Penelope L. Newman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Penelope L. Newman, widow of James Newman, late of Company —, Regiment Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after "Company," insert "E, Battalion of Mississippi."
In line 8 strike out "Infantry" and insert "Riflemen."
In line 9 strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

OPHELIA J. GORDON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10018) granting an increase of pension to Ophelia J. Gordon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ophelia J. Gordon, widow of Thomas M. Gordon, late of Company G, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "Mexican."
In line 8, after "war," insert "with Mexico."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SARAH E. NIXON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11145) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Nixon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Nixon, widow of First Lieut. George H. Nixon, late of Company M, First Tennessee Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that that bill lie on the table, as the beneficiary is dead.

The motion was agreed to.

EMELINE M. STRONG.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11217) granting an increase of pension to Emiline M. Strong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emiline M. Strong, widow of John Strong, late of Company F, First Regiment Mississippi Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change "Emiline" where it appears in the title and body of the bill to "Emeline."
In line 7 change "Volunteer" to "Volunteers," and in the same line strike out "Infantry."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Emeline M. Strong."

MARTHA C. PACE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12280) granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Pace.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha C. Pace, widow of Alexander Pace, late corporal in Curtis's and Allen's companies, Georgia Mounted Volunteers, Indian wars, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "corporal" and insert after "late" the words "of Captains."
In line 7 strike out "in Curtis's" and insert "Crute's."
In line 8, before "Indian," insert "Creek," and strike out the word "wars" and insert the word "war" in the same line.
In line 9 strike out "thirty" and insert "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM GOULDING.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13708) granting an increase of pension to William Goulding.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Goulding, late of Company F, Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Company" and insert "Battery."
In line 7, after "Artillery," insert "Florida Seminole Indian war."
In line 8 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELIZA D. RAMEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14338) granting an increase of pension to Eliza D. Ramey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza D. Ramey, widow of William Ramey, late private in Captain Rogers's company, Alabama Mounted Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "private" and insert "of."
In line 7 strike out "in;" and in the same line, after "Volunteers," insert "Cherokee Indian disturbances."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SARAH E. WILLIS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14906) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Willis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Willis, widow of Piatt A. Willis, late of Company B, Second Regiment Mississippi Volunteers, in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Piatt" and insert "Platte."
In line 7 strike out "in the" before "war."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA MARBLE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15068) granting an increase of pension to Martha Marble.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Marble, widow of John K. Marble, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after "Infantry," insert "war with Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LOUISA J. LONG.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15401) granting an increase of pension to Louisa J. Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa J. Long, widow of Martin L. Long, late of Price's company, Georgia Volunteers, Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after "late of," insert "Captain."

In line 7, after "Volunteers," strike out "Indian war" and insert "Cherokee Indian disturbances."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN A. M. LA PIERRE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 603) granting an increase of pension to John A. M. La Pierre.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted. etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. M. La Pierre, late first lieutenant and adjutant of Forty-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the words "first lieutenant Company E, and."

In line 7 strike out the word "of."

In same line, before the word "Indiana," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES CARROLL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1034) granting an increase of pension to James Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Carroll, late of Company D, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOEL F. OVERHOLSER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1055) granting an increase of pension to Joel F. Overholser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joel F. Overholser, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HANNEGAN C. NORVELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1059) granting an increase of pension to Hannegan C. Norvell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannegan C. Norvell, late of Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

NELSON WOLFLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1590) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Wolfley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nelson Wolfley, late of Company B, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE ATHEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1673) granting an increase of pension to George Athey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Athey, late of Company H, Thirty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW RISSER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2204) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Risser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew Risser, late of Company D, Ninety-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

RICHARD P. M'GRATH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2350) granting an increase of pension to Richard P. McGrath.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard P. McGrath, late of Company B, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "First," insert the word "Regiment." In the same line, before the word "Heavy," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN B. EVANS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2535) granting an increase of pension to John B. Evans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John B. Evans, late of Companies A, C, and D, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Companies A, C, and D" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Company D, Engineers of the West, Missouri Volunteers, and Companies C and A."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELLISON GILBERT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2648) granting an increase of pension to Ellison Gilbert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellison Gilbert, late of Company G, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL H. HURST.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2855) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Hurst.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel H. Hurst, late colonel Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the word "lieutenant."
In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN FINDLAY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2863) granting an increase of pension to John Findlay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Findlay, late of Company E, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANK RUSHALOO.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2873) granting an increase of pension to Frank Rushaloo.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank Rushaloo, late of Twenty-first Independent Battery, New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM HALL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3491) granting an increase of pension to William Hall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Hall, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEVI NICHOLSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3493) granting an increase of pension to Levi Nicholson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi Nicholson, late of Company E, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JACOB B. BOYER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3614) granting an increase of pension to James B. Boyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James B. Boyer, late of Company F, Eighty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "James" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Jacob."
In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Boyer."

ANDREAS SCHMIDT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3802) granting an increase of pension to Andreas Schmidt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andreas Schmidt, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "and Company K, Second Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PHILIP EBRIGHT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3845) granting an increase of pension to Philip Ebright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Philip Ebright, late of Company C, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. C. DAVIS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4102) granting an increase of pension to William H. C. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. C. Davis, late of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the letter "A" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "K."

In line 9 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JUDSON P. ADAMS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4125) granting an increase of pension to Judson P. Adams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Judson P. Adams, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN MAGUIRE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4295) granting a pension to John Maguire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Maguire, late of Company —, Forty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Company," insert the letter "D."

In line 8, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Maguire."

OSBORNE EDDY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4351) granting a pension to Osborne Eddy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Osborne Eddy, late of Company A, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "A" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES H. THOMPSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4490) granting an increase of pension to James H. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Thompson, late of Company K, Seventy-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALEXANDER DEPUY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4497) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Depuy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander Depuy, late of Company C, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. HANSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4522) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hanson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Hanson, late landsman, U. S. S. Connecticut, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "landsman" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "United States Navy."

In same line strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM M. STEVENSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5347) granting an increase of pension to William M. Stevenson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Stevenson, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Volunteer," insert the word "Reserve."

In line 8, after the word "Seventh," insert the word "Regiment."

In same line, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM DUNLAP.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5422) granting an increase of pension to William Dunlap.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Dunlap, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and of Company E, Ninety-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "Company F, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and of."

In line 9 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CALVIN E. BREED.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5450) granting an increase of pension to Calvin E. Breed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of

Calvin E. Breed, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "H, Sixteenth" and insert in lieu thereof the words "K, First."
In line 7 strike out the word "Illinois" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Wisconsin."
In line 9 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARY O'BRIEN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5764) granting a pension to Mary O'Brien.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary O'Brien, mother of John O'Brien, alias John O'Leary, late of Company A, First Regiment Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "mother," insert the word "dependent."
In line 7, before the word "Heavy," insert the word "Volunteer."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ADDI C. PINDELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Addi C. Pindell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Addi C. Pindell, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JEREMIAH BECK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6064) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Beck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeremiah Beck, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALEXANDER W. BROWNLIE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6487) granting an increase of pension to Alexander W. Brownlie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander W. Brownlie, late of Company K, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

IRVIN AUSTIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6492) granting an increase of pension to Irvin Austin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Irvin Austin, late of Company B, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EZRA PROUTY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6866) granting an increase of pension to Ezra Prouty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ezra Prouty, late of Company F, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HIRAM SPEAR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6900) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Spear.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram Spear, late of Company I, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SIMON WHITE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7060) granting an increase of pension to Simon W. White.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Simon W. White, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "W."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Simon White."

BENJAMIN L. SHEPARD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7307) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin L. Shepard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin L. Shepard, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES BROWN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7530) granting an increase of pension to Charles Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Brown, late of Company G, Nineteenth Regiment United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Army" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PHINEAS P. TROWBRIDGE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7781) granting an increase of pension to Phineas P. Trowbridge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phineas P. Trowbridge, late of Company E, Thirty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and Company I, Eighteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps."

In line 8, before the word "dollars," insert the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. PATTERSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7815) granting an increase of pension to William H. Patterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Patterson, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEANDER WAGERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8004) granting an increase of pension to Leander Wages.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leander Wages, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Wages" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Wagers."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Leander Wagers."

EDWARD E. HACKETT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8145) granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Hackett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward E. Hackett, late of Companies B and C, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Companies B and C" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Company C."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JACKSON WEATHERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8385) granting an increase of pension to Jackson Weathers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jackson Weathers, late of Company C, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ISAIAH FOWLER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8672) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah Fowler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaiah Fowler, late of Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $70 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALFRED JERVAIS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8747) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Jervais.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alfred Jervais, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANTHON W. MORTENSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8970) granting an increase of pension to Anthon W. Mortensen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anthon W. Mortensen, late of Company B, One hundred and third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mortensen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Mortenson."

In same line strike out the word "Company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Companies G and."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Anthon W. Mortenson."

JOHN HANCOCK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8999) granting an increase of pension to John Hancock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maj. and Bvt. Col. John Hancock, late assistant adjutant-general, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Major and Brevet Colonel;" and in same line, after the word "late," insert the words "major and."

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE HARKLESS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9311) granting an increase of pension to George Harkless.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Harkless, late of Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. KEYS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9560) granting an increase of pension to John H. Keys.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Keys, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EMIL CHRISTIAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9612) granting an increase of pension to Emil Christian.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emil Christian, late of Company I, Forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM W. MAYNE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9647) granting an increase of pension to W. W. Mayne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. W. Mayne, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the words "W. Mayne," strike out the letter "W." and insert in lieu thereof the word "William."

In the same line, after the word "late," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "captain."

In same line strike out the letter "C" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "G."

In same line strike out the word "First" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Fourth"

In line 8 strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William W. Mayne."

SAMUEL P. HALLAM.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9789) granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Hallam.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel P. Hallam, late of Company E, Ringold's Battalion Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Ringold's" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Ringgold's."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JENKIN EVANS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10041) granting an increase of pension to Jenkin Evans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jenkin Evans, late of Company H, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HARRISON G. MACE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10100) granting an increase of pension to Harrison G. Mace.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harrison G. Mace, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

AUGUST GEHB.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10716) granting an increase of pension to August Gehb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of August Gehb, late of Company B, Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES GARDNER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10800) granting an increase of pension to Charles Gardner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Gardner, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM C. TANNER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10869) granting an increase of pension to William C. Tanner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. Tanner, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE W. FLORYE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11010) granting an increase of pension to George W. Florey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Florey, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Florey" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Florye."

In the same line strike out the word "Company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Companies B and."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George W. Florye."

NOAH JONES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11413) granting an increase of pension to Noah Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Noah Jones, late of Company D, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SOPHIA WINTERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11966) granting an increase of pension to Sophie Winters.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sophie Winters, widow of William Winters, late of Company B, Forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Sophie" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Sophia."

In line 7, after the letter "B," insert the words "and chaplain."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sophia Winters."

DANIEL A. STEDMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12027) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Stedman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel A. Stedman, late of Company E, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PATRICK DOLAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12028) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Dolan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Dolan, late of Company B, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY C. CROWELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12034) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Crowell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry C. Crowell, late of Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEMUEL L. KELSO.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12739) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel L. Kelso.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Lemuel L. Kelso, late of Company F, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HORACE A. REXFORD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12616) granting an increase of pension to Horace A. Rexford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Horace A. Rexford, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MICHAEL H. GLASS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12810) granting an increase of pension to Michael H. Glass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael H. Glass, late of Company F, First Regiment Massachusetts Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Massachusetts," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES H. PEARCE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12947) granting an increase of pension to James H. Pearce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Pearce, late captain Company F, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the words "second lieutenant and."
In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES M'CONNAHA.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12970) granting an increase of pension to James McConnaha.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McConnaha, late of Company B, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company," insert the words "Company B, Sixty-third Regiment, and."
In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

STEPHEN LYONS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13391) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Lyons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen Lyons, late of Company A, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. MURRAY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13783) granting an increase of pension to William H. Murray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Murray, late of Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CAROLINE MORSE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13930) granting a pension to Rocelia Morse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rocelia Morse, daughter of Mannis R. Morse, deceased, late of Company P, Fifteenth Regiment New York Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month on account of being an imbecile and wholly after the date of death of said Caroline Morse."

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"of Caroline Morse, widow of Manless R. Morse, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Rocelia Morse, helpless and dependent daughter of said Manless R. Morse, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Caroline Morse the name of said Rocelia Morse shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Caroline Morse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Caroline Morse."

ABBIE E. BARR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13945) granting a pension to Abbie E. Barr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abbie E. Barr, widow of David M. Barr, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DEWITT ELDRED.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14316) granting an increase of pension to De Witt Eldred.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of De Witt Eldred, late of Company E, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "De Witt" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Dewitt."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Dewitt Eldred."

NANCY J. WALKER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14474) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Stephen Walker.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Stephen Walker, widow of Stephen Walker, late of Company D, First Regular Louisiana Volunteer Cavalry Scouts, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Mrs. Stephen" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Nancy J."
In line 7 strike out the word "Regular" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Regiment."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. Walker."

MICHAEL J. HAWLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14532) granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Hawley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael J. Hawley, late of Company I, Forty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and reenlisted in Company C, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "reenlisted in" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant."
In line 9 strike out the words "Veteran Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."
In line 10 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARCUS T. CAMP.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14584) granting an increase of pension to Marcus T. Camp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marcus T. Camp, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BENJAMIN JOHNSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14671) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin Johnson, late of Company G, Twenty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

RUSH PATTERSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14724) granting a pension to Rush Patterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rush Patterson, late of Company E, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In same line, after the word "month," insert "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Rush Patterson."

JOHN B. WHEELER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14844) granting an increase of pension to John B. Wheeler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John B. Wheeler, late of Company A, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH FARLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14988) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Farley.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Farley, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $75 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCIS S. FLETCHER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15158) granting an increase of pension to Francis S. Fletcher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis S. Fletcher, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARY HERNDON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15356) granting an increase of pension to Mary Hernden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Hernden, helpless child of George C. Hernden, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Hernden" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Herndon."

In same line strike out the word "child" and insert in lieu thereof "and dependent daughter."

In same line strike out the word "Hernden" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Herndon."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mary Herndon."

GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15538) granting an increase of pension to George W. Fairchild.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Fairchild, late of Company E, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. BETTS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15722) granting an increase of pension to J. W. Betts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. W. Betts, late of Company B, Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "J." and insert in lieu thereof the word "John." In same line strike out the letter "B" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "I."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John W. Betts."

FRANK UPCHURCH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16349) granting an increase of pension to Frank Upchurch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank Upchurch, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MICHAEL CONNIFF.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16610) granting an increase of pension to Michael Conniff.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Conniff, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PHEBE A. BARTEAUX.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1215) granting an increase of pension to Phœbe A. Barteaux.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phœbe A. Barteaux, widow of David W. Barteaux, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 change the spelling of the word "Phœbe" to "Phebe."

In line 9 insert the word "twenty" before the word "dollars," so that it will read "twenty dollars per month," etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Phebe A. Barteaux."

WILLIAM M. JORDAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1508) granting an increase of pension to William M. Jordan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Jordan, late of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES C. BOOTH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2955) granting an increase of pension to James C. Booth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James C. Booth, late of United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "United," insert the words "U. S. S. Bat."

In line 7 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HAZZARD P. GAVITT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2961) granting an increase of pension to Hazzard P. Gavitt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hazzard P. Gavitt, late of Company B, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE P. MATTISON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2999) granting a pension to George P. Matteson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George P. Matteson, late of Company G, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Matteson" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Mattison."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four;" in same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George P. Mattison."

OSIAH ATTISON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3164) granting an increase of pension to Osiah Attison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Osiah Attison, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve;" in the same line strike out the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Osiah Attison."

WILLIAM M'CUE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3229) granting an increase of pension to William McCue.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William McCue, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "U. S. S. Vermont and Seneca."

In line 7 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN FOSTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3232) granting an increase of pension to John Foster, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Foster, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Foster."

CHARLES D. COPELAND.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3243) granting an increase of pension to Charles D. Copeland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles D. Copeland, late of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "captain."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EBENEZER L. BRIGGS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3244) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer L. Briggs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ebenezer L. Briggs, late of Troop C, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Troop" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Company."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN N. DICKERSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3641) granting an increase of pension to John N. Dickerson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John N. Dickerson, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DAVID M. MYERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4103) granting an increase of pension to David M. Myers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David M. Myers, late of Company C, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ISAAC W. CORGILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4128) granting an increase of pension to Isaac W. Corgill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac W. Corgill, late of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Company E, Second Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. ARMSTRONG.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4149) granting an increase of pension to John W. Armstrong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Armstrong, late of Fourth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "commissary sergeant."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BERNHARD HERBER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4170) granting an increase of pension to Bernhardt Herber.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bernhardt Herber, late of Company I, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Bernhardt" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Bernhard."

In same line strike out the word "Company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Companies C and."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Bernhard Herber."

HOWARD F. HESS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4290) granting an increase of pension to Howard F. Hess.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Howard F. Hess, late of Company F, Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. WELLS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4416) granting an increase of pension to John H. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Wells, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CORNELIA H. KEYES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4651) granting an increase of pension to Cornelia H. Keyes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia H. Keyes, widow of B. W. Keyes, late of Company ——, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "B." and insert in lieu thereof the word "Beverly."

In same line and in line 7 strike out the words "of Company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "hospital steward."

In line 9 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DAVID L. ARWINE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4678) granting an increase of pension to D. L. Arwine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of D. L. Arwine, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "D." and insert in lieu thereof the word "David."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to David L. Arwine."

EDWIN P. GURNEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4758) granting an increase of pension to Edwin P. Gurney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edwin P. Gurney, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN BOWEN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5382) granting an increase of pension to John Bowen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Bowen, late of Company D, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DANIEL HARTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 5803) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Harter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel Harter, late of Company A, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES R. FOX.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6035) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Fox.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles R. Fox, late of Company C, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM F. MOYER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6070) granting an increase of pension to W. F. Moyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. F. Moyer, late of Company D, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "W." and insert in lieu thereof the word "William."

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William F. Moyer."

JOHN N. KUNDERT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6505) granting an increase of pension to John N. Kundert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John N. Kundert, late of Company E, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PATRICK GRADY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6538) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Grady.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Grady, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELIZABETH J. M'COY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6647) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth T. McCoy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth T. McCoy, widow of William McCoy, late private Company D, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "T" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "J."
In the same line and in line 7 strike out the word "private" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."
In line 7 strike out the letter "D" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "I."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. McCoy."

ISAAC STEELY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6688) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Steeley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac Steeley, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Steeley" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Steely."
In line 8 strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Isaac Steely."

ANDREW CLARK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6819) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew Clark, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Cavalry," insert the words "and Company D, Second Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry."
In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CARRIE A. CHAPLIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6876) granting a pension to Carrie A. Chaplin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carrie A. Chaplin, invalid and dependent daughter of the late Nathaniel W. Chaplin, late of Company A, Twenty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "invalid" and insert in lieu thereof the word "helpless."
In same line strike out the word "the."
In line 7 strike out the word "late."
In line 9, before the word "dollars," insert the word "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EUGENE LATTIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7450) granting an increase of pension to Eugene Lattin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eugene Lattin, late of Company B, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ARCHIBALD HUSTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8061) granting an increase of pension to Archibald Huston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Archibald Huston, late of Company A, and chaplain One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ROBERT SIMPSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8222) granting an increase of pension to Robert Simpson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Simpson, late of Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read as, follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN GAFFNEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8427) granting an increase of pension to John Gaffney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Gaffney, late of Company C, Forty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "C" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "G."
In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH T. WALKER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8548) granting an increase of pension to Joseph T. Walker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph T. Walker, late of Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCIS H. BRITTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9331) granting an increase of pension to Francis H. Britton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis H. Britton, late of Company C, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

NANCY WOODRUFF.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9390) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Woodruff.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Woodruff, widow of Daniel Woodruff, late of Company H, Third Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Elizabeth Woodruff, helpless and dependent child of said Daniel D. Woodruff, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Nancy Woodruff the name of said Elizabeth Woodruff shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Nancy Woodruff.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALBERT C. LEE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9695) granting an increase of pension to Albert C. Lee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Albert C. Lee, late of Company ——, Eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Company," insert the letter "H."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM HINES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9824) granting an increase of pension to William Hines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Hines, late of Company G, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES BURKE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9983) granting an increase of pension to James Burke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Burke, late of Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCES A. PAYNE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10855) granting a pension to Frances A. Payne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frances A. Payne, widow of Philander J. Payne, late surgeon Tenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Frances A. Payne."

RUSSELL ARNOLD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10954) granting an increase of pension to Russell Arnold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Russell Arnold, late of Company I, Thirty-sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES WELLS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11102) granting an increase of pension to Charles Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Wells, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LOUIS P. SOTHORON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11250) granting a pension to Louis P. Sothoron.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louis P. Sothoron, the helpless child of John T. H. Sothoron, late of Company I, Ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "the."

In the same line strike out the word "child" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and dependent son."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN SONIA.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11522) granting an increase of pension to John Sonia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Sonia, late of Companies E and A, First and Fifth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Companies E and A" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Company E."

In same line strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Regiment, and Company A."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CELINA C. FLEMING.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11679) granting an increase of pension to Celina C. Fleming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Celina C. Fleming, widow of Hiram Fleming, late of Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALBERT MUNGER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11891) granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Munger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Albert W. Munger, late a member of the Third Iowa Battery Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "W."
In same line strike out the words "a member."
In same line strike out the word "the."
In same line strike out the word "Iowa."
In line 7, before the word "Light," insert the words "Iowa Volunteer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Albert Munger."

WILLIAM H. H. KELLOGG.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12081) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Kellogg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Kellogg, late of Company G, Twenty-seventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Iowa," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTIN V. MONROE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12234) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. Monroe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin V. Monroe, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM B. SWISHER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12252) granting an increase of pension to William B. Swisher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William B. Swisher, late hospital steward, Eighth Ohio Cavalry, and assistant surgeon, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Eighth," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW H. CLUTTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12395) granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Clutter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew H. Clutter, late of Company F, Tenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GRIFFITH T. MURPHY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12491) granting an increase of pension to Griffith T. Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Griffith T. Murphy, Company B, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company," insert the words "late of."
In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HARVEY FOWLER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12534) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Fowler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harvey Fowler, late of Company I, Second Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY H. SEARL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12719) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Searl.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry H. Searl, late of Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. STUMP.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12735) granting an increase of pension to William H. Stump.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Stump, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCIS M. WOODRUFF.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12766) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Woodruff.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis M. Woodruff, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CARLTON CROSS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12809) granting an increase of pension to Carlton Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carlton Cross, late of Companies K and A, Ninety-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BENJAMIN B. HARDMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12849) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin R. Hardman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin R. Hardman, late of Twenty-third Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "R." and insert in lieu thereof the letter "B."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin B. Hardman."

HYLAS S. MOORE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12950) granting an increase of pension to Hylas S. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hylas S. Moore, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS COUGHLIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12992) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Coughlan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Coughlan, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment, and Company F, Forty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Coughlan" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Coughlin."

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas Coughlin."

DAVID MILLER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13175) granting an increase of pension to David Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Miller, late of Company E, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN LOUGHMILLER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13190) granting an increase of pension to John Loughmiller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Loughmiller, late of Company D, Fourth Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Fourth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES S. DERLAND.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13226) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Derland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles S. Derland, late captain Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANTON GEISER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13713) granting an increase of pension to Anton Geiser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anton Geiser, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA FOSTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13889) granting an increase of pension to Martha Foster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Foster, widow of William Foster, late of Company A, One hundred and eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company," insert the words "Companies P and H, Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and."

In line 9 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHARLES R. BOCKINS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13916) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Bockins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles R. Bockins, late of Company C, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE WALTON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14199) granting an increase of pension to George Walton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Walton, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE W. CHILD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14226) granting an increase of pension to George W. Child.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Child, late captain Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the words "first lieutenant and."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

REUBEN R. PITMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14232) granting an increase of pension to Reuben R. Pitman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Reuben R. Pitman, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANK SCHADER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14363) granting an increase of pension to Frank Schader.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank Schader, late of Company G, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANCIS L. SMITH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14606) granting an increase of pension to Francis L. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis L. Smith, late of Company F, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PETER C. PARKER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14798) granting an increase of pension to Peter C. Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter C. Parker, late of U. S. S. Tecumseh, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN L. BENNETT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14958) granting an increase of pension to John L. Bennett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John L. Bennett, late of Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ABRAHAM H. TOMPKINS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14969) granting an increase of pension to Abraham H. Tompkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abraham H. Tompkins, late of Company K, One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALBERT FALCON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15037) granting an increase of pension to Albert Falcon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Albert Falcon, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALEXANDER MATTISON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15063) granting an increase of pension to Alex Mattison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alex Mattison, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Alex" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alexander."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Alexander Mattison."

JAMES M. REED.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15071) granting an increase of pension to James M. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Reed, late of Company F, Twenty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EZRA TAYLOR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15280) granting an increase of pension to Ezra Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ezra Taylor, late of Company G, One hundred and first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM R. MOORE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15429) granting an increase of pension to W. R. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. R. Moore, late of Company A, Forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the letter "W." and insert in lieu thereof the word "William."

In same line strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant."

In line 7, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In same line strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William R. Moore."

FANNIE T. SHIPLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15475) granting an increase of pension to Fannie T. Shipley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie T. Shipley, widow of Alexander N. Shipley, late captain and acting quartermaster, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "acting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "assistant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA A. ELLIOTT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15688) granting a pension to Martha A. Elliott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Elliott, helpless and dependent child of Peter W. Elliott, late of Company B, Ninety-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM M'GOVERN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15927) granting an increase of pension to William McGovern.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William McGovern, late of Company C, First Regiment New York Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTIN L. BRUCE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16016) granting an increase of pension to Martin L. Bruce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin L. Bruce, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM F. PARIS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16194) granting a pension to William F. Paris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William F. Paris, late of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William F. Paris."

AMANDA BONNELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16237) granting an increase of pension to Amanda Bonnell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda Bonnell, widow of Joseph W. Bonnell, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DANIEL C. FOSTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16308) granting an increase of pension to Daniel C. Foster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel C. Foster, late of Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALVAH MOULTON.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 57) granting a pension to Alvah Moulton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alvah Moulton, invalid and dependent child of Elias Moulton, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EMILY AYRES.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 638) granting a pension to Emily Ayres.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Ayres, dependent and helpless daughter of Whiting L. Ayres, late of Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTHA A. KENNY.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 920) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Kenny.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Kenny, widow of Nicholas D. Kenny, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ellen Louise Kenny, helpless and dependent child of said Nicholas D. Kenny, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death or remarriage of Martha A. Kenny, the name of said Ellen Louise Kenny shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of the death or remarriage of said Martha A. Kenny.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARY A. SANDS.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1171) granting a pension to Mary A. Sands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Sands, helpless and dependent child of Edward D. Sands, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARGARET K. HERN.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 2420) granting an increase of pension to Margaret K. Hern.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret K. Hern, widow of David W. Hern, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. MARSHALL. I move to amend by striking out "sixteen" and inserting "twenty-four" in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out "sixteen" and insert "twenty-four."

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to my colleague from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY], a member of the committee, to make a short statement.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Invalid Pensions has no jurisdiction to consider applications for pensions other than those growing out of the civil war. The beneficiary in this bill was the wife of a soldier during the war and suffered all the hardships of a soldier's widow. Her pension was increased by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to $16 a month in consideration of that fact. It seems that after the war this lady went with her husband to the Northwest, and the record shows that she rendered important service during the Sioux war in that country. Her name is inscribed on a monument erected by the State of Minnesota as one of the seven women who aided materially in the defense of Fort Ridgely at that time. The fact is that this woman herself has earned a right to consideration on the part of this great Republic of ours in addition to the fact that she was the wife of a soldier. While the Committee on Invalid Pensions could not see its way clear to increase her pension beyond $16 as the widow of a soldier, this House certainly has jurisdiction over all these cases, and I therefore hope that in consideration of the heroic services rendered by this woman the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota will be agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If the gentleman from Indiana is satisfied about this case, I am.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EDWARD A. RUSSELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1037) granting an increase of pension to Edward A. Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward A. Russell, late captain of Company A, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company," strike out the word "of."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

NICHOLAS S. CHRISMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1063) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas S. Chrisman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nicholas S. Chrisman, late of Company C, First Regiment Indiana Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARSHALL W. ROGERS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 1484) granting an increase of pension to Marshall W. Rogers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marshall W. Rogers, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL DONALDSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2355) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Donaldson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Donaldson, late of Company D, Thirty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SIMON LEVI.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2711) granting a pension to Simon Levy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Simon Levy, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Levy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Levi."

In line 7, after the word "Cavalry," insert the words "and Company H, Third Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Simon Levi."

THEODORE F. KENDALL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3329) granting a pension to Theodore F. Kendall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theodore F. Kendall, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, Fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "Fifth," insert the word "Regiment."

In same line, after the word "New York," insert the word "Veteran."

In line 9 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Kendall."

ALEXANDER M'NABB.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 3611) granting an increase of pension to Alexander McNabb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander McNabb, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY R. FANCHER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4674) granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Fancher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry R. Fancher, late of Company D, First Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "and Company K, Eighteenth Regiment Volunteer Reserve Corps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EDWIN MAY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6038) granting a pension to Edwin May.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edwin May, late of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Heavy Artillery."

In line 8 strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Edwin May."

KATHARINE SEIBERLICH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6057) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Seiberlich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Katharine Seiberlich, widow of Charles Seiberlich, late of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE M. COYKENDALL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6065) granting an increase of pension to George M. Coykendall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George M. Coykendall, late of Company G, Fifty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES A. COBB.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6641) granting an increase of pension to James A. Cobb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James A. Cobb, late of Company F, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "of Company F, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES S. WALSH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6875) granting an increase of pension to James S. Walsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James S. Walsh, late of Company B, Forty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "of Company B, Forty-eighth Regiment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second and first lieutenant, Seventeenth unattached company."

In line 8, before the word "dollars," insert the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JACOB B. NELSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7012) granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Nelson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob B. Nelson, late of Company I, Thirty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MAGDALENA HANSMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7300) granting a pension to Magdalena Hansman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Magdalena Hansman, widow of Frank Hansman, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Regiment," insert the words "United States Reserve Corps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM BROGAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 7946) granting an increase of pension to William Brogan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Brogan, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILSON GRAHAM.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8142) granting an increase of pension to Wilson Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Wilson Graham, late of Company A, First Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE W. UHLES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8332) granting an increase of pension to George Uhles.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Uhles, late of Company I, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "George," insert the letter "W."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George W. Uhles."

JOHN SHIELDS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8610) granting an increase of pension to John Shields.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Shields, late of Company K, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARQUIS D. MASON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 8978) granting an increase of pension to Marques D. Mason.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marques D. Mason, late of Company B, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Marques" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Marquis."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Marquis D. Mason."

HERBERT C. MATTOON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9748) granting an increase of pension to Herbert C. Mattoon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Herbert C. Mattoon, late of Company F, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MYRON A. HAWKS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10163) granting an increase of pension to Myron A. Hawks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Myron A. Hawks, late captain of Company K, Twentieth Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, and Company K, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "captain," strike out the word "of."

In same line strike out the word "Twentieth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Thirtieth."

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In same line, after the word "and," insert the word "captain."

In same line strike out the letter "K" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "D."

In line 9 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY HILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10436) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Hill, late of Company F, Third United States Infantry, and Company D, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "Company F, Third United States Infantry, and."

In line 9 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW J. LYONS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10698) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Lyons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Lyons, late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment, and Company K, Ninety-eighth Regiment, New York State Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. WHITE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10723) granting an increase of pension to William H. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. White, late of Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM C. MILLIKEN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10763) granting an increase of pension to William C. Milliken.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. Milliken, late of Company B, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CASWELL LOVITT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10824) granting an increase of pension to Caswell Lovitt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caswell Lovitt, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELISHA COLE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11043) granting a pension to Elisha Cole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elisha Cole, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elisha Cole."

JOHN W. M'CORMICK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11282) granting an increase of pension to John W. McCormick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. McCormick, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FREDERICK SPACKMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11471) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Spackman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Spackman, late of Company C, Eighty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALEXANDER HYDE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 11868) granting a pension to Alexander Hyde.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander Hyde, late of Company F, Seventy-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Seventy-fifth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Alexander Hyde."

HANNAH M. CROWLEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Hannah M. Crowley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah M. Crowley, widow of John Crowley, late of Company G, Second Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JEROME LONG.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12990) granting an increase of pension to Jerome Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jerome Long, late of Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MARTIN V. B. DAVIS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13245) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. B. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin V. B. Davis, late of Company D, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

REGINA ALBERT.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13336) granting a pension to Regina Albert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Regina Albert, widow of James Albert, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. SEAGRIST.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13372) granting an increase of pension to John H. Seagrist.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Seagrist, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Reserves" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS W. TREADWELL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13683) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Treadwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas W. Treadwell, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FERNANDO D. STONE.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13920) granting an increase of pension to Fernando D. Stone.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fernando D. Stone, late captain Company F, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS PORTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14310) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Porter, late of Company H. Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM B. HAINES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14747) granting a pension to William B. Haines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William B. Haines, late of Company K, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William B. Haines."

ROSWELL L. NASON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14818) granting an increase of pension to Roswell L. Nason.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Roswell L. Nason, late of Company H, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSIAH DIXON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14978) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Dixon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josiah Dixon, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "G, Sixth" and insert in lieu thereof the words "E, Fortieth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JEROME KING.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14989) granting an increase of pension to Jerome King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jerome King, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

TITUS W. ALLEN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15167) granting an increase of pension to Titus W. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Titus W. Allen, late of Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 9 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MILO BREWSTER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15193) granting an increase of pension to Milo Brewster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milo Brewster, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ALONZO C. ABBEY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15579) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo C. Abbey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alonzo C. Abbey, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HUGH IRWIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15616) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Irwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hugh Irwin, late of Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. TURNER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15686) granting an increase of pension to William H. Turner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Turner, late of Company A, First Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THOMAS LARKIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15821) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Larkin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Larkin, late boatswain's mate, U. S. S. Wyandotte, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "boatswain's mate, United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of U. S. S. North Carolina and."

In line 7 strike out the word "ship."

In same line, before the word "and," insert the words "United States Navy."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GRACE S. WOOD.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16019) granting a pension to Grace S. Wood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Grace S. Wood, daughter of Thomas Wood, late of Company A, Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "daughter," insert the words "helpless and dependent."

In same line strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant."

In line 7 strike out the words "A, Second" and insert in lieu thereof the words "K, Fifty-first."

In same line strike out the words "United States Artillery" and insert in lieu thereof the words "New York Volunteer Infantry."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MOSES T. KELLY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16020) granting an increase of pension to Moses T. Kelly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses T. Kelly, late of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

HENRY F. TOMLIN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16335) granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Tomlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry F. Tomlin, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ISAAC N. FORMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16394) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Forman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac N. Forman, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JAMES S. ANDERSON.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 16533) granting an increase of pension to James S. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James S. Anderson, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 130. Joint resolution providing for salaries of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 13102) to authorize the county of Elmore, Ala., to construct a bridge across Coosa River, Alabama.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4920. An act to provide a temporary home in the District of Columbia for Union volunteer soldiers, sailors, and marines;

S. 4050. An act to authorize the sale of certain parts of Fort Marion Reservation, in the city of St. Augustine, Fla.; and

S. 1048. An act authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase a bust of President Zachary Taylor.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4920. An act to provide a temporary home in the District of Columbia for Union Volunteer soldiers, sailors, and marines—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4050. An act to authorize the sale of certain parts of Fort Marion Reservation in the city of St. Augustine, Fla.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1048. An act authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase a bust of President Zachary Taylor—to the Committee on the Library.

MICAIAH R. EVANS.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call up the bill H. R. 13735, a bill to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans, if it is proper to do so.

The SPEAKER. The order for to-day reads as follows:

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day [Friday, February 14] may be in order on the next legislative day after the passage of the legislative appropriation bill, not to interfere with District of Columbia business.

That order makes this as Friday, on which desertion bills and pension bills are in order. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the request submitted by the Speaker this morning to consider bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole was to consider only pension bills. The gentleman from Indiana can make a request to go into Committee of the Whole or he can make the same request to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is a House bill, a bill to correct the military record.

Mr. MANN. It is in order to go into Committee of the Whole on the bill. Let us hear the bill read first.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion on the records of the War Department against Micaiah R. Evans, of Huntingdon, Huntingdon County, Pa., late a member of Company A, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the bill being in order to be called up to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a word or two in regard to this bill. It is a well-known fact that the committee is very much averse to reporting bills of this character. This man enlisted three times. He has three honorable discharges. While he was in the Army and serving his country he was drafted at home, and because he did not and could not respond to the draft he was marked as a deserter. It is purely a technical matter. The Department would probably remove the charge if they had the authority, but there is no law authorizing them to change the record in the case of a man who is marked as a deserter because he fails to respond to a draft. This will grant to the man no bounty or pension, but simply removes a cloud from his reputation which has been unfairly placed there because of his being drafted and his not responding while he was in the service.

Mr. MANN. This bill will entitle the man to a pension.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Oh, he is entitled to a pension now. He was not dishonorably discharged.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference if he has four honorable discharges and one dishonorable discharge.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. He has not been dishonorably discharged. He was marked as a deserter.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is equivalent to a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If this bill should pass, would it entitle his widow, if he left one, to a pension?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Oh, she would be entitled to a pension now.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There are many cases where a widow can not draw a pension on account of the military record of the soldier.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. In my judgment, this would not affect the right of the widow or the man to get a pension.

Mr. BUTLER. This man was in the service?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And could not respond to the draft?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. He was right there and could not respond to the draft. They marked him a deserter.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This is unanimously reported?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOLLIDAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE THIRTEENTH CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial census, and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall not extend longer than one hour on a side, one hour to be controlled by myself and the other to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the census bill, and, pending that motion, he asks unanimous consent that general debate shall extend not longer than two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that this is an important bill and an entire departure from previous bills in regard to taking the census, reported into the House yesterday and not obtainable until practically 12 o'clock to-day. Yet the gentleman wants to proceed to pass the bill this afternoon. It seems to me that is rather hasty on a bill of this nature. I do not think he ought to insist upon it. The House ought to have the opportunity to look at a bill before you commence to read it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no desire to try to crowd this bill through the House without proper consideration. We have had no requests for time to speak, and we expect there will be a liberal time for debate under the five-minute rule upon each proposition, as there usually is.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman proposes to close general debate now before a word has been said about the bill, before the bill has been explained, before anybody knows whether he wants to talk on the bill or not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no disposition to deny any Member of the House the right to express himself in reference to this bill. It is the hope of the Committee on the Census that what debate there is shall be confined to the bill, and it was my expectation to explain the bill in a general way, to explain its policy and the departures which have been provided from the twelfth census act, and answer such questions as may be asked me, and then, if there is no demand for general debate, I can see no reason why we should not go on and enter upon the reading of the bill for amendment. If the gentleman desires, we might let general debate run through this day and take up the bill under the five-minute rule to-morrow. Would that suit the gentleman better?

Mr. MANN. Personally, I regret the gentleman has called up the bill even for discussion under general debate before anybody has had an opportunity to look at it. Glancing at the first page of the bill, I can see several things, and I think other Members of the House can, that might appear objectionable. A bill coming in like this is not like an appropriation bill and——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will modify my request, Mr. Speaker, by asking that the balance of the day be devoted to general debate on the bill, and that when general debate is exhausted, if general debate is exhausted to-day, the bill shall not be taken up under the five-minute rule until to-morrow. Will that suit the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate shall proceed to-day and the bill shall not be read for amendment until to-morrow, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask whether this debate is to be entirely on the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To be on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, Mr. FULLER in the chair.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the Committee of the Whole House provides for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. It provides for a permanent system for the taking of the decennial censuses of the country, and covers a number of inquiries or subjects for statistical investigations that are to be inquired into during what the bill defines as the "decennial census period." The Constitution of the United States requires a census of population once in each ten years, and there has been some doubt expressed by lawyers and statesmen of the country respecting the constitutional power of Congress to enlarge the scope of the decennial censuses beyond a census of population. The first census taken in 1790 included provisions bearing upon the social and industrial conditions of the country, and it has been the practice from that time to this to include many subjects for statistical investigation outside of the census of population. I am of the opinion that there is sufficient constitutional authority for all of these classes of investigations. The Federal Government is empowered, I have no doubt, to make such investigations of its resources, industrial, military, and economic, that may be necessary in order that the Congress of the United States and the Executive Departments of the Government may execute their functions wisely and intelligently. It is a matter of general importance in addition to a census of population, to know accurately the industrial and commercial resources of the country that may affect the questions of excise taxation, the Federal control of commerce, and the exercise of a great many powers that are conferred upon Congress by the Federal Constitution.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal Government has ample constitutional authority to make all of the investigations provided in the bill now before the committee for consideration. The census constitutes the real history of the country. It discloses the actual conditions of everyday life among all classes of citizens, and it is highly useful and valuable for purposes of comparison and scientific investigations along almost all lines of research. The time has passed when it is necessary to devote any considerable space to a discussion of the value of statistical information. The countries that lead in civilization are those that attach the greatest importance to scientific knowledge as applied to all the practical affairs of the people. It is one of the high duties of the Federal Government to secure for the use of its citizens such information of this character as is practical and consistent with the powers that it enjoys under the Constitution of the United States. The creation of a permanent Census Office was a matter of great importance in securing trustworthy statistical information. It marked an epoch of progress along that line. The permanent office is likewise of great importance in the adoption of advanced methods for the compilation, arrangement, and tabulation of statistics, so their real significance may be known to students of political, economic, and social sciences. The methods of administration have been greatly improved since the Census Office became permanent. During the short year that it has been in existence it has carried with it the traditions of the Office.

It is under the management of men who are continuously administering its functions, who know what mistakes have been made and have been ready to correct them, so that improved methods have not only added greatly to the accuracy and value of statistical information, but they have promoted public economy as well. The bill under consideration is drawn to conform to the permanent census act, and, as I said a month ago, it is designed to furnish a permanent system for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. It provides in section 2 what is termed a "decennial census period," beginning on the 1st day of July before the taking of the census and continuing for a period of three years.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit an interruption there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman explain to the committee the reasons for and the advantage of making this a permanent census law, that is, a law for the taking of the census for all time to come? And also explain why it is proposed to change the political status of Porto Rico, Guam, and Samoa by designating them in this act as Territories?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the object of providing for a permanent decennial census law is just the same as it is in making other laws permanent where they can be made permanent. It is a matter of general importance to know what the law is and what it will continue to be. The act creating the permanent Census Office has its annual, biennial, quadrennial, quintennial, and decennial investigations to make, and the Office is required, of course, decennially to take the general census, and in shaping its other work it is a matter of much importance that it may know exactly the conditions upon which it is to take the decennial censuses—the scope of the census—so that special investigations that are made during the interim between decennial censuses shall not overlap and duplicate the work that shall be done each tenth year. And, furthermore, it follows the Twelfth Census act in that respect.

If this bill should not be enacted at all, the Census Office may proceed to take the Thirteenth Census under the Twelfth census law, because that is a law to "take the Twelfth and subsequent decennial censuses" just the same as this bill in that respect. But, in view of the creation of the permanent Census Office and certain other changes in the law, it was thought advisable to enact a law of the character outlined in this bill, thus creating a harmonious system of making statistical investigations for the Government, covering the whole subject and having it run along permanently.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will not the effect of this be to very materially increase the functions and the duties of the permanent census after the next census has been taken, so that the continuance of our permanent Census Bureau here will be under the provisions of this act in so far as this act relates to a permanent census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why, no. This act does not purport to change the permanent census law excepting——

Mr. TAWNEY. Does it not add to it, though?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not add to the permanent law excepting in a few particulars. I started a few moments ago to explain the operation of the two systems or of the two laws—that beginning with the decennial census period the permanent office is automatically resolved into what we may term the temporary Census Office for the purpose of taking the decennial census. That period can not last longer than three years, and when it expires, by operation of the provisions of the law the office will again be re-resolved into the permanent office for the administration of those duties that the law requires of that office. This bill does not confer any additional power upon the permanent Census Office. It does not add anything to its list of investigations except one. It simply prescribes what inquiries shall be made in the decennial censuses and leaves to the law, as it is now and as it may be amended in the future, to define and prescribe the duties and the scope of power of the permanent Census Office. I do not see how it can possibly add in any respect to the authority or the power of the permanent office. The decennial census of population and these important subjects, of course, can not be taken ordinarily by the permanent Census Office, organized, as it is, under the law of its creation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it supposed that after three years, after this decennial period has expired, that this law will go into abeyance until the next decennial period comes around and all the business be transacted under permanent law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the plan, the system, that this bill undertakes to establish. The law will not be held in abeyance, but it will not be in operation between the censuses.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will it have any application?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It will not have any active operation. This bill provides for the taking of decennial censuses, and it provides that these censuses must be taken during the decennial period. The interim between the decennial periods, of course, will be occupied by the permanent Census Office to conduct its own inquiries, to make its own investigations, doing what Congress and the Chief Executive of the Government require it to do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then, it will have no force until it is extended by the permanent law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is just like any law that requires certain things to be done periodically, and in the interim between the periods there is nothing to be done. The law becomes inactive, and it become active again when the period arrives.

Mr. HAY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this law provides for a Government census of agriculture.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will come to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not contained in the permanent census law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is not contained in the permanent census law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that Congress enacted a law creating a permanent Census Bureau? That law defined specific duties that the Bureau is to perform annually. There is a certain amount of work the Census Bureau is required to perform between the periods, and it is maintained permanently and appropriated for annually. Now, that is supposed to include all of the work incidental to the collection of statistical and other information regarding the industries and matters pertaining to the Government between the regular periods of the taking of the census—that is, the census of the population, and so forth?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. That being so, why is it necessary now to do anything more than to provide for the taking of the Thirteenth Census? When that census is complete there can be no excuse for the Census Bureau coming in here and claiming that there is a permanent law authorizing them to do this and that. And there is no necessity for any legislation except that which will enable the Census Bureau to perform the services which are performed every ten years—namely, taking the census of population and whatever Congress sees fit to require them to take.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is just as much necessity for permanence, harmony, and system in relation to gathering the statistics of the country as there is for any other subject. You may pass a law for one year and another for another year, but the more permanent you make it the better it is; and the possibility of carrying on government under that policy might exist, but it would be a legislative policy. It would be the height of absurdity. When you can make your laws permanent as well as not, it is the duty of the Government to make them so. Is there any reason in the world why the law upon the subject of the census should not be permanent?

The gentleman has a wrong idea of the business of the permanent Census Office. These inquiries made in the interdecennial interim are not to be taken in one year. The permanent census act requires those inquiries to be made by the office according to its convenience. They take up one or two subjects in one year and one or two subjects the next year, and so cover the entire period. The Twelfth Census provides for practically all these investigations. It contained a provision for four principal inquiries that might be denominated the "decennial census," that were to be gotten out by a certain date; but it authorized the office to continue other investigations as the force in the office would permit until the reports were all made and the results published, and they have been published as special reports. The act making the office permanent enjoined upon the office the collection of information, some annually, some biennially, some quinquennially, and some decennially. That is the system we have now. Here we have a bill authorizing and providing for four general subjects—population, agriculture, manufactures, mining and quarrying—four subjects mentioned in section 1 of this bill.

The Twelfth Census act embraced the subject of vital statistics, but the permanent Census Office is now required to collect vital statistics from registration areas of the country every year, and those areas include almost one-half of the entire population of the land. It is the experience of the Office that vital statistics collected by enumerators in nonregistration districts are not always accurate and reliable, and the Director of the Census advised the omission of that subject altogether and the substituting therefor of the subjects of mines and quarries, for the reason that the industries of mining and quarrying are so closely related in many respects to the manufacturing industries that the subjects could be carried along together with but little additional expense. Many manufacturers do their own mining and keep their books in such a way that it is necessary for the census enumerators and special agents to make a complete investigation of all the subjects in order to find out what may be classed as manufacturing and what as mining or quarrying; and in order to save money and to attain accuracy and the best results, we have included mining and quarrying with the subject of manufactures, so that they can all be taken together.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have received a communication on the subject of a census of forests and timber lands. Is that taken care of in the Bureau of Forestry so that there is to be a proper census taken?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, it is not; and that is a very important subject.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that included in this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, it is not; for the reason that this bill covers simply the four important subjects of population, agriculture, manufactures, and mines and quarries for the decennial period. If there shall be a census of standing timber, it should be taken by the permanent office as a special investigation. It ought not to be included in this bill, which provides only for decennial censuses.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another question? I understood him to say that this proposed bill in no way affected the permanent census law; but I observe, in going through it, that the permanent census law, in so far as it relates to the salaries of officials and many of the clerks and other employees, is changed by a great many increases. For instance, the salary of the Director of the Census is increased from $6,000 to $7,500.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has misunderstood.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the salary of the Deputy Director is increased, and I notice other increases along the line.

Mr. HAY. There is no deputy now.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has not yet got in his mind the theory of the bill. It establishes a permanent system for the taking of the census and the making of statistical investigations. The office through which it is to do that work is permanent for seven years out of every ten. For three years it is temporary. It is a decennial office, and it is described as temporary in that the additional employees hold their positions for a temporary period only; and these increases of salaries that we provide here are for the temporary, or decennial, period, when the work is multiplied perhaps by four, and the responsibility imposed upon the Director and other officers is greatly increased. As Governor Merriam, the Director of the last census, said before the committee, it requires a man of a great deal of physical vitality as well as ability and experience to take a decennial census in these days and under existing conditions and get through alive.

Mr. TAWNEY. If I understand the gentleman from Indiana, in charge of the bill, then it is proposed that this increase shall continue only during the period of taking the Thirteenth Census, which will be for about three years. I want to ask him if he thinks that upon the completion of the Thirteenth Census it will be possible for Congress to reduce these salaries again to what they are under the permanent census law? I want to ask the gentleman further if it is not a fact that the Director of the Census did not receive a salary of $6,000 during the taking of the Twelfth Census, when he had all this work to do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; the salary of the Director of the Twelfth Census was $7,500 a year; but when the office was made permanent, Congress had the virtue to reduce the salary to $6,000 as a permanent salary.

Now, in order to relieve the apprehension of the gentleman from Minnesota, I will tell him that this law is self-operating. It proposes automatically to reduce the salary of the Director at the end of the decennial period, and it proposes to discharge, automatically and without any act of Congress, the additional employees that are provided for the taking of the decennial census. So you see it does not need any legislation by Congress, and if it did, we have the recent precedent that Congress has reduced the salary of the Director of the Census from $7,500 to $6,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have here the statute in which the salary of the Director is stated at $6,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That statute which the gentleman has is the one establishing the permanent census.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is for the taking of the Twelfth Census, and is the one referred to in the gentleman's report—that of March 3, 1899.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The salary of the Director of the last census was $7,500 a year. I do not know what statute the gentleman has, but I know what the salary was.

Mr. HAY. I can state there was a subsequent law passed making the salary of the Director $7,500.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may have been passed after the organic act was passed, but I know the salary was $7,500.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct, and it was continued at $7,500 until the permanent office went into operation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; until the permanent office was substituted.

Mr. BURLESON. This bill provides for a salary of $7,500 for the three years, the period for taking the census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is all, and then the permanent law becomes operative with its staff and salaries. The law is automatic—it does not require any action on the part of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. When the permanent officers, as the gentleman calls them, go into office, they are not a new set of men; they are the same people who have been serving during the decennial period?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The only difference is their salary is reduced during the other seven years, and the extra force that has been employed is automatically discharged?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is all, and there are only a few officers whose salaries are reduced on the permanent force. The temporary force, the staff officers, as they may be called, of the Director, is enlarged during the temporary period, and when it expires they go out of office and only a few of the permanent officers receive higher salaries during the temporary period.

Now, the geographical area of the census is to include the United States and everything that belongs or appertains to it, as far as we can trace our title, except the Philippine Islands. It was proposed to include the Philippines, but a census of that archipelago was taken about three years ago, and the expense of that census was charged against the Philippine government, and we thought it was better to let that government determine when another census should be taken and how often it should be taken, and so we eliminated the proposition from the bill.

A committee was appointed by Secretary Metcalf in 1904 to inquire into the methods and suggest improvements in taking the decennial census, and the report of that committee is embodied in the report of the Committee on the Census accompanying this bill.

Mr. MANN. Is that report obtainable?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It was not until very recently.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is immaterial and irrelevant at this stage of the proceedings and is not germane.

Mr. MANN. It is germane if the gentleman calls up his bill before the report is ready.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is not a subject for debate now. At the suggestion of that committee, the chairman of whom was Carroll D. Wright, who was Superintendent of the Tenth Census, the Committee on the Census included Guam, Samoa, and the Panama Canal Zone. I do not know how many American citizens there may be in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. TAWNEY. The pay roll of the Panama Commission will inform the gentleman exactly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not state the civil conditions of those people; it does not show whether they are married or single, their race or color, whether they are natives or naturalized, and a whole lot of things that we regard as of importance in a census of population. So Samoa and Guam and the Panama Canal Zone were added to the geographical area of the census at the suggestion of this Commission, composed of four experienced and able men, who were appointed by Secretary Metcalf to inquire into this very subject. As to the characterization of Porto Rico as a Territory, if the political status of that island out in the Atlantic can be so fundamentally changed by the designation used in referring to it, it is a revelation to me.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think, in view of the fact that we have refused to recognize either Porto Rico or Guam as a Territory, it would be wise for us to do so here?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. When the time comes that such amendments are in order, I do not believe I will seriously oppose such an amendment. It is not the object of this bill to change the status of a single foot of soil under the flag. We simply want to take a count and find out how many we have here, and how many there, and the transposition of a very short word will remedy the difficulty.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he wants to find out how many we have now in the Panama Canal Zone. What does the gentleman call these people down there—citizens of the United States?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe some of them are citizens.

Mr. MANN. The census is not confined to citizens.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. MANN. People live there who are voters of Panama.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the status of them? Are we going to take a census of all the people in foreign countries?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; and the Panama Canal Zone is not a foreign country. It is only a strip of land a few miles wide across the Isthmus, and I do not believe I can give the gentleman any light upon its geographical boundaries.

Mr. MANN. And I doubt very much whether the census would give any light upon it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We can count the people down there. We may know how many people there are in the Zone that we have in some degree control over and for whom we are in some measure responsible. Whether that information is of any value may be determined later on.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman knows that the population there is not permanent. It is constantly shifting. It changes about every six months almost entirely, so far as Americans are concerned. The census would be of no value whatever.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is no more shifting than the sunshine.

Mr. TAWNEY. But we do not take a census of sunshine.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose they will count the rays. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We do not have the same sunshine today that we had yesterday, but we have as much. I am refuting the argument that the population is not of a permanent character and that there will continue to be a changing population there. There will be a population there while we are counting the population here. We want to know how many American citizens there are on American soil.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not confine his census to the number of people on the islands. The Isthmian Canal Commission has more complete information in reference to the property and all that than your census people will have after taking the census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a serious question, whether the Isthmian Canal Commission is equipped to investigate questions in relation to the population that bear on the social and political status of the people.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly they are equipped for it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. All data that affects the social life of the people, the number of married and single men and women, and the number of children and other essential things.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman can obtain that information by writing to the office here and he will get it by to-morrow morning.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be sufficient for the gentleman, but we will reach that question when the bill comes up for amendment under the five-minute rule and there is an amendment offered to strike out the Panama Canal Zone, or perhaps an amendment offered to incorporate some provision in the bill authorizing the President to use the Panama Canal Commission to take that census. It may be that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will accept such an amendment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What proportion of the Panama public or government is included within the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. You mean territorially or politically?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Territorially.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand it to be a strip of land 10 miles wide.

Mr. MANN. It is a strip of land 5 miles wide on each side of the center line of the canal, and also including what is not yet determined—all of the land that may be used, for instance, for overflow in the Territory of Panama.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is the Zone?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How much is there in the Panama Republic, the country named Panama?

Mr. MANN. That is a large territory, and extends from Nicaragua to South America.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Just the neck.

Mr. MANN. That part of the Isthmus north of what we call South America, north of the mountains.

Mr. GARRETT. The cities of Panama and Colon are excluded from this Canal Zone.

Mr. MANN. From the Zone.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill creates a number of offices of considerable importance. First, an Assistant Director of the Census, a chief statistician, and one appointment clerk for the permanent office—one clerk has been the disbursing and appointment clerk both during the interdecennial period, but the committee believed the work is of such importance that there ought to be an appointment clerk and a disbursing clerk also—private secretary to the Director, two expert stenographers, and eight expert chiefs of divisions.

Mr. MADDEN. What do you mean by an "expert stenographer?"

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I hardly know. I believe it is one who is really expert, not nominally.

Mr. STAFFORD. He must be an expert in order to justify the salary of $2,000. They should be good in order to justify this large compensation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He is a stenographer who is not only capable of taking correspondence, but also able to answer a large volume of the correspondence from his own information. He should have information enough about departmental duties for him to answer correspondence and not simply take dictation and write letters mechanically.

Mr. MADDEN. Ought not they to be called correspondents?

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not designate them private secretaries?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The designation is not material.

Mr. LANGLEY. These same two positions were provided for in the Twelfth Census act, and at the same salary.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman introduced his bill I noticed that he included the gathering of the census in Guam and Samoa.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; we did not.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, the gentleman knows all the possessions we have, and which perhaps we ought not to have——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That we got in a partition proceeding in the South Pacific Ocean.

Mr. BUTLER. That piece of land we got for nothing. The gentleman seems to have included the islands of Guam and the island of Samoa.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the Philippines and Canal Zone——

Mr. BUTLER. No; I did not notice the advisory committee—that is right, I take it—included the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is right; I will get it right in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have not studied geography for thirty-five years, and I do not believe I can pronounce the names of all our possessions correctly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. BUTLER. I am only hunting for information.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That the committee appointed by Secretary Metcalf three years ago to examine methods of taking the census—the chairman of that committee, Carroll D. Wright, recommended the inclusion of Guam and Samoa and other dependencies, and several members of the committee did not like the designation "and other dependencies" and did not think of a suitable designation, so we put in Guam, Samoa, and the Canal Zone.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask my friend whether they are sure they have included everything we do own?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; we did not. There is some uncertainty about it, and we did not include the Philippines——

Mr. PARSONS. You did not include the Wake and Midway islands.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And several guano islands. Now, Mr. Chairman, the bill authorizes the appointment in the Office at Washington of a considerable number of clerks and other employees at salaries not less than $600 nor more than $1,000 a year. These clerks and employees are to be appointed by the Director of the Census without anybody's approval upon a noncompetitive examination, the character of which shall be prescribed by the Director of the Census, and the examinations shall be conducted by the Civil Service Commission. The additional staff officers provided in the bill are to be appointed, with the exception of the Assistant Director, by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did you not put them in the classified service?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am just coming to that. And we provide for the appointment of a certain number of clerks of classes 2, 3, and 4, but the bill limits the number to 100, so there can not be more than 100 clerks in the Census Office of those classes at any one time.

There has been considerable criticism of the method provided in the bill for the employment, or appointment, if it be a better term—it is perhaps more dignified—of the large force in the Office in Washington. There will probably be 3,200 or 3,300 clerks or employees of that kind during the decennial census period. The Committee on the Census decided that it would be impracticable and unbusinesslike to have those clerks and employees selected under the civil-service law. The report of the committee is not intended to reflect in any manner upon the wisdom of the civil-service law. It is not an assault upon the merit system; it is not in any sense a return to the old and much-deprecated "spoils system" of appointment of officers into the public service. The civil-service law contains a provision establishing what is known as a "rule of geographical apportionment;" that is, that the clerks appointed under the provisions of that law shall be apportioned throughout the country according to population. The District of Columbia and the States in the immediate vicinity already have exceeded their quota of appointments; and if the civil-service law were applied to the selection of these employees, they would all come from remote parts of the country. Your committee did not believe that a sufficient number of efficient men and women could be induced to go into a competitive civil-service examination for a service that is temporary in its character and would not run beyond, perhaps, a period of two years on the average and the salaries of which could not exceed $1,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the test examination that was held last year in Washington to provide temporary employees for the enumeration of certain statistics in the postal service——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not.

Mr. STAFFORD. In which the number of applicants was far in excess of the places provided for——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not.

Mr. STAFFORD. And where temporary employment was for less than a year?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question, please?

Mr. STAFFORD. The positions were open to all comers under civil-service examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that the purpose served by the classified service is that it distributed the appointees throughout the country according to population.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is one of its provisions.

Mr. MADDEN. And that some of the States adjacent to the District of Columbia already have a sufficient number of employees in the Census Bureau to make it impossible for them to be given more in the event of the classified service system being adopted for the appointment of those required to take the coming census. Is that the only reason?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no. That is one reason. I referred to that fact to show the improbability, in the mind of the Committee on the Census, of securing a sufficient number of efficient clerks from remote parts of the country for a temporary service with a very low salary. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. MADDEN. It has been stated "that once in the classified service, always in it," and that there is no chance to get them out. Is there any truth in that statement?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Illinois knows as much about that as I do.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the clerks and employees were appointed from the eligible register under the civil-service law, they would have a classified status, and it is possible, at least, that some of these appointees within two weeks after they have been sworn into office, knowing their employment to be only temporary, would begin to busy themselves in pulling wires to get transfers, if they were permitted—and they are permitted in other bureaus of the Government—or to secure appointments into the permanent service, and they might devote a good deal of mental energy along that line that the Government ought to have in its business. That is one aspect of the question that is perhaps worthy of some consideration. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is as familiar with that phase of it, perhaps, as most Members in this body. He knows whether classified clerks importune Congressmen for promotions and transfers and reappointment.

Mr. MADDEN. What I wanted to ascertain more particularly was whether the various bureau chiefs were obliged to keep persons in the service who were appointed through the classified service, regardless of whether there was any work for them to do or not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know how they feel. They are not required to do it under the law.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the practice?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know much about the practice. That is a subject-matter I have a little delicacy about entering upon.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not desire to have the gentleman repeat himself, but I was called to the door by a trembling, anxious man, and I may not have heard all the gentleman said. Now there is nothing in this bill which will authorize the transfer of any of these employees to the classified service without examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; there is.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman please point out to us where that provision is, and to what extent it goes?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The provision is this, that during the temporary period of the taking of the decennial census the Director has complete control over the office force, and for supervisory purposes he must take quite a number of the employees in the classified service and put them in charge of the temporary clerks. He will have to fill their places with other employees; and the bill authorizes him during the temporary period to detail from the temporary force to the permanent force; but the bill further provides that at the expiration of the decennial period all clerks so transferred and all other officers shall be returned to their places, and that all officers and appointees appointed for temporary purposes shall quit the service at once, and they shall not be eligible to appointment or transfer to the classified service by virtue of their examination and appointment under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that that temporary appointment to the classified service really classifies the appointment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not.

Mr. BUTLER. It gives to the appointee temporary work in the classified service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is right; it provides in terms that he shall be transferred to the classified position.

Mr. BUTLER. It gives him the work of the classified position.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the salary.

Mr. BUTLER. But it does not give him the status.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does give him the salary, but not the status.

Mr. HINSHAW. I notice that you provide here so many clerks of classes 4, 3, 2, and 1, and for other employees that may be employed at $600 to $1,000, and you further provide that the total number of additional clerks of 2, 3, and 4, shall not exceed 100. How many are there of the clerks?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is impossible to determine. This work is all of an emergency character. It has got to be done by the commander in chief, as it were, as he designs, and it is impossible to limit him now. We can not tell how many clerks of a particular class may be required as the work progresses.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is class 1 the highest paid?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Class 4 is the highest.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand you are to have 3,200?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. At from $600 to $1,000 a year.

Mr. HINSHAW. And that is the provision here?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is a provision following it.

Now, I want to suggest another reason or two why the civil-service law is inapplicable to this class of service. The service is temporary in its character and the work is emergent, or nearly all of it. The great bulk of the work is mechanical. It consists of the operation of punching machines, sorting machines, and tabulating machines; and there is a provision in the bill giving the Director of the Census authority to provide for the payment of the clerks on what is called the "piece price" basis; and he believes he can save from three to five hundred thousand dollars in the expense of the office work by establishing that basis of payment. It is of such a character that there will be no difficulty in establishing a basis entirely advantageous to the clerk or employee and immensely economical to the Government—a thing that can not possibly be done under civil-service law.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because the civil-service law covers salaried positions.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is nothing in the civil-service law providing for salaries.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It provides for clerks, and the law defines the clerks in the classified service.

Mr. MANN. The clerks are not defined in the civil-service law; that comes under the old Dockery Act.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The civil-service law includes the clerks embraced in the classified service.

Mr. MANN. But it has no relation whatever to the class of clerks.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are in the classified service.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference about the term. It just happened that they used the term "clerks" in providing the force.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not as yet developed, and probably never will, that ability to refine and draw subtle distinctions that the gentleman from Illinois seems to possess. I want to get back to the main proposition, and that is that the offices under the classified service of the country are offices the salaries of which are fixed by law.

There is no piecework compensation yet in the classified service. It might be included by an amendment in the law, but we are taking the situation as it is.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken on the subject. The law does not refer to salaries at all. The civil-service law gives to the President the authority to transfer anybody into the classified service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If I can make myself understood, the law prescribes offices and salaries. The civil-service law applies to certain offices for which another law provides salaries. Neither law does it all, but they are both parts of one system.

Mr. MANN. The civil-service law applies to any appointive position under the Government which the President is pleased to cover into the civil service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no more time for the discussion of that question. My time is limited.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not stop the debate. We will give him time enough.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Another reason why the civil-service law is not applicable to the temporary appointees in the office is, as I understand it, that the civil-service law requires some kind of a procedure to remove a classified clerk or officer, on account of inefficiency or for any other reason.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will pardon me for correcting him. The civil-service law has no such provision in it at all. President McKinley made an order, as he had authority to do, which has since been revoked.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has it been absolutely revoked? You say that under the civil-service law the head of a department or the chief of a bureau may arbitrarily remove a clerk.

Mr. MANN. In many cases arbitrarily.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Without any notice?

Mr. MANN. In many cases, under a later order of the President, he may remove arbitrarily, but in most cases the clerk is given the privilege of filing any reasons that he may have to offer why he should not be removed; but he has no right to a trial.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But ordinarily notice is required?

Mr. MANN. That is under an Executive order.

Mr CRUMPACKER. When I speak of the law covering the civil service, I include Executive orders which are in operation for the government of that service.

Mr. MANN. The Executive order would be the law in this case, as to removal.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the power of removal is conferred upon the heads of the Departments, the Secretaries. The Census Office, as I said a moment ago, does emergency work. Many questions arise which must be solved immediately, and the Director is given a free hand to determine these propositions without going through the departmental red tape of submitting a formal request to the Secretary and waiting until it has been referred to some adviser in the Secretary's office and reported back, a process which might take three or more days. We want to give the Director a free hand to control his official force according to his own discretion and good judgment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the President will have the same power over the dismissal of these clerks, whether they are in the classified service or not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in this bill that relates to the dismissal of clerks?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think we authorize the Director to do it. If we do not, we ought to. We give him the power to appoint.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution gives him the power to appoint in the first place; but the President will have the power of appointment, because he will have the power to remove. You can not stop his having that power. He would have the same power in the one case as the other.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, well; I do not want to waste any time in fighting windmills.

Mr. MANN. I do not blame the gentleman, when he has not the argument on his side, for referring to windmills. The gentleman, not knowing the subject himself, is not desirous of debating it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I hope the gentleman will not become irritated. I did not intend to be personal when I spoke of windmills. [Laughter.] I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana refers to the civil-service law as though it was a windmill, but he is not versed in the law. He brings in a report which gives a reason why he should not adopt the law, which I dare say he has not read.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is making a serious charge.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman said he had not read it recently.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think I said even that. I have read it. I have been reading it this forenoon. I have the report of a Civil Service Commission for use in the debate. I have been reading some of its provisions, and I know its aspects, and I know something about its practical application. I will admit that I am not as well informed on the administration of the civil service as is the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I may be dense about this matter, but there is still one thing which I do not understand. Section 7 provides that this great force of employees shall be appointed by noncompetitive examination and that the examination should be conducted by the Civil Service Commission. The gentleman says that there are 3,200 clerks when the force is full. How are they to be recommended——

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman means by Republicans or by Democrats? [Laughter.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. For instance, out in Syracuse there may be a hundred young men and women who apply, and they all pass a good examination. They are all qualified. The examination is not competitive. How are they to be selected?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know whether it would be compatible with the public interest for me to answer that question. [Laughter.] To be serious about it, under the law anyone who desires to enter the service may apply for examination. It provides that they shall be appointed without regard to politics or party affiliations, but purely on a basis of merit. The examination will be entirely open to all comers, and the administration of the law will be in the hands of the Director of the Census, a man who is perhaps as ardent an advocate and a firm believer in the merit system and the civil-service system in the public service as any man in the country. If he sees fit to establish the merit system, he can do it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Did the Director of the Census recommend that the examination be noncompetitive?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He did not.

Mr. PARSONS. Did the Secretary of Commerce and Labor recommend that the examination be noncompetitive?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor recommended that the appointments be placed in the classified service excepting the abrogation of the geographical apportionment feature.

Mr. PARSONS. Did the special committee that Secretary Metcalf appointed recommend a noncompetitive examination?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They did not; they recommended a competitive examination and stated in effect that they would approve the bill as it was written with that change in respect to the kind of examination. The Secretary of the Department thinks that the examination ought to be competitive, the Director thinks it ought to be competitive, and the commission or committee appointed by the Secretary recommended that the examination should be competitive; but I want to say that if the Director believes in a competitive examination he will have the power under the provisions of this bill to put that into operation; he can use it in the selection of clerks; can begin at the top and go down the line until he gets enough clerks according to their grades.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have another hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana may be extended another hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. The effect of the use of the word "noncompetitive" as against the use of the word "competitive" in section 7 allows this, does it not, that if you used the word "competitive," then you have to select from the first three names, whereas if you use the word "noncompetitive," you can select a name anywhere on the list?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It means that in substance. I think a competitive examination does not require the selection from the first three names, but the selection of the highest eligible. The three-name proposition is confined to the civil-service law, but we are providing here a way of appointment without regard to that law. A competitive examination would imply that it was the duty of the Director to begin at the top and select those having the highest grades in that order down the line until his requirements in the Office shall be satisfied. It would compel the Director to do that, and the way the law is drawn now it simply gives the Director the option of doing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman stated a minute ago that in view of the fact that the Director of the Census is a strong advocate and believer in civil-service examination, and that under the provision, as embodied in the bill, he could still follow the selection by civil-service rule, I wish to ask him whether the Director would not be inclined to accept this provision as the intent and direction of Congress rather than that the force should be appointed otherwise?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be that he would. He would have the power. I think he would have the discretion to do that. I want to suggest now another reason—I am not through with reasons——

Mr. STAFFORD. Pardon me, but I would like to ask, as has been pointed out, that as this recommendation is not supported by the Director of the Census nor the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon whose recommendation was it embodied in the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the first place, the bill was fashioned in that respect after the bill providing for the Twelfth Census, and there has been some criticism of the Twelfth Census by people, I think, who do not know very much about its work. I understand that that is the judgment of those who know best that the results of the Twelfth Census were the most satisfactory of any census ever taken in the history of this country. I undertake to say, furthermore, that the clerical force in the Census Office to-day, selected originally by noncompetitve examination, can not be excelled if it can be equaled by any other bureau in the service of the Government. There has been some criticism of the Twelfth Census, there has been some criticism of the efficiency of the clerks in the Census Office to-day, and there has been a good deal of agitation over the question of securing accurate results and accurate counts. Mr. Chairman, the work of the Census Office in Washington is largely mechanical. There is little or no opportunity for mistakes. The value of the census depends almost altogether upon the class of men, the fifty or sixty or seventy thousand men, who make the enumeration, who are paid in the aggregate an average of probably $65 each for their entire work, and nobody yet has suggested that that great army of Government employees shall be selected under the civil-service law or by the merit system or in any other manner except the old way. There is no other practicable way to do it. If there has been an honest and conscientious and thorough enumeration, there will be a good census. I confess that the efficiency of the administrative work here depends also largely upon the class of clerks employed, but the great requirement is to secure a reliable enumeration, which can not be had by men employed under the civil-service law at anything like a reasonable cost.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As I understood the gentleman he said that localities are not to be considered in the selection of these 3,200 clerks, politics are not to be considered, recommendations are not to be considered, and the examinations are noncompetitive. We want about 3,200 clerks, or, as I look at it, if 3,200 young men and women from the city of Washington or from Virginia and Maryland flock in here and take the examination and are competent, and you probably could get that many who are competent, they get all the jobs. Is not that so? [Laughter.] Now, I want to know if that is not so.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman from Indiana will pardon me, I desire to say that I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York is not correct, that that will not occur.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not that right in theory?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not that the theory of this bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is to prevent it?

Mr. LANGLEY. I could answer, but I do not wish to appear to be trying to take the floor from the gentleman from Indiana. He will answer you.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is nothing to prevent it, but I will explain that in a minute. In the first place, about the "job" question, the bill did not have the subject of jobs in its mind in the same sense——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Oh, I used the word "job" in the sense of employment. I used a short word.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the same sense as the gentleman from New York is using it. That is another reason why these clerks should not be appointed under the competitive system. This work is mechanical, as I have said, and depends largely on experience and skill. There are 600 or 700 clerks; that is, there are 600 or 700 people in the District of Columbia and vicinity who had experience in the Twelfth Census, and the Census Office has a record of their efficiency, and it is desired by the Director to secure the services of those persons as far as he can do it for the Thirteenth Census without any examination at all.

Mr. PARSONS. Even if we should change the word "noncompetitive" to "competitive," you would still leave him that provision of your bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. PARSONS. Then you would accommodate the Director in that regard, and you would also accommodate him in having the examination competitive?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: Is it not likely that the Director, upon whom will be placed the responsibility of doing this work, will have a great deal of his time taken up if the noncompetitive system is adopted instead of the competitive system?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it might, perhaps; it will take some time. I believe there will be some responsibility and embarrassment and importunity under the noncompetitive system. Now, referring to the appointment clerk, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], who is a member of this committee, was the appointment clerk in the Twelfth Census, and he knows more about that aspect of the question than anybody else, and he is in favor, I understand, of the noncompetitive system.

Mr. MANN. The House would feel freer, I might say, if he would be the appointment clerk in the ensuing census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The House, you say?

Mr. MANN. The House would feel surer.

Mr. PARSONS. Evidently he prefers asking questions rather than answering them.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, I want to say in regard to the noncompetitive examination in relation to the clerks at Washington. The bill, I think, is a good deal wiser than the criticisms which have been addressed to it, or it would not be recommended with the provisions which it contains. These clerks in Washington and vicinity, if they were subject to competitive examination, having been in the business world, in the social world, and out of colleges for twelve or thirteen years, the chances are that they would receive relatively low grades in competitive examinations. Everybody knows that the boys and girls just out of high schools and colleges get the best grades in all scholastic tests conducted by the Civil Service Commission. That is perhaps the best test that can be established and——

Mr. PARSONS. Under your bill as it is drawn you do not require those who have had previous experience to take any examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. None at all. That is one of the good features of the bill.

Mr. PARSONS. It requires noncompetitive examination, but a provision in your bill states that those who have had previous experience would not have to take any examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true. It has been suggested that the noncompetitive examination is practically a competitive examination or competitive examinations would be noncompetitive examinations, because with these slight salaries and the short period of office tenure without any hope of reappointment or transfer, the chances are that the eligible list would be exhausted anyway. In order that we may get enough applicants to take the examination so there may be enough eligibles to select from is one of the reasons why the examination was made noncompetitive. Many people would take a noncompetitive examination feeling they might get a sufficient grade in a service of this character, temporary and small pay, but if it were a competitive examination they might not go into it at all, and I think that for this temporary service, considering its character, mechanical largely, that as good a class of clerks can be selected by the noncompetitive system as by the competitive system.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. You say that anyone with previous experience in census work, as I understand it, is not required to take an examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends upon his record, the efficiency record of the office. It gives a discretion to the Director to reemploy the clerks and employees who were in other censuses. The record of their efficiency is in the office, and of course their reemployment would depend upon their record.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York just asked that question. Does this apply to the original appointment or merely a transfer?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What do you mean?

Mr. MANN. Does it apply to an original appointment in the Census Office or merely a transfer from other Departments?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It applies to original appointments in the Census Office.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by census work—that experience in census work will permit men to be appointed without an examination? What is the gentleman's definition of census work?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I mean office work; I mean arranging, assorting, tabulating, compiling, and all that class of work that is largely of a mechanical character; that is census work.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the bill required no examination where the applicant had had previous experience in census work. Is that correct?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill provides that those who have been employed in other censuses, the record of whose efficiency is in the Census Office, may be employed by the Director without any examination at all. That is what the bill says.

Mr. MANN. I would like to see where that is.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a further question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. This bill provides for a noncompetitive examination of these applicants for positions. How will the selection be made? By the Director of the Census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. By the Director of the Census. The bill authorizes the Director to make the appointments.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman to say that perhaps the Director might begin at the top of the list. By what rule will the Director be governed when he makes up the list? That is important to all of us.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. It gives him the discretion to make the appointments after a noncompetitive examination.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think he would put at the top of the list the person who passed the best examination?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I can not speak for him, but he can do so if he desires.

Mr. BUTLER. And if he did, would not that be a competitive examination list?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That would be a merit test absolutely. I would not be surprised if he did that.

Mr. BUTLER. Then what is the use of us standing here and talking about a noncompetitive examination if the Director has it in his power to submit a competitive examination to the applicant?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know as there is any.

Mr. BUTLER. We have done a good deal of talking about it, I should say, with no purpose in it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the classified service at the expiration of the temporary work the clerks would still be eligible for reappointment or transfer in the classified service, and it is likely a good many of them would importune Representatives and Senators to secure permanent positions for them after the work is over. There is a provision in this bill that nobody shall be eligible—that is, these temporaries—to reappointment or transfer to the classified service on account of their examination or appointment under the provisions of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, passing from that, I want to say that I am an advocate and a believer in the merit system and in the civil-service law, but it is applicable to the regular, permanent service. The Government ought to exercise practical business sense in all its administrative work and not undertake to adopt a system of appointments that is inapplicable to the particular service.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to impose on the gentleman, but there is one other matter I would like to ask him about. There are to be a number of supervisors.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I was just ready to discuss that question. What particular thing would the gentleman like to know?

Mr. MANN. I will hear the gentleman's discussion.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill provides for the appointment of a number of supervisors, the total number not to exceed 330. The Twelfth Census act authorized the appointment of 300, and it provides that the districts or supervisors shall conform to the boundaries of the Congressional districts as far as practicable. The duties of the supervisors will be to recommend enumerators for appointment and instruct them respecting their duties, map out the enumerators' districts, and then to supervise the schedules and the reports of the enumerators in their respective districts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman provides for 330 supervisors, including Samoa and Guam and Panama——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We did not provide any supervisors for Panama, Samoa, or Guam.

Mr. MANN. You do not provide supervisors in any place, but provide for taking the census there.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In making the estimate of the number of supervisors the States were taken into consideration, the matter of population, etc. For instance, only one will be given to the State of Massachusetts, one to the city of New York proper, one to Brooklyn, and so on.

Mr. MANN. One supervisor to the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; that was done in the Twelfth Census.

Mr. MANN. That is not making the boundaries of the supervisors' districts conform to the boundaries of the Congressional districts as far as practicable.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As far as practicable, yes. It is not practicable in the State of Massachusetts, for the office can avail itself of the machinery of the State census bureau in that State.

Mr. MANN. It may not be desirable, but certainly it may be practicable.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We will not dispute over words and definitions.

Mr. MANN. What is this schedule? Is it intended to have in all cities where there are more than one Congressional district but one supervisor?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No city will have more than one supervisor. Chicago will have but one.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman proposes to have these supervisors appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is familiar with the fact that there has been considerable of a protest against appointing the clerks, etc., in this proposed census outside of the classified service?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to suggest to the gentleman that, in my judgment, the real reason for all the complaint that has been made is the fact that the supervisors are controlled by the other end of this Capitol and that therefore every supervisor feels that he has to dispense the patronage as the Senators desire. If he would take the judgment of this distinguished body, he would get able, competent men, which he does not always get when they come from the other side.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman would suggest that they be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the House of Representatives?

Mr. MANN. No; I would say that they should be appointed by the Director of the Census, which is the only proper way. If he wanted to get good appointees, let him appoint a supervisor of the census in every Congressional district of the United States. I speak because it does not affect my district in the slightest degree, as my district does not get a supervisor in any event.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will take the gentleman in my confidence and tell him that that is one of the problems which the Committee on the Census has wrestled with. It had some doubt about the power of Congress to confer upon the Director of the Census authority to make appointments. The Constitution provides that officers shall be appointed by the President, but Congress may authorize judges of the courts and heads of the Departments to appoint minor officers, and I fear that under the Constitution we can not confer upon the Director of the Census the power to appoint supervisors. The bill authorizes the Director of the Census to appoint the clerks and employees in the Office, because that was the provision of the Twelfth Census act, and no question was raised about it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman probably, very naturally, I supposes, confuses heads of Departments under the Constitution with Cabinet officers of the United States, which the Constitution does not in the slightest degree recognize, and never has, as applicable to the head of a Department. The head of the Department of Labor is not a Cabinet officer. We conferred upon him authority to make appointments in his Department, and the authority is unquestioned, and there is no question at all of the power to do it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But the Department of Labor was an independent bureau. There was no head of that Department except the Commissioner, and, therefore, in the sense of the Constitution it is altogether likely that the Commissioner would have been regarded as the head of the Department; but now, since the Bureau of Labor has been made a Bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of that Department, in my judgment, would be regarded the head of the Department, and not the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman may be right, but I had charge of the bill creating that Department, and it was my judgment then that the Constitution does not say that the appointments shall be made by the heads of Departments.

Mr. PAYNE. If I may be permitted to break into this conversation, I would like to ask the gentleman who makes these appointments?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is in detail like the Twelfth Census.

Mr. PAYNE. That is your present plan?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This provision is taken out of the Twelfth Census.

Mr. PAYNE. So far as I remember, the supervisor then was appointed by the Director.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Director of the Census probably made the recommendation under the last census. The President, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census, made the appointment; that is the way it was done, although the law gave the Director no voice in the matter.

Mr. MANN. The Director of the Census recommended upon the suggestion of Senators.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, not altogether.

Mr. LANGLEY. No; not always. A great many Members named them——

Mr. MANN. Oh, that may have been in Kentucky, because the gentleman represented Kentucky during the last census.

Mr. LANGLEY. I tried to, and I also tried to get Kentucky her share of appointments, and I think Illinois got hers, too.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. It is provided here to extend this census to Guam, Porto Rico, and some other places. Is it supposed that to take the census at these outlying districts we will have to send clerks from our country to Guam and Porto Rico?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They may be. We do not provide for any special machinery for the census of those districts.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think it would be worth while to send people from here to Guam to find out the statistics of that little island?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It perhaps might be; they have 10,000 people there.

Mr. PERKINS. How many dollars does the gentleman think it would cost to send enumerators over there to find that out?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Probably a dollar a head.

Mr. PARSONS. I will state to the gentleman that Guam is under the Navy Department, and they could detail an officer of the Navy to take the census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have a provision under which they can detail officials from other Departments.

Mr. PERKINS. As it is extended to Porto Rico, is it your idea that the people taking the census will be Porto Ricans, or will they have to be people sent from this country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The enumerators before were appointed under authority of the Secretary of War, in 1899, and were natives of Porto Rico.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think there is very grave doubt about the importance, or even the advisability, of taking a census of the Panama Canal Zone at the present time?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We ought to have a count of our people down there. Otherwise, how are we going to know how many citizens there are there? There may be several thousands of them, and they will not be counted among those here, and they should be enumerated; we ought to take a complete census of all the people of the country.

Mr. GARRETT. So far as my observation went down there, there are about 30,000 men on the pay rolls. Now, perhaps, 20,000 of them are Jamaica and Barbados negroes, who are shifting continually, coming and going every week. The population out in that narrow strip of the Canal Zone, excluding the cities of Panama and Colon, as they are excluded from our territory, is very small.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That objection addresses itself to the policy of taking any census there at all.

Mr. GARRETT. In view of the shifting population, it strikes me that it is going to cost a great deal more than it is worth, and that we could get all the information that is necessary by a provision authorizing the Canal Commission to do it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Some amendment of that kind will probably be offered on the floor. Now, I should like to proceed with my general statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the enumerators in taking the census here will enumerate the number in each family in the United States, and if a member of that family was temporarily residing or working in Panama, would he not be enumerated here, together with the other members of that family?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be the case.

Mr. TAWNEY. And if he was a married man, and his family was enumerated here, would he not be included in that enumeration?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be the case. I do not know. It would depend on the view the enumerator would take.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the law under which previous censuses have been taken, absent members of the family, when they were absent temporarily, were enumerated as members of the family residing at that particular place.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The law did not require it. This bill in that respect is drawn almost exactly after the Twelfth Census act, and a man who is unmarried, who when he is in America may reside under the parental roof, in the eye of the law would not necessarily be a resident here if he was down at Panama working. That is a question, however, that can be taken up when we come to consider the bill for amendments.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is an administrative feature.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes. Now, there has been a slight increase of the pay of enumerators. There is a schedule of maximum and minimum fees fixed, and the bill increases the maximum, because under the last census the average pay of enumerators was $66.39, and the period of service ran from thirty to forty days. We require the census in country districts to be taken in thirty days, and in cities of 5,000 or more in two weeks. That is, the actual count is to be made within that time, but it takes some little time to make up the reports.

The census of the population is to be taken on the 15th of April, instead of the 1st of June. Heretofore, since the first, second, and third censuses, the 1st day of June has been the date of calculation, but the Director of the last Census said that during the summer season, when the enumerators were busy, a great many people in the cities had closed their homes and had gone abroad or to summer resorts, and they had a good deal of difficulty in getting the census of that class of families. Director Merriam came before the committee and was asked his opinion on that question, and he said it was discussed in connection with the Twelfth Census, and, in view of the trouble they had, he thought the 15th day of April, taking everything into consideration, was the best and most practicable date.

He said that the 1st of October would be the best if it were not for the fact that in every decennial census year there is a general election in the States, or most of them, and every other decennial year there is a Presidential election. An enumeration of population along with a canvass by political parties might mix up things somewhat and cause some doubt to be thrown upon the trustworthiness of the statistics.

The bill provides for a quinquennial census of agriculture that will cost about $2,000,000. That census has been urged by farmers' institutes, grangers' societies, agricultural and live stock associations all over the country. Several years ago the Committee on the Census reported a bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] authorizing a quinquennial census of agriculture and live stock. It is not a general and complete census like the one taken in the decennial period. It covers the acreage of the farms and the acreage of the principal crops, together with a census of the domestic animals on farms and ranges, animals that have a direct relation to the industry of agriculture.

Under the law now we take a quinquennial census of manufactures and electrical industries. The prosperity of all the country rests upon the agricultural industry. It is the most important of any one industry, if it can be said that any particular industry leads in importance.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Is there any provision in this bill for gathering the indebtedness of the country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No. During the interdecennial period the Census Office covers the subjects of debt, wealth, taxation, mortgages, and social, economic, and commercial statistics.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it not a proper thing to provide in this bill that the indebtedness shall be taken at the time you take the wealth?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not, in my judgment, because it is not advisable to encumber the decennial census more than is actually necessary, because of the delay that would come in making the investigation and completing the compilation and publication of the reports. It is the desire to get the reports but as soon as possible after the enumeration.

Mr. BOOHER. The bill provides for the taking of the value of the farms and the crops. In doing that, why not take the indebtedness at the time, so that you can see how much wealth there is in the farms? Why is it not a proper thing to take in a decennial census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be proper to make that investigation, but not in connection with the decennial census. There are a hundred subjects that might be worthy of investigation, and the statistics of which might be of much value, but all such inquiries should be made as special examinations by the permanent Census Office.

Mr. BOOHER. Why not provide in this bill to take them at the same time, and as often as you take the census, and no oftener?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have never done that, and the committee did not think it ought to be taken at this time.

Mr. BOOHER. May I ask a further question? The committee provides in this bill for taking the census of the public debts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. BOOHER. You did in the last census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill provides for four principal subjects—agriculture, manufactures, population, mines and mining. In the last census a large number of other subjects were taken after the principal inquiries were made. They were conducted by the permanent Census Office. It is the chief duty of the permanent office to make those minor investigations enumerated in the Twelfth Census act.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman tell my why the entire enumeration mentioned in section 8 of the act of 1900 is left out of this act?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because the permanent Census Office is engaged all the time in conducting those investigations, and we do not need to duplicate them. There are already statutes authorizing the taking of the census of those subjects, and every one is taken during the interdecennial interval.

Mr. BOOHER. If it was a good thing to take in 1900, why is it not a good thing to take it in connection with this investigation in 1910?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was not contemplated that they should be taken in 1900, and they were not taken then; it was intended by the law that they should be taken after the principal inquiries were out of the way.

Mr. BOOHER. The only provision of law for that is the act of 1900, is it not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, indeed.

Mr. BOOHER. Where is it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The act creating the permanent Census Office makes it the duty of the permanent office to make those inquiries every ten years between the decennial census periods.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to say to the gentleman that I am asking the questions for information. I have failed to find the law that makes it the duty of the Director of the Census to take care of this other information.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That law is appended to the report upon this bill, and if the gentleman will get the report he will find that particular act, the one creating the permanent Census Office, and the act amending section 7 of that act.

Mr. BOOHER. This is section 8 that I am speaking of.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I must hurry on. I want to make a brief reference to one or two other subjects.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman just this one question: The gentleman stated at the outset of his remarks that this bill did not in any way enlarge the scope of the present permanent census law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing in the permanent law requiring the taking of a quinquennial census of agriculture, is there? Now, this permanent establishment——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let us settle the question of whether I misrepresented the bill in that respect.

Mr. TAWNEY. But I do not say the gentleman misrepresented it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman will remember, I said "excepting the few things that are provided for specially in the bill itself."

Mr. TAWNEY. And this is one of them—that the permanent Census Bureau will hereafter conduct the taking of this agricultural census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. At an expense of $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. At an expense of $2,000,000 a year, estimated. It is a question for the House of Representatives to determine whether the census will be justified in view of the expenses to the country. The Secretary of Agriculture is enthusiastic for it. His reasons for it, and they are strong and I think convincing, are printed with the report upon the bill. Every member of the committee may get a copy of the report and read the reasons the Secretary of Agriculture gives for it. They are quite numerous.

Mr. KEIFER. Turning to page 6 of the bill I find, commencing in line 7:

> The schedules relating to agriculture shall include the name of the occupant of each farm, the color of the occupant, the tenure, the acreage of the farm, etc.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that substantially the law under which we have taken previous censuses?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; under which we took the Twelfth Census.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I want to inquire why it is that neither the Agricultural Department nor the Census Bureau is able to tell the number of inhabitants in this country who are interested in agriculture?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, if that is a correct statement of the situation, I am very greatly surprised.

Mr. KEIFER. I take that as so from letters from the heads of both of those Departments, that they are unable to tell the per cent of the population of the United States that is engaged in agriculture.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will this evening call the attention of the Director of the Census to that statement, and find out what he has to say about it. If they can not do that, there is no use of taking the census at all.

Mr. KEIFER. I think so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I certainly think the gentleman must have gotten incorrect information on that subject, because it is one of the very purposes of the census—the classification of population in relation to industries, and productive occupations, and all that sort of thing. It seems to me that we must have that information.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to emphasize that I have written separate letters to the Secretary of Agriculture and also to the chief of the Census Bureau, and from both have learned that they were unable from the census to give the per cent of population of the United States who are engaged in agriculture. They have made some estimates upon it, but not from the census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I must insist upon concluding my remarks.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask just one more question. I have examined hastily the permanent law and I do not find any provision in the permanent law for collecting the mortgage indebtedness of the country. It only provides for collecting the public indebtedness of the country.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no provision in this bill for collecting information as to the private indebtedness.

Mr. BOOHER. Is there any provision in the law anywhere for gathering the mortgage indebtedness of the country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Probably not.

Mr. BOOHER. They gathered it in the taking of the last census, didn't they?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not remember. We have a provision for wealth, debt, and taxation.

Mr. LANGLEY. It was not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the estimated cost of the Thirteenth Census, covering the three-year period, is $14,000,000, and that embraces the expense of the permanent Census Office and the cost of the annual and biennial inquiries or investigations that the Office must make. It includes vital statistics annually, cotton-gin statistics annually, and certain forestry statistics and the publication of the Official Register.

Mr. PERKINS. Fourteen million dollars for three years?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For the entire time.

Mr. PERKINS. How much for the remaining seven years?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The expenses of the Office are paid annually, according to the work it has to do. About a million and a quarter annually the permanent Census Office costs.

Mr. PERKINS. Then there is also the agricultural census taken every five years, at an expense of $2,000,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If this bill is enacted into law, it will add that to the duty of the permanent Office, at an expense of about $2,000,000 every five years.

Mr. TAWNEY. Right there, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to make a statement. The argument made in favor of the permanent census a few years ago was that it would greatly reduce the cost of taking the regular, or the Thirteenth Census. Now, I find upon examination and comparing the cost of the last census that the estimated cost of taking the next census is more than a million dollars in excess of the total cost of taking the last census. For example, the total cost of the last census was $13,516,210. Then we established the permanent Census Bureau, with a view and believing, as we were told, that the cost of taking the Thirteenth Census would be greatly reduced in consequence of the work of the permanent census. Since that time we have expended in the maintenance of the permanent Census Bureau almost $6,000,000, so that when you add the estimated cost of taking the Thirteenth Census to the cost of maintaining the permanent Census Bureau the total is about $20,000,000, instead of $13,000,000, the cost of the last census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman must bear in mind the Census Office has been doing a large amount of work that was formerly done by other statistical bureaus. Under the law making the Census Office permanent the work of other bureaus was transferred to the Census Office, and in a number of instances Congress has added to the Office a great many additional duties, enlarged its scope. Why, this last fall it took the census of Oklahoma, at an expense of $70,000, upon the order of the President of the United States, to inform him in relation to the situation in connection with the approval of the Oklahoma constitution. The Office has been doing a large amount of work that was never done before.

Mr. TAWNEY. That cost was $70,000——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But that is an item——

Mr. TAWNEY. And it is not included in what I have enumerated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But it illustrates something of the character of the work and new duties which are occasionally imposed upon the Office, and I undertake to say that the permanent office has given the country more for the money it has cost than any other statistical office in the history of this country.

It has been doing a large work. There is the marriage and divorce investigation. There had not been an investigation of that subject for twenty years, and it will cost considerable money. Here is the cotton-gin statistics. There have been numerous inquiries and investigations that have kept the Office busy. The Thirteenth Census proper will be taken for less money in dollars and cents than the cost of taking the Twelfth Census. The Director approximates the cost of the Twelfth Census at $12,520,000, and estimates the cost of the Thirteenth Census at $12,825,000. He estimates the three-year period to cost $14,110,000. A good share of it, $855,000 and $331,000, are the cost of making the annual and biennial investigations that the law now requires of the permanent office, so the Thirteenth Census proper will be made at a smaller cost than the Twelfth Census. The approximation of the cost of the Twelfth Census was made for the work that was done up to the time the permanent office was created. The permanent office completed a considerable portion of the work of the Twelfth Census out of its own appropriation, and the cost of that work was not charged to the Twelfth Census.

Mr. TAWNEY. The three-year or census period in which the Twelfth Census was taken the appropriations were—for the year 1900, $1,000,000; 1901, $9,000,000; 1902, $3,516,210. The statement of the Director in regard to the cost, therefore, of the Thirteenth Census is not exactly correct, because the total is $13,516,210.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] appreciate that it will cost more to take the coming census than it did the last?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do, but that was not what we were discussing.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have a greater geographical area, and there will possibly be 15,000,000 more people to be enumerated in the Thirteenth Census than there were in the Twelfth, and the expense for enumeration and supervision must of necessity be considerably higher. The adoption of the piece-price basis of pay will result in great saving, and it will bring the expense of the Thirteenth Census proper below the actual cost of the Twelfth Census. Now, as an illustration of the work of the Census Office.

A couple of years ago it was charged with the duty of preparing and printing the official register, commonly known as the "Blue Book." Its first publication was two or three months ago—that is, the first edition. That document is required to be published biennially. The old "Blue Book" took up in its arrangement about 1,500 pages for its index. It was a great, cumbersome publication. The new official register is arranged after the fashion of a business directory, the names appear in it only once, and its convenience and usefulness are greatly increased, and the saving in paper and printing alone has been over $50,000.

Mr. PERKINS. To whom does the gentleman give the credit for that change?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know, but——

Mr. PERKINS. I think the Committee on Printing will put in a claim on that.

Mr. MANN. Nobody will claim credit, for nobody is entitled to it. Because of the change a man has got to study the whole volume through before he knows how to look up a thing in that book.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has the gentleman from Illinois had one of the new official directories?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I spent all one night trying to find out how to use it, and threw it to one side. Of course the gentleman is able to do it quicker, but the ordinary citizen is not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The names are arranged alphabetically, and of course only those who understand the English alphabet can readily locate a name and office. The names are arranged alphabetically, like a business directory.

Mr. MANN. I never claimed to be in the class with the gentleman. I will guarantee a man can not take a page of that directory without turning over to the beginning of it and getting the formula in order to tell what it means behind the name.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not had any difficulty in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. Because the gentleman has not looked up anything in it. The gentleman has not used it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Anyhow, the Official Register is published at a saving of $50,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill confers upon the Director of the Census a very large discretionary power. The Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, in the interest of departmental unity and subordination, felt that the power of the Director ought to be limited somewhat. The Tenth and the Eleventh censuses were taken under a law that required the Superintendents, as they were termed then, to do the work under the express supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, in whose Department the Census Office was then a Bureau. The results were altogether unsatisfactory.

The time consumed in securing departmental approval and authority for many "hurry-up" matters of detail resulted in delaying the publications of the report of those censuses until they had lost practically all of their current value and were worth nothing more than the history they might contain. Profiting by the experience of the past, Congress in the Twelfth Census conferred a larger discretionary power upon the Director of the Census. It was deemed to be necessary because of the character of the work. Many exigencies arise that require handling without any kind of delay, and Congress, in the act of March 3, 1899, refused to sacrifice dispatch, efficiency, and economy to Department red tape and etiquette, and conferred this large power upon the Director. The Director of the Census occupies the position of a commanding general of a great army in line of battle. Things arise in the course of conflict that have to be settled offhand. The responsibility for the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses will be with the Director of the Census, and in order to properly carry that responsibility he must have a corresponding amount of power. We all appreciate the necessity of the unity of bureaus and divisions in the great Departments of the Government and the subordination of every bureau and every division to the head of the Department. We all realize the fact that the President of the United States must keep in touch with these great bureaus of administration, and that he can only do it through the heads of the Departments.

But, Mr. Chairman, the power that is conferred upon the Director by this bill is in no respect inconsistent with the general departmental jurisdiction and control that the Secretary has over the Office. There are no inconsistencies excepting, of course, the Director may exercise some authority without the approval and consent of the Secretary; but the Secretary can require a complete account or report on all the business of the Bureau whenever he may desire it. The Director may be required to report on the status of any work, system, method, or situation at the request of the Secretary, who has as full control and authority over the Bureau as is consistent with the best results, in view of the character and nature of the work that is imposed upon the Office.

Mr. Chairman, I have used a great deal more time than I intended to.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know why this bill is being enacted now. Why not wait a year? This Congress will exist next fall, whatever comes next summer, and we can pass a bill next winter; so what is the use of pushing it now? What good does it do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The best answer that I can make to the gentleman is this: If the gentleman will get a copy of the report and will turn to page 9 he will read the reasons assigned by the Director of the Census why this legislation should be enacted at this session of Congress. What is the use of delaying it? It can not be enacted more deliberately or intelligently by the short session of Congress. The last general census act was approved the day before Congress adjourned in 1899 and came near going on by. The Director says it is important that the Office should know at an early date the exact terms and conditions under which it shall take the Thirteenth Decennial Census in order to be prepared for it, and shape the business of the permanent Office with a view to meet the requirements of the greater work. What is the use of delay? Will there be more time next winter than this winter? Will the attitude of Congress be more judicious, will this body be any more deliberate than now; will it be any better prepared to enact this legislation than now, with all the big appropriation bills crowding for consideration?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me? I think, Mr. Chairman, that the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has left a wrong impression upon the committee. I have conferred with the Director of the Census, and he tells me that all the information provided for in the Twelfth Census law regarding agriculture is now available. The gentleman from Ohio, I am inclined to think, wanted some character of information that Congress has not required the Census Office to collect, or in some form in which it has never been tabulated, or could not be. This must be so, because I am sure the Census Office can furnish the gentleman any statistics that the census law requires it to collect and that it has had time to collect and tabulate.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to repeat that the correspondence with the Census Bureau started first with the Commissioner of Agriculture. I was told that the information was not obtainable from the Census Bureau. I tried to get information showing the percentage of the population of the United States engaged in agriculture.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will state for the information of the House that the Census Office, I am reliably informed, can furnish the information indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, to wit, the number of persons occupying farms when the census was taken. Of course it is simply a question of mathematics to determine the percentage of persons so employed, as compared with the total population.

Mr. KEIFER. I think possibly the gentleman from Kentucky and the Director of the Census misunderstand my statement. I have no doubt they can tell how many men claim to work on farms, but that does not answer the question at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will answer one question by the gentleman from New York and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. PARSONS. I understand that there are some penal provisions put in the bill for the taking of the Thirteenth Census, and one in regard to answering questions in regard to mining, manufacturing, farming, etc.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. What constitutional authority is there to compel answers in regard to those questions?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, a year ago I said on the floor of this House I thought there was no constitutional power to compel answer to these questions. But I have on further reflection concluded there is.

The Government has the right to investigate its industrial and commercial resources for numerous purposes. The Government imposes excise taxes, per capita taxes, and it controls interstate commerce, and is entitled to have all information respecting all of its resources that can be obtained, in order that it may perform the duties or exercise the powers that the Federal Government vests in the Congress of the United States to the best purpose. There is the question of the standing army, the question of the control of the militia, and I think there are a good many powers that are expressly given that would justify Congress in making these investigations. This being so, it can compel the citizens to give the information concerning them.

Now I surrender the floor to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, after the exhaustive statements and explanations of the bill by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] I hardly deem it necessary for me to say anything about it. The only thing upon which the gentleman was entirely silent, and which seemed to exercise the minds of gentlemen on the floor very much, was as to how these additional employees were to be appointed. I understand that the last time they were appointed upon the recommendation of Senators and Members of the House, and I presume they are going to be appointed in the same way this time. Of course, I can not speak by the card.

Mr. BOOHER. Do you know whether this side of the Chamber will be allowed to name any or not?

Mr. HAY. I presume so, as this side of the Chamber was allowed to name some before, and I suppose the same rule will prevail as has prevailed before.

I do not know that there is any other subject that my friend from Indiana did not expatiate upon very largely in response to the great number of questions which were put to him about this bill.

The bill was very carefully prepared in the Committee on the Census, and it has been very well explained to the House. Of course, there are some provisions in the bill which perhaps do not meet the approval of every Member on the floor, but when the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule it can be considered, and any idea or amendment which any gentleman has can be thrashed out, and so far as I am concerned, there being nobody on this side who desires to make a speech, I am willing that we should go ahead now under the five-minute rule if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair was that general debate was to continue throughout to-day until adjournment to-day.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was a part of the agreement that the bill was not to be taken up under the five-minute rule until to-morrow, and if there is nobody who desires to speak in general debate, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2027) for the relief of Phillip Hague, administrator of the estate of Joseph Hague, deceased, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

By unanimous consent the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the relief of Thomas C. Chappell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CALDER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Waldemar A. W. Tegner, second session Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. CALDER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Durack Rowen, second session Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 417) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act approved March 9, 1904, authorizing the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak., as amended by the acts approved January 27, 1905; February 5 1906, and March 2, 1907, be, and is hereby, amended by extending the time for commencing the construction of said bridge to March 9, 1909, and by extending the time for completing said bridge to March 9, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIEU LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9205 and consider the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the following bill and that the same be considered in the House at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9205) to make the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stats. p. 796), applicable to the Territory of New Mexico.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, made applicable to the Territory of New Mexico, and the grant of school lands to said Territory, and indemnity therefor, shall be administered and adjusted in accordance with the provisions of said act, anything in the act of Congress approved June 21, 1898, making certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much property this bill takes?

Mr. HALL. This is a bill which is designed to remove the obstacles to the selection of the lieu lands in New Mexico. It is for the purpose of selecting the land in lieu of sections 16 and 36 that were imposed by the act of 1898, granting the school lands to New Mexico. This is for the purpose of placing that Territory in the same position that all the other States and Territories are placed in. It involves no grant nor any appropriation, but gives to that Territory the privilege of selecting its land in the same manner that every other State and Territory does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did they not select sections 16 and 36 when they had the opportunity, or did they not have the opportunity?

Mr. HALL. In a great many instances it was impossible, because they had been appropriated in some other manner. Section 2275 of the Revised Statutes as amended in 1891 says whenever such lands (sections 16 and 36) have been thus appropriated, the State or Territory is authorized to select other land equivalent in amount within the State anywhere. Now, the only difference is, and the purpose of this bill is, to permit New Mexico to do the same thing that other States and Territories do, and make the selection of the lieu lands from land anywhere within its borders.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What committee was the bill reported from?

Mr. HALL. The Committee on the Public Lands, and I will say that it is also recommended by the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was it the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did they not put this clause into the bill when they passed it originally?

Mr. HALL. That is a matter I can not explain. It ought to have been passed in the same form as the corresponding statute which applies to all the other States and Territories. In the grant to New Mexico, for some unaccountable reason, it contained words which limits the lieu lands to contiguous land, or as the language is, "as contiguous as may be."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And somebody had already got sections 16 and 36?

Mr. HALL. Yes; and some are perhaps in forest reserves. At any rate, there is no land in the immediate vicinity or contiguous to those sections, and therefore the Territory would be beaten out of the opportunity of selecting the lieu land unless this obstacle is removed.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it true that in the appropriation by the Government for forest reserves they have taken a good deal of land that had no forest on it whatever, and thereby the owner of the land was allowed under the lieu-land act to take land outside of the forest reserve which was covered with timber or otherwise appropriated for agricultural purposes, perhaps in the way of irrigation, or something like that?

Mr. HALL. I made no investigation of that subject, because it does not apply to this particular proposition. This is merely to enable the State to indemnify itself for the loss of sections 16 and 36 wherever they have been appropriated for any other use, whether forest reserve or something else.

Mr. HINSHAW. Some of these sections have been appropriated for forest reserve and the State seeks to get other land in lieu thereof?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HALL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did not the act of 1898 make provision for the Territory selecting lands where sections 16 and 36 had already been taken?

Mr. HALL. The act of 1898 did.

Mr. MANN. The act of 1898 made such a provision and I wish the gentleman would state why they desire a change of the law in order to avail themselves of another law on the subject.

Mr. HALL. I will explain to the gentleman. The act of 1898, which is alluded to in the report, is an act which refers only to the Territory of New Mexico. The act of 1891, seven years prior to that, applied to all States and Territories; but this act of 1898, granting these school lands to New Mexico, made no reference to this act of 1891. In this act of 1898, as the gentleman will observe, the Territory of New Mexico is limited in its selection of lieu lands to "other nonmineral lands equivalent thereto in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter section and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken." Those words "as contiguous as may be" are peculiar. This act of 1898 applies to New Mexico alone, and those words, imposing that limitation, do not exist as to any other State or Territory.

Mr. MANN. I assume that there was some reason for putting that language in the act of 1898. Congress had the act of 1891 before it, but it enacted the law of 1898, and yet the committee, without giving the slightest excuse for doing it, say that we ought to repeal the act of 1898 and go back to the act of 1891.

Mr. HALL. I will say to the gentleman that in the drafting of that act of 1898—I am informed by gentlemen from the Interior Department—that probably the act granting the lands to Utah was followed, which contained these words, "as contiguous as may be."

Mr. MANN. What is the objection?

Mr. HALL. But Congress, subsequently discovering the fact that it placed Utah in a position where it was unable to take advantage of lieu lands, has repealed it so far as Utah is concerned, and now this is designed for the purpose of extending to New Mexico precisely the same privileges that are extended under the general law to other States and Territories. In other words, it is to prevent New Mexico from being placed in a special class by itself, subject to certain onerous conditions that are not imposed upon any other State in the United States.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not show the conditions are onerous in any way whatever. The report of the Department of the Interior does not show the conditions are onerous, and the only proposition is that because some States have something, therefore New Mexico should have the same, although Congress when it did enact the legislation provided differently, for good reasons, doubtless. Now, what hardship is it on the Territory of New Mexico now, if it can not get sections 16 and 36 in the township, to select other lands contiguous as may be, being of the same character of land? Why should it be permitted to go out and select much better lands in some other part of the Territory?

Mr. HALL. I will explain to the gentleman as well as I can why it is that this Territory is placed in a disadvantageous position. For example, we will take the case of a forest reserve that will cover many townships. Sections 16 and 36 would be removed. They would be incorporated in this forest reserve and it would be utterly impossible for the Territory to select lieu lands contiguous thereto, because this territory would be so extensive that it would be impossible.

Mr. MANN. But this does not say contiguous thereto.

Mr. HALL. I will read the language—"as contiguous as may be"—and under administrative construction they have been confined in the selection of lieu lands to lands which were practically in the same vicinity of those covered by these other reservations, and therefore the Territory has absolutely been deprived in many instances, and will be deprived of these school lands which the Government designs to furnish to the States and Territories for the purpose of benefiting the lower educational facilities, the common schools. But another thing, in a great many instances these lands have been settled upon by actual settlers, not only sections 16 and 36, but all lands which are contiguous or in the immediate vicinity of them; and the Territory of New Mexico, instead of being able to get these lands in these sections, is now compelled, or would be if Congress grants them that privilege, of going still farther out into the country to select perhaps inferior lands, to have some lands in lieu of those which they have lost in that manner; and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be entirely unjust for this Congress to segregate New Mexico and say that she shall not have the same privilege in the selection of her lieu lands for school purposes that are extended to every other State and Territory in the Union.

Mr. MANN. Is not this the case, that, under the law of 1898, where section 16 or 36 has been taken, the Territory of New Mexico, if it selects lieu lands, must select lieu lands as near to the place as practicable, whereas under the law of 1891, if this bill becomes a law, the Territory of New Mexico can select all of its lieu lands in one locality, lease it, if it pleases, to one big corporation, and do that which Congress never has intended to be done, give to a State a large territory of land of its own for its own control without regard to the settlement and homestead policy of the Government.

Mr. HALL. I will ask the gentleman if that can not be done in any other State or Territory, and whether there is any more likelihood that New Mexico will do it than any other State or Territory.

Mr. MANN. There is this likelihood, because it is only recently we have created these large forest reserves which take up a great many of these sections. The other States have taken their lands before the forest reserves were created in this way, to a very large extent, and there have been no instances and no case where there was the same opportunity to collect a body of land for purposes which Congress would not tolerate of one Territory, as there is in this case.

Mr. HALL. I will state to the gentleman that there was a representative of the Interior Department before the Committee on Public Lands, and he made a statement relative to this matter, in addition to the written indorsement of the Interior Department which is made a part of the report in this case, and he made an oral statement that he knew of no good reason why New Mexico should be separated out and placed in a position different from any other State or Territory, and he said that Utah had been placed back in the category of other States by having the general law made applicable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from South Dakota, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Has it or has it not been the uniform custom to grant this right to these Territories when they come in as States?

Mr. MANN. The law of 1891 is general. In some cases it has been granted and in some cases it has not been granted, I will say to the gentleman, as far as that is concerned. I think, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an opportunity to examine this bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14638. An act to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 2756. An act for the relief of L. K. Scott.

H. R. 12398. An act to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain land now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation.

H. R. 16050. An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Company to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

H. R. 6231. An act to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district.

H. R. 9218. An act amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes."

H. R. 12420. An act to extend immediate transportation privileges to the subport of Alburg, in the customs collection district of Vermont.

H. R. 13430. An act to authorize the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the city of Hammond, Ind.

H. R. 14040. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties.

H. R. 14781. An act to authorize Campbell County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across Powells River.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Elijah B. Hammontree, administrator of estate of John Hammontree, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Plymouth Frazier, jr., administrator of estate of Plymouth Frazier, sr., against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James F. Hicks, administrator of estate of Larkin Clark, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to authorize the construction of a road and bridges in Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending modification of agreement with the Red Lake Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 966), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10540) to amend section 73 of the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 968), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DRAPER, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11560) relating to unpaid Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank deposits, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 969), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16073) to authorize the town of Edgecomb, Lincoln County, Me., to maintain a free bridge across tide waters, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 971), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16621) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Cherokee Shoals, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 972), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16749) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River in the State of Pennsylvania by the Liberty Bridge Company," approved March 2, 1907, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 973), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16955) to extend the time for building a bridge across the Red River at Shreveport, La., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 974), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 120) authorizing the Secretary of War to apply the unexpended balance of the donation made by the citizens of Dallas, Tex., under the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905, to work in construction of Lock and Dam No. 2 in section 1 of Trinity River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 975), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1815) for the relief of the estate of D. S. Phelan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 967), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12499) for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, United States Navy, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 970), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16738) to provide for the preparation of plans for a memorial amphitheater at Arlington, Va., and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan (by request): A bill (H. R. 17410) to create a bureau of safety to passengers on interstate lines of railways and to provide a means of gathering data of causes, the extent and nature of accidents, together with inspection of roads, cars, operatives, and signal service thereon, and a penalty for violation of this act—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17411) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the powers of a public-service commission—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KIMBALL: A bill (H. R. 17412) for the construction of an addition to the United States post-office and public building in the city of Lexington, State of Kentucky, and for repairs and alterations to the present building—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 17413) to increase compensation of rural mail carriers, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 17414) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Burlington, in the State of New Jersey—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17415) to provide for the erection of a bronze statue to the memory of the late Samuel J. Tilden at Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 17416) for the promotion, retirement, and pay of certain men of the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORNES: A bill (H. R. 17417) providing for the survey of a ship canal from Benton Harbor, on Lake Michigan, to Toledo, on Lake Erie—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 17418) increasing the limit of cost of the public building at Newbern, N. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17419) to improve and fortify Fort Macon, N. C.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17420) appropriating the sum of $10,000 for repairs and improvement of the roadway to the national cemetery at Newbern, N. C.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: A bill (H. R. 17421) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify certain lands to the State of Kansas—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PRINCE: A bill (H. R. 17422) to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 17423) to define vagrancy in the District of Columbia and to provide penalties therefor—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GODWIN: A bill (H. R. 17424) for the establishment of a Croatan normal college near Pembroke, in Robeson County, N. C.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GOULDEN: A bill (H. R. 17425) to increase the efficiency of the public service—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17426) to amend section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LARRINAGA: A bill (H. R. 17427) to provide for the payment for certain property or vested rights of the old notaries public of Porto Rico, acquired by them from the Crown of Spain for a money consideration, and of which properties said notaries were deprived by the act of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico of January 31, 1901—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 17428) to increase the limit of cost of a public building at Ruston, La.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 17429) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square No. 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GODWIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 141) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the subject of drainage in the Sixth Congressional District of North Carolina—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BURTON of Ohio: Resolution (H. Res. 251) amending Rule XI of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 252) authorizing the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to employ an additional annual assistant clerk—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. FULTON: Memorial from the State of Oklahoma, relative to the settlers on Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache lands in that State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PATTERSON: Memorial of the legislature of South Carolina, requesting the Senators and Congressmen from South Carolina to advocate national aid for drainage—to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 17430) granting a pension to George Leihy—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: A bill (H. R. 17431) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Burch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17432) granting a pension to Emma Attlebarger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 17433) granting an increase of pension to Robert Fevurly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEDE: A bill (H. R. 17434) granting an increase of pension to William F. Butters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17435) granting an increase of pension to James B. Geggie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE: A bill (H. R. 17436) granting an increase of pension to George W. Given—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: A bill (H. R. 17437) granting a pension to Pearl Newcomb—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPRON: A bill (H. R. 17438) granting an increase of pension to Horace Stillman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17439) granting an increase of pension to Clark Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17440) granting an increase of pension to Philogene M. Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 17441) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Hilliker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 17442) for the relief of Sallie E. Barnes, widow of Joseph Barnes, late of Gilmore, Okla.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17443) granting an increase of pension to Falis Caston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCKRAN: A bill (H. R. 17444) granting a pension to James N. Skiff—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURRIER: A bill (H. R. 17445) granting an increase of pension to Thomas F. Leahy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 17446) to remove the restrictions upon the alienation, sale, incumbrance, or taxation of certain lands of Arthur Armstrong, a citizen of the Cherokee Nation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 17447) granting an increase of pension to Martin P. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: A bill (H. R. 17448) granting a pension to Lucy A. Emerson—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FASSETT: A bill (H. R. 17449) granting an increase of pension to Philip Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17450) granting a pension to Frank J. Russell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 17451) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Locke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17452) granting an increase of pension to James K. Brewer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 17453) granting an increase of pension to Rollin R. Hotchkiss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 17454) to remove the charge of desertion from the military records of Jefferson Beeman and to grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17455) to remove the charge of desertion from the military records of J. M. Neal and to grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GARNER: A bill (H. R. 17456) granting a pension to Mary Meeler—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GODWIN: A bill (H. R. 17457) for the relief of the estate of William J. Fountain—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOULDEN: A bill (H. R. 17458) for the relief of the heirs of Mary E. Neale—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARDWICK: A bill (H. R. 17459) for the relief of the heirs of Russell W. Johnson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HEFLIN: A bill (H. R. 17460) for the relief of the estate of James McDonough, deceased, late of Chambers County, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17461) for the relief of Benjamin F. Rea—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17462) for the relief of W. R. Hall, of Weoka, Elmore County, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 17463) granting an increase of pension to Gustavus P. M. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 17464) granting arrears of pension to Julia P. Bate—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17465) for the relief of the estate of W. H. Boyers and Mrs. Elizabeth Boyers, née Soloman—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17466) granting a pension to Jane Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JACKSON: A bill (H. R. 17467) to equalize the pension of Edward D. Bates from March, 1883, up to the time of the special act granting him $24 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17468) granting a pension to James Moran—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17469) granting a pension to William A. Bell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17470) to correct the military record of Andrew Airey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17471) granting a pension to Clarence L. Northrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17472) for the relief of John H. Cox, surviving partner of John H. Cox and John H. Ford, copartners, trading as Ford, Cox & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 17473) granting pensionable status to the survivors of the First Regiment of Kentucky State Capital Guards and to their widows and minor children—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 17474) for the relief of Gilbert Yates—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17475) for the relief of Peter Daniel—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17476) for the relief of Wesley Row—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17477) granting an increase of pension to William Pinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17478) granting a pension to Anna Phipps—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17479) to correct the military record of David B. Kimbrell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17480) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary Phillips—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LILLEY: A bill (H. R. 17481) granting an increase of pension to Michael Kavanaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 17482) granting an increase of pension to Franklin H. Northrup—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 17483) granting an increase of pension to T. R. Hobbs—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOUSER: A bill (H. R. 17484) granting an increase of pension to James F. Ellis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 17485) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Snoke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 17486) granting a pension to Mary A. Meehan—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 17487) to correct the military record of John Stewart—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17488) to correct the military record of John Daly—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17489) granting an increase of pension to George Henson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17490) granting an increase of pension to John Stambaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 17491) for the relief of Samuel H. Yarbrough and estate of John Jones, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17492) for the relief of heirs of Andrew C. Legg, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: A bill (H. R. 17493) granting an increase of pension to Humphrey Roberts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: A bill (H. R. 17494) granting an increase of pension to Merritt D. En Earl—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17495) granting an increase of pension to John M. Quay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 17496) for the relief of the trustees of Salem Church, Wayne County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOU VELLE: A bill (H. R. 17497) granting an increase of pension to John J. Bell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WALDO: A bill (H. R. 17498) granting a pension to Johanna Steinborn—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17499) to correct the military record of John Thomas—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEISSE: A bill (H. R. 17500) granting a pension to Anna Fick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOLF: A bill (H. R. 17501) granting an increase of pension to Joseph J. Peters, alias James H. Donohue—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17502) for the relief of Elijah H. Johnson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of Local Union No. 17, International Stereotypers and Electrotypers' Union, of Washington, D. C., for removal of duty on white paper, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Pride of Massachusetts Lodge, No. 181, O. B. A., of Boston, against legislation restricting immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of New York Post-Office Benevolent Association, for increase of salaries of laborers in post-offices of Greater New York and Brooklyn—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Also, petition of Merchant Tailors' National Protective Association of America, for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Indiana Live Stock Breeders' Association, for legislation to produce better markets for agricultural products, especially live stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of National German-American Alliance, for investigation of immigration question—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of A. T. Fox, of Duluth, Minn., for establishment of an asset currency—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Chicago Local, No. 1, of Telegraphers' Union of America, for investigation of conduct of the telegraph business in United States—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Columbus Board of Trade, of Columbus, Ga., for appropriation for river and harbor improvements—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Michigan Commandery, Military Order of Loyal Legion of United States, of Detroit, Mich., for a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Concordia Singing Society and 360 similar organizations, against any legislation restricting interstate commerce in beer, wine, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ADAMSON: Petition of Chicago citizens and Chicago Union, No. 1, Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, for investigation of affairs of the telegraph companies—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BEDE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James B. Geggie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of William F. Butters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Petition of National Board of Trade, of Washington, D. C., January 21–23, 1908, for legislation to reestablish a merchant marine with states of South America—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BOOHER: Petitions of retail merchants of Savannah, St. Joseph, and St. Louis; St. Joseph Commercial Travelers' Association; W. W. Wheeler Dry Goods Company, of St. Joseph; Brown Shoe Company, of St. Louis; St. Louis Exchange, and others, all of the State of Missouri, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURKE: Petition of John S. Nicholson, for H. R. 15945, to increase efficiency of the Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of Weiler Brothers, of Pittsburg, Pa., for the Kittredge copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Samuel J. Graham, for S. 1238 and H. R. 5489, to reimburse estate of George Washington—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of Local Union No. 403, Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters, of Chester, Pa., for building battle ships in United States navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Joseph Elkinton and J. Passmore Elkinton, voters of Pennsylvania, against building more battle ships—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Chauncey R. Lathrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for permanent tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of H. J. Swift, of Albany, N. Y., against consolidation of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of United Harbor, No. 1, American Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots, favoring H. R. 10458, with proposed amendment for an appeal to supervising inspector, etc.—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of National Funeral Directors' Association of United States, against mode of burial at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CAPRON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Horace Stillman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Bricklayers and Masons' Union No. 1, of Providence, R. I., for building battle ships at navy yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petitions of International Photoengravers' Union No. 39, of Providence, R. I., and International Typographical Union No. 212, of Pawtucket, R. I., for removal of duty on white paper—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of town council of North Kingston, R. I., for bill increasing efficiency of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Robert M. Malone, of Pascoag, R. I., against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Musicians' Union No. 262, of Woonsocket, R. I., against competition by Government musicians with civilians—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of Key West, Fla., for a daily mail from Key West to mainland—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce of Key West for certain amendments to laws for protection of the sponge beds of United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of Woman's Club of De Land, Fla., for forest reservations in White Mountains and southern Appalachian Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against Aldrich bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Clardy Chapel, Local No. 107, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Hamilton County, Fla., for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of O. Pierre Havens, photographer, of Jacksonville, Fla., against certain amendments to the copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Job Harriman and A. R. Halston, of Los Angeles, Cal., opposing certain amendments to certain treaties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., advocating H. R. 4375 and H. R. 4377, for pension for widows of Dr. Jesse W. Lazear and Maj. James Carroll—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Woman's Club of Miami, Fla., for H. R. 10457—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Washington County, Fla., Union, of Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COOK of Pennsylvania: Petition of George E. Bartol, of Philadelphia Bourse, for S. 25 and H. R. 6169, for retirement of life-saving officers and crews—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CURRIER: Petition of D. T. White, John W. Folsom, and a large number of other citizens of New Hampshire, for a national commission of highways—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of John Sedgwick Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Hampshire, for the Sherwood pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of Philadelphia Bourse, favoring provision for retirement of certain members of the Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Petition of Chamber of Commerce, of Erie, Pa., and Allied Agricultural Organization of Pennsylvania, for H. R. 534, relative to technical education in agriculture, etc.—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Julia Ryan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: Petition of Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, for appropriation for drainage and irrigation experiment stations—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of John E. Perkins Post, No. 98, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wisconsin, against consolidation of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for a permanent tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of J. D. Reynolds (H. R. 4266)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of H. J. Swift, commander department Grand Army of the Republic of Albany, N. Y., against consolidation of pension agencies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Buffalo (N. Y.) Oil, Paint, and Varnish Company, against legislation toward regulating sale of paints—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of New York Merchants' Association, of New York City, for tariff commission (S. 3163)—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Encampment No. 1, Union Veterans' Legion, of Pittsburg, Pa., for H. R. 4930, for pensions for prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Branch 119, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, against Tillman bill (S. 2926)—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GARNER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary Meeler—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILHAMS: Petition of La Grange Horticultural Society, for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of Lake Seamen's Union, Buffalo, N. Y., for H. R. 14941, relative to insufficiency of crews of steam vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York City, for a tariff comission (S. 3163)—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of Perry & Breckon, against amendment of copyright bill inimical to photographers—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of E. F. Gwynn, for H. R. 428 (Federal registration of automobiles)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, paper to accompany bills (S. 1238 and H. R. 5489) for relief of estate of George Washington—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, petition of Thomas S. Clarkson, for return of collateral inheritance tax to Stevens Institute of Technology—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of Melville H. Freds and Henry A. Harkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRONNA: Petition of citizens of Northwood, N. Dak., for Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against the Aldrich emergency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of Commercial Club, Bismarck, N. Dak., against Crumpacker bill, H. R. 7597 (census on strictly civil-service basis)—to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Tower City, N. Dak., for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Commercial Club, Bismarck, N. Dak., for amendment to section 4 of act to regulate commerce approved June 29, 1906—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARDWICK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary L. Walker—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Russell W. Johnson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HELM: Paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of Henry Cohen—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOLLIDAY: Petition of quarterly meeting of Society of Friends, for peaceable settlement of international affairs—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charles H. Payne, jr. (previously referred to Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: Petition of S. G. Kimball et al., of department of Grand Army of the Republic, Washington, D. C., for change of reference in committee of H. R. 16738, for memorial amphitheater at Arlington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bills for relief of William H. Spradlin, Mary R. Tyree, and Elizabeth Boyers—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ADDISON D. JAMES: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Marion Davis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES: Paper to accompany bill for relief of T. J. Caskey (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Petition of citizens of Washington, against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Commercial Club of Walla Walla, Wash., against census bill, H. R. 7597—to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of Seattle Commercial Club, for S. 27, for equalization of pay of Army and Navy and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of Typographical Union No. 21, of San Francisco, for repeal of duty on white paper, wood pulp, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELIHER: Petition of Springfield (Mass.) Board of Trade, for improvement of the consular service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Local Union No. 1, Boston Newspaper Writers of International Typographical Union, and Local Union No. 16, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, for repeal of duty on white paper and wood pulp—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LANGLEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Greenville Tackitt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LILLEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Michael Kavanaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUD: Petition of Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of Michigan, for a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Noble Post, No. 369, Grand Army of the Republic, for the Sherwood pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Kansas State Militia—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOUSER: Petition of citizens of Wyandott County, Ohio, favoring the nine-hour law on railways—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Central Labor Union of Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio, for construction of battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petition of Stamford Harlan Company, against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of Woman Suffrage Association of Kenesaw, Nebr., Ladies' Guild of Presbyterian Church, Missionary Society of Free Baptist Church, and Ladies' Aid Society of Methodist Episcopal Church, for amendment of Constitution prohibiting disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Nebraska State board of health, for legislation to provide new rules and regulations for quarantine for contagious diseases—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. NYE: Petition of Rev. Henry Peyton Cooper and Rev. William Crosby Lyon, of Casselton, N. Dak., for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Cooper Union, No. 75, of Minneapolis, Minn., for building battle ships at navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Northwood, N. Dak., for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OLCOTT: Petition of R. E. Bell and others, relative to schools in the District of Columbia, indorsing board of education and the superintendent, A. T. Stuart—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PATTERSON: Papers to accompany bills for relief of heirs of Daniel P. Jenkins and heirs of T. B. Tripp—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PEARRE: Petition of W. B. Brown and other citizens of Montgomery County, Md., for legislation appropriating money for building highways—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of Moorfield Story and Erving Winslow, favoring independence for the Philippines—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Papers to accompany bills for relief of estates of Andrew C. Legg, Samuel H. Yarbrough, and John Jones—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of John Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIORDAN: Petition of F. A. Ringler Company, of New York, against the Aldrich currency bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SHEPPARD: Petitions and letters from individuals and societies, urging restoration of motto "In God we trust" to the coins—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petition of Company L, First Connecticut National Guard, of Willimantic, Conn., favoring the militia bill—to the Committee on Militia.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Petition of Union No. 36, Steam Engineers, of St. Paul, Minn., for construction of battle ships in navy-yards—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Minnesota Retail Hardware Association, for repeal of Nelson bankruptcy act—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of Pastors' Union of Detroit, Mich., for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of National Funeral Directors' Association against mode of burial at sea—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of American National Live Stock Association, for legislation securing from railways an adequate freight-car service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: Paper to accompany bill for relief of trustees of Salem Church of Wayne County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petition of Baptist Churches of Detroit, for the Littlefield original-package bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of United Commercial Travelers' Association, against a parcels-post law, but favoring legislation along line of Postmaster-General's recommendation—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WALLACE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mrs. Virginia Terrell and Julia D. Reynolds (H. R. 2247)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Horace F. Bemis—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WOOD: Petition of J. R. Jarvis and William S. Aldrich, for return of collateral inheritance tax to Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J. (H. R. 11562)—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, petition of directors of Vessel Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, for H. R. 15945, for increased efficiency of the personnel of the Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 19, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announces the appointment of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to read Washington's Farewell Address on the 22d instant, pursuant to the order of the Senate of January 24, 1901.

TRADE CONDITIONS IN ECUADOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting pursuant to law, the report of Special Agent Charles M. Pepper on trade conditions in Ecuador, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th ultimo, certain information relative to the number of national banking associations that have been placed in the hands of receivers as insolvent since January 1, 1893, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. TILLMAN, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

In the cause of the Deacons of the Missionary Baptist Church at Powder Springs, Ga., v. United States;

In the cause of the First Christian Church of Mexico, Mo., v. United States;

In the cause of the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Paris, Va., v. United States;

In the cause of Caledonian Lodge, No. 4, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., v. United States;

In the cause of the Trustees of the Frederick Presbyterian Church, of Frederick, Md., v. United States;

In the cause of the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Upperville, Va., v. United States;

In the cause of the Trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church (colored) of Huntsville, Ala., v. United States;

In the cause of Moyland C. Fox, executor of the estate of Joab Lawrence, deceased, v. United States;

In the cause of Lucy A. Dibble, administratrix of Sylvester Dibble, deceased, v. United States;

In the cause of the Trustees of Dardanelle Baptist Church v. United States; and

In the cause of the Trustees of Mountain Creek Baptist Church, of Hamilton County, Tenn., v. United States.

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 417) to extend the time for completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2420) granting an increase of pension to Margaret K. Hern, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 603. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. M. La Pierre;

H. R. 1034. An act granting an increase of pension to James Carroll;

H. R. 1037. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward A. Russell;

H. R. 1055. An act granting an increase of pension to Joel F. Overholser;

H. R. 1059. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannegan C. Norvell;

H. R. 1062. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Weaver;

H. R. 1063. An act granting an increase of pension to Nicholas S. Chrisman;

H. R. 1215. An act granting an increase of pension to Phebe A. Barteaux;

H. R. 1484. An act granting an increase of pension to Marshall W. Rogers;

H. R. 1496. An act granting an increase of pension to Elbert M. Watts;

H. R. 1508. An act granting an increase of pension to William M. Jordan;

H. R. 1590. An act granting an increase of pension to Nelson Wolfley;

H. R. 1673. An act granting an increase of pension to George Athey;

H. R. 1901. An act granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy;

H. R. 2175. An act granting an increase of pension to Mittie Choate;

H. R. 2200. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Lang;

H. R. 2204. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Risser;

H. R. 2350. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard P. McGrath;

H. R. 2354. An act granting an increase of pension to Amos Foust;

H. R. 2355. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Donaldson;

H. R. 2535. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Evans;

H. R. 2648. An act granting an increase of pension to Ellison Gilbert;

H. R. 2711. An act granting an increase of pension to Simon Levi;

H. R. 2846. An act granting an increase of pension to Linsay C. Jones;

H. R. 2855. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Hurst;

H. R. 2863. An act granting an increase of pension to John Findlay;

H. R. 2873. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Rushaloo;

H. R. 2955. An act granting an increase of pension to James C. Booth;

H. R. 2961. An act granting an increase of pension to Hazzard P. Gavitt;

H. R. 2999. An act granting an increase of pension to George P. Mattison;

H. R. 3164. An act granting a pension to Osiah Attison;

H. R. 3229. An act granting an increase of pension to William McCue;

H. R. 3232. An act granting an increase of pension to John Foster;

H. R. 3243. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles D. Copeland;

H. R. 3244. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer L. Briggs;

H. R. 3329. An act granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Kendall;

H. R. 3339. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Neal;

H. R. 3350. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward M. Lee;

H. R. 3491. An act granting an increase of pension to William Hall;

H. R. 3493. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi Nicholson;

H. R. 3610. An act granting a pension to James M. Fitch;

H. R. 3611. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander McNabb;

H. R. 3614. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Boyer;

H. R. 3641. An act granting an increase of pension to John N. Dickerson;

H. R. 3802. An act granting an increase of pension to Andreas Schmidt;

H. R. 3845. An act granting an increase of pension to Philip Ebright;

H. R. 4072. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Keffer;

H. R. 4094. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Southworth;

H. R. 4102. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. C. Davis;
H. R. 4103. An act granting an increase of pension to David M. Myers;
H. R. 4125. An act granting an increase of pension to Judson P. Adams;
H. R. 4128. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac W. Corgill;
H. R. 4149. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Armstrong;
H. R. 4170. An act granting an increase of pension to Bernhard Herber;
H. R. 4265. An act granting a pension to John W. Hudson;
H. R. 4290. An act granting an increase of pension to Howard F. Hess;
H. R. 4295. An act granting an increase of pension to John Maguire;
H. R. 4351. An act granting a pension to Osborne Eddy;
H. R. 4355. An act granting a pension to John M. Hoisington;
H. R. 4387. An act granting an increase of pension to Margret Orst;
H. R. 4416. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Wells;
H. R. 4490. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Thompson;
H. R. 4497. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander Depuy;
H. R. 4522. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Hanson;
H. R. 4538. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Read;
H. R. 4539. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Pressley;
H. R. 4651. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelia H. Keyes;
H. R. 4663. An act granting a pension to James J. Callan;
H. R. 4674. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Fancher;
H. R. 4678. An act granting an increase of pension to David L. Arwine;
H. R. 4758. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin P. Gurney;
H. R. 4934. A act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Hiram Woods;
H. R. 5347. An act granting an increase of pension to William M. Stevenson;
H. R. 5382. An act granting an increase of pension to John Bowen;
H. R. 5422. An act granting an increase of pension to William Dunlap;
H. R. 5450. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin E. Breed;
H. R. 5636. An act granting an increase of pension to Davis E. James;
H. R. 5639. An act granting an increase of pension to George S. Bennett;
H. R. 5764. An act granting a pension to Mary O'Brien;
H. R. 5803. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Harter;
H. R. 5868. An act granting a pension to Jane Dorsey;
H. R. 5880. An act granting an increase of pension to Addi C. Pindell;
H. R. 6035. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Fox;
H. R. 6038. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin May;
H. R. 6057. An act granting an increase of pension to Katharine Seiberlich;
H. R. 6064. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Beck;
H. R. 6065. An act granting an increase of pension to George M. Coykendall;
H. R. 6070. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. Moyer;
H. R. 6195. An act to authorize A. J. Smith and his associates to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala.;
H. R. 6487. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander W. Brownlie;
H. R. 6492. An act granting an increase of pension to Irvin Austin;
H. R. 6505. An act granting an increase of pension to John N. Kundert;
H. R. 6538. An act granting an increase of pension to Patrick Grady;
H. R. 6641. An act granting an increase of pension to James A. Cobb;
H. R. 6647. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. McCoy;
H. R. 6688. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac Steely;
H. R. 6736. An act granting an increase of pension to Rosenia Writer;
H. R. 6819. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Clark;
H. R. 6866. An act granting an increase of pension to Ezra Prouty;
H. R. 6875. An act granting an increase of pension to James S. Walsh;
H. R. 6876. An act granting a pension to Carrie A. Chaplin;
H. R. 6900. An act granting an increase of pension to Hiram Spear;
H. R. 7012. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Nelson;
H. R. 7060. An act granting an increase of pension to Simon White;
H. R. 7223. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Keefe;
H. R. 7288. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. Banks;
H. R. 7300. An act granting a pension to Magdalena Hansman;
H. R. 7307. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin L. Shepard.
H. R. 7325. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Chisam;
H. R. 7431. An act granting a pension to Florence K. Patterson;
H. R. 7432. An act granting a pension to Worthington Fringer;
H. R. 7439. An act granting an increase of pension to Joshua Gill;
H. R. 7450. An act granting an increase of pension to Eugene Lattin;
H. R. 7522. An act granting a pension to Paul W. Draheim;
H. R. 7530. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Brown;
H. R. 7781. An act granting an increase of pension to Phineas P. Trowbridge;
H. R. 7790. An act granting an increase of pension to Milo L. Pierce;
H. R. 7792. An act granting a pension to Susan A. Jackson;
H. R. 7815. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Patterson;
H. R. 7879. An act granting an increase of pension to Hiram Still;
H. R. 7893. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Toncray;
H. R. 7946. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brogan;
H. R. 8053. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Cozine;
H. R. 8061. An act granting an increase of pension to Archibald Huston;
H. R. 8094. An act granting an increase of pension to Leander Wagers.
H. R. 8142. An act granting an increase of pension to Wilson Graham;
H. R. 8145. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Hackett;
H. R. 8222. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Simpson;
H. R. 8332. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Uhles;
H. R. 8385. An act granting an increase of pension to Jackson Weathers;
H. R. 8427. An act granting an increase of pension to John Gaffney;
H. R. 8489. An act granting a pension to Adlade Holland;
H. R. 8548. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph T. Walker;
H. R. 8610. An act granting an increase of pension to John Shields;
H. R. 8629. An act granting a pension to David T. Kirby;
H. R. 8640. An act granting an increase of pension to Barbara Haase;
H. R. 8644. An act granting an increase of pension to Ida W. Maples;
H. R. 8654. An act granting an increase of pension to Angelina Phillips;

H. R. 8672. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaiah Fowler;
H. R. 8745. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelius W. Smith;
H. R. 8747. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred Jervais;
H. R. 8829. An act granting an increase of pension to Milton Frame;
H. R. 8970. An act granting an increase of pension to Anthon W. Mortenson;
H. R. 8978. An act granting an increase of pension to Marquis D. Mason;
H. R. 8999. An act granting an increase of pension to John Hancock;
H. R. 9311. An act granting an increase of pension to George Harkless;
H. R. 9331. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis H. Britton;
H. R. 9390. An act granting an increase of pension to Nancy Woodruff;
H. R. 9560. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Keys;
H. R. 9612. An act granting an increase of pension to Emil Christian;
H. R. 9647. An act granting an increase of pension to William W. Mayne;
H. R. 9695. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert C. Lee;
H. R. 9748. An act granting an increase of pension to Herbert C. Mattoon;
H. R. 9768. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Atkinson;
H. R. 9789. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Hallam;
H. R. 9811. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel H. Sumner;
H. R. 9813. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Williams;
H. R. 9824. An act granting an increase of pension to William Hines;
H. R. 9837. An act granting an increase of pension to Penelope L. Newman;
H. R. 9983. An act granting an increase of pension to James Burke;
H. R. 10018. An act granting an increase of pension to Ophelia J. Gordon;
H. R. 10040. An act granting an increase of pension to Milton Williams;
H. R. 10041. An act granting an increase of pension to Jenkin Evans;
H. R. 10100. An act granting an increase of pension to Harrison G. Mace;
H. R. 10163. An act granting an increase of pension to Myron A. Hawks;
H. R. 10307. An act granting an increase of pension to Susie Harkey;
H. R. 10436. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Hill;
H. R. 10442. An act granting an increase of pension to John Sullivan;
H. R. 10692. An act granting an increase of pension to David H. House;
H. R. 10698. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Lyons;
H. R. 10716. An act granting an increase of pension to August Gehb;
H. R. 10723. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. White;
H. R. 10753. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael P. Donley;
H. R. 10763. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Milliken;
H. R. 10800. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Gardner;
H. R. 10824. An act granting an increase of pension to Caswell Lovitt;
H. R. 10855. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances A. Payne;
H. R. 10869. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Tanner;
H. R. 10930. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert H. Barton;
H. R. 10949. An act granting an increase of pension to Leonard C. Hill;
H. R. 10954. An act granting an increase of pension to Russell Arnold;
H. R. 11010. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Florye;
H. R. 11043. An act granting an increase of pension to Elisha Cole;
H. R. 11055. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Price;
H. R. 11102. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Wells;
H. R. 11120. An act granting an increase of pension to John T. Hogg, jr.;
H. R. 11217. An act granting an increase of pension to Emeline M. Strong;
H. R. 11250. An act granting a pension to Louis P. Sothoron;
H. R. 11282. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. McCormick;
H. R. 11286. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Stephens;
H. R. 11413. An act granting an increase of pension to Noah Jones;
H. R. 11471. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Spackman;
H. R. 11522. An act granting an increase of pension to John Sonia;
H. R. 11679. An act granting an increase of pension to Celina C. Fleming;
H. R. 11868. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander Hyde;
H. R. 11891. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert Munger;
H. R. 11911. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Beckley;
H. R. 11937. An act granting an increase of pension to William A. Couch;
H. R. 11966. An act granting an increase of pension to Sophia Winters;
H. R. 12027. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Stedman;
H. R. 12028. An act granting an increase of pension to Patrick Dolan;
H. R. 12034. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Crowell;
H. R. 12081. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Kellogg;
H. R. 12234. An act granting an increase of pension to Martin V. Monroe;
H. R. 12252. An act granting an increase of pension to William B. Swisher;
H. R. 12280. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Pace;
H. R. 12395. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Clutter;
H. R. 12491. An act granting an increase of pension to Griffith T. Murphy;
H. R. 12534. An act granting an increase of pension to Harvey Fowler;
H. R. 12616. An act granting an increase of pension to Horace A. Rexford;
H. R. 12619. An act granting a pension to Hannah M. Crowley;
H. R. 12719. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Searl;
H. R. 12735. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Stump;
H. R. 12739. An act granting an increase of pension to Lemuel L. Kelso;
H. R. 12766. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Woodruff;
H. R. 12809. An act granting an increase of pension to Carlton Cross;
H. R. 12810. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael H. Glass;
H. R. 12811. An act granting an increase of pension to John Riley;
H. R. 12849. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin B. Hardman;
H. R. 12936. An act granting an increase of pension to Cynthia A. Benson;
H. R. 12947. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Pearce;
H. R. 12950. An act granting an increase of pension to Hylas S. Moore;
H. R. 12970. An act granting an increase of pension to James McConnaha;

H. R. 12990. An act granting an increase of pension to Jerome Long;
H. R. 12992. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Coughlin;
H. R. 13065. An act granting an increase of pension to John E. Lapsley;
H. R. 13137. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Shoffner;
H. R. 13152. An act granting an increase of pension to John Sain;
H. R. 13175. An act granting an increase of pension to David Miller;
H. R. 13190. An act granting an increase of pension to John Loughmiller;
H. R. 13226. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Derland;
H. R. 13245. An act granting an increase of pension to Martin V. B. Davis;
H. R. 13336. An act granting a pension to Regina Albert;
H. R. 13355. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Slemmons;
H. R. 13372. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Seagrist;
H. R. 13391. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen Lyons;
H. R. 13683. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Treadwell;
H. R. 13708. An act granting an increase of pension to William Goulding;
H. R. 13713. An act granting an increase of pension to Anton Geiser;
H. R. 13735. An act to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans;
H. R. 13783. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Murray;
H. R. 13889. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Foster;
H. R. 13916. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Bockins;
H. R. 13920. An act granting an increase of pension to Fernando D. Stone;
H. R. 13930. An act granting an increase of pension to Caroline Morse;
H. R. 13945. An act granting a pension to Abbie E. Barr;
H. R. 13951. An act granting an increase of pension to William Herbert;
H. R. 13962. An act granting an increase of pension to John D. Wells;
H. R. 14199. An act granting an increase of pension to George Walton;
H. R. 14226. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Child;
H. R. 14232. An act granting an increase of pension to Reuben R. Pitman;
H. R. 14310. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Porter;
H. R. 14314. An act granting an increase of pension to Randolph Snell;
H. R. 14316. An act granting an increase of pension to Dewitt Eldred;
H. R. 14338. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliza D. Ramey;
H. R. 14363. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Schader;
H. R. 14427. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin Morehead;
H. R. 14453. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Taylor;
H. R. 14474. An act granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. Walker;
H. R. 14477. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Carr;
H. R. 14532. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Hawley;
H. R. 14570. An act granting a pension to George W. Eggleston;
H. R. 14584. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcus T. Camp;
H. R. 14606. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis L. Smith;
H. R. 14621. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Sorrell, alias Thomas A. Martin.
H. R. 14632. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Ten Eyck;
H. R. 14671. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Johnson;
H. R. 14716. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Waters;
H. R. 14724. An act granting an increase of pension to Rush Patterson;
H. R. 14747. An act granting an increase of pension to William B. Haines;
H. R. 14798. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter C. Parker;
H. R. 14807. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelius D. McCombs;
H. R. 14818. An act granting an increase of pension to Roswell L. Nason;
H. R. 14829. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Black;
H. R. 14844. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Wheeler;
H. R. 14869. An act granting an increase of pension to Carlos L. Buzzell;
H. R. 14906. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Willis;
H. R. 14916. An act granting an increase of pension to James Tenbrook;
H. R. 14958. An act granting an increase of pension to John L. Bennett;
H. R. 14969. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham H. Tompkins;
H. R. 14978. An act granting an increase of pension to Josiah Dixon;
H. R. 14982. An act granting a pension to Missouri L. Herron;
H. R. 14988. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Farley;
H. R. 14989. An act granting an increase of pension to Jerome King;
H. R. 15037. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert Falcon;
H. R. 15063. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander Mattison;
H. R. 15068. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Marble;
H. R. 15071. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Reed;
H. R. 15158. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis S. Fletcher;
H. R. 15167. An act granting an increase of pension to Titus W. Allen;
H. R. 15193. An act granting an increase of pension to Milo Brewster;
H. R. 15280. An act granting an increase of pension to Ezra Taylor;
H. R. 15305. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward B. Wright;
H. R. 15356. An act granting a pension to Mary Herndon;
H. R. 15380. An act granting an increase of pension to Cleanthus Burnett;
H. R. 15401. An act granting an increase of pension to Louisa J. Long;
H. R. 15429. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. Moore;
H. R. 15475. An act granting an increase of pension to Fannie T. Shipley;
H. R. 15538. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Fairchild;
H. R. 15579. An act granting an increase of pension to Alonzo C. Abbey;
H. R. 15616. An act granting an increase of pension to Hugh Irwin;
H. R. 15686. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Turner;
H. R. 15688. An act granting a pension to Martha A. Elliott;
H. R. 15722. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Betts;
H. R. 15821. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Larkin;
H. R. 15927. An act granting an increase of pension to William McGovern;
H. R. 16016. An act granting an increase of pension to Martin L. Bruce;
H. R. 16019. An act granting a pension to Grace S. Wood;
H. R. 16020. An act granting an increase of pension to Moses T. Kelly;
H. R. 16194. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. Paris;

H. R. 16237. An act granting an increase of pension to Amanda Bonnell;

H. R. 16308. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel C. Foster;

H. R. 16335. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Tomlin;

H. R. 16349. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Upchurch;

H. R. 16394. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Forman;

H. R. 16533. An act granting an increase of pension to James S. Anderson; and

H. R. 16610. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael Conniff.

The foregoing pension bills received this day from the House of Representatives were subsequently read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of sundry organizations of Mobile, Ala., Wheeling, W. Va., Johnson, Nebr., Washington, D. C., Manchester, N. H., Providence, R. I., Holyoke, Mass., Cumberland and Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, Bellingham, Wash., and Henderson, Ky., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of Local Union No. 336, International Typographical Union, of Oneida, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Johnstown, Kingston, Buffalo, Auburn, Troy, Bergen, Albany, Utica, Schenectady, Rochester, Bardonia, and Green Island, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transporation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the United Trade and Labor Council of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to crews on steam vessels, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Martinsburg, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called "Sherwood pension bill," granting more liberal rates of pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Webster, N. H.; Washington, D. C.; Goshen, Ind.; Springfield, Ohio, and Woodstown, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Dolliver bill" to regulate and control the management of public education in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NIXON presented memorials of the Elko County Cattle Association, the Eastern Nevada Wool Growers' Association, and of the Chamber of Commerce of Elko, all in the State of Nevada, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the control of grazing lands in the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 105, Typographical Union, of Goldfield, Nev., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Council of Peru, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of the proposed new battle ships at the Government navy-yards, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented memorials of sundry organizations of Chicago, Alton, East St. Louis, and Forest Park, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELKINS presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 5324) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bunker Hill, W. Va., which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of the Maricopa County Commercial Club, of Phoenix, Ariz., praying for the passage of the so-called "Culberson bill," to require railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to promptly furnish cars and other transportation facilities, and to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to make rules and regulations with respect thereto, and to further regulate commerce among the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Local Union No. 1, Newspaper Writers' Association, of Boston, Mass., and a petition of Local Union No. 16, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, of Boston, Mass., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of Local Grange No. 231, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dorset, Vt., praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," and also for the establishment of postal savings banks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the permanent committee on temperance of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Captain Charles V. Gridley Camp, No. 94, Sons of Veterans, of Erie, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase and equalize the pay of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue-Cutter Service, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented memorials of the faculty of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore; H. Belfield & Co., of Philadelphia; E. Leitenberger, of Philadelphia; J. P. B. Sinkler, of Philadelphia; J. H. D. Allen, of Laverock; D. B. Janney, of Emilie; W. W. Justice, of Germantown; J. A. Harris, of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia; Dr. G. B. Wood, of Philadelphia; C. E. Gillette, of Philadelphia; E. S. Miller, of Philadelphia; T. C. Potts, of Philadelphia; Rev. Rogers Israel, of Scranton; R. E. Laramy, of Phoenixville; T. H. Morris, of Philadelphia; W. C. Mason, of Philadelphia; M. V. Whelen, of Philadelphia; W. H. Burnett, of Philadelphia; J. P. Morris, of Philadelphia; N. B. Craig, of Philadelphia; Charles Freihofer, of Philadelphia; N. E. Janney, of Philadelphia; E. A. Weimer, of Lebanon; H. P. Bailey, of Philadelphia; H. A. Schulz, of Pittsburg; F. C. Johnson, of Wilkes-Barre; E. E. Jones, of Abington; E. Stewart, of Philadelphia; C. L. Harper, of Philadelphia; Harold Peirce, of Philadelphia; H. M. Fisher, of Jenkintown; D. C. Barrett, of Haverford; C. M. Berger, of Germantown; J. O. Powers, of Philadelphia; J. F. Keator, of Philadelphia; Carter Thompson, of Philadelphia; H. K. Day, of Philadelphia; C. Z. Tyson, of Philadelphia; G. B. Logan, of Pittsburg; F. K. Ployer, of Mechanicsburg; Charles Beck, of Philadelphia; W. D. Lewis, of Philadelphia; W. E. Leeds, of Philadelphia; E. M. Zimmerman, of Philadelphia; P. L. Thompson, of Pittsburg; J. H. Haines, of Philadelphia; E. W. Evans, of Philadelphia; O. T. Mallery, of Philadelphia; Rev. G. H. Ferris, of Philadelphia; J. A. Develin, of Philadelphia; Dr. Samuel Phoads, of Philadelphia; F. R. Cope, jr., of Philadelphia; Herman A. Schultz, of Pittsburg; Stuart Wood, of Philadelphia; Standard Steel Works Company, of Burnham; George Bros., of Pittsburg; William Burnham, of Philadelphia; L. S. Rowe, of Philadelphia; Edgar Dudley Faries, of Philadelphia; Robert D. Jenks, of Philadelphia; M. B. French, of Philadelphia; the Current Events Club, of Holmesburg; S. R. Miller, of Wilkes-Barre; J. F. Hazard, of Philadelphia; Haseltine Smith, of Philadelphia, and W. L. Davis, of Glenshaw, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment without competitive examination of additional clerical force for the taking of the Thirteenth Census, which were referred to the Committee on the Census.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an appropriation of not less than $50,000,000 per annum be made for inland waterway improvements, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 1233, Patrons of Husbandry, of Hartstown, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing that the motto "In God we trust" be placed on $1 pieces coined by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oil City and North East, in the State of Pennsylvania, and of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the creation of a volunteer retired list for the survivors of the civil war, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of Clarence White and sundry other citizens of Rushboro; E. C. Tabor and sundry other citizens of Conneautville; J. H. Reese and sundry other citizens of Norristown; D. H. Nodine and sundry other citizens of Cambridge Springs; A. H. Jones and sundry other citizens of South Montrose; the Dublin Dairy Association, Dublin, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for additional protection to the dairy interests of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Pittsburg Harbor, No. 25, American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of the survivors of the Mississippi River Ram Fleet and Marine Brigade, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented petitions of Iona Grange, East Lemon Grange, Berrysburg Grange, Meiserville Grange, Mayflower Grange, Laurel Hill Grange, Russellville Grange, Glen Hope Grange, East Branch Grange, Summermill Grange, German Grange, Mount Pleasant Grange, Dawson Grange, Tioga Grange, Brokenstraw Grange, West Branch Grange, Donation Grange, New Washington Grange, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; of James Riddle and sundry other citizens of Mahaffey; J. S. Zen and sundry other citizens of Geigers Mills; W. F. Williamson and sundry other citizens of Williamson; F. Livermore and sundry other citizens of Linden; W. B. Hendricks and sundry other citizens of Creamery; E. J. Ackerman and sundry other citizens of Ackermanville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for additional protection to the dairy interests of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TALIAFERRO presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington County, Fla., praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the National Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Washington County, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the present national banking laws and to establish in lieu thereof a national currency in the form of Treasury notes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BULKELEY presented memorials of sundry organizations of Norwich, Ansonia, Meriden, Hartford, Torrington, New Britain, and Stamford, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Stamford and Watertown, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Crumpacker bill" providing for the taking of the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, which were referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Philadelphia Rourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a retired list for the district superintendents, keepers, and crews of the Life-Saving Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, of Washington, D. C., praying for the establishment of postal savings banks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade of Washington, D. C., praying for the ratification of international arbitration treaties, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the capitalization, management, and control of associations and labor engaged in commerce among the several States, Territories, and insular possessions of the United States and with foreign nations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 5398) granting an increase of pension to Richard Carr, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OWEN. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, relative to the withdrawal of certain Choctaw lands from allotment for the purpose of establishing a timber reserve. I move that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

THANKS TO SENATOR BEVERIDGE.

Mr. OWEN. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, being a resolution of thanks to Hon. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE for his work in promoting statehood for Oklahoma. I ask that it may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution 3.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the first legislature of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), representing a million and a half of people of the new State, That we extend to ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE, United States Senator, our heartfelt thanks and sincere appreciation for the noble work rendered as chairman of the Committee on Territories of the United States Senate in securing the passage of the enabling act, thereby making it possible for this great State to be admitted into the American Union: And be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to mail this resolution to Senator ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE, Washington, D. C.

WILLIAM H. MUNCEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
HENRY S. JOHNSTON,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Attest:
C. H. PITTMAN, Chief Clerk.
Attest:
J. I. HOWARD, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 37) disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 486) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Victoria, in the State of Texas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 213) for the relief of S. R. Green, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1617) to quiet title to certain land in Donna Ana County, N. Mex., reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4112) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I submit certain documents which I wish to have printed as a part of the report to accompany the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The documents submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed as a part of the report.

Mr. LODGE. All the documents are attached to the report. I merely suggest that they all be printed in one pamphlet as a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 14th instant, proposing to appropriate $2,000 for separate State and Territorial maps, prepared, or to be prepared, in the General Land Office, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 33) to provide a public park on Georgetown Heights, in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1392) for the relief of Salvador Costa, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4801) granting certain lands in the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, to the Protestant Episcopal Church, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, proposing to appropriate $1,373,643, to enable the Secretary of State to purchase suitable lands and buildings as should comprise and be connected with the consular establishment in China, Japan, and Korea, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported it with amendments and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4196) to provide for the enlargement and improvement of the public building at Elgin, Ill., reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4368) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Wilson, N. C., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5133) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.," reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12401) to legalize a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rice, Minn., reported it without amendment.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the purchase of suitable buildings and grounds at Paris, France, for the use of the embassy, etc., intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MCCUMBER on the 12th instant, intended to be proposed to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 156) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Bellaire, in the State of Ohio, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4248) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Kearney, Nebr., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5492) granting a pension to Emily C. Cummings, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 5493) authorizing the settlement of certain outstanding liabilities of the Government by the issue of new drafts upon the return of drafts heretofore issued representing said liabilities, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5494) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Isaacs, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 5495) to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5496) granting a pension to Francis Redmond; and

A bill (S. 5497) granting a pension to Frederick Carel (with the accompanying papers).

He also introduced a bill (S. 5498) for the relief of the estate of Charles Ruffner, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 5499) granting an increase of pension to Reuben H. Boyce, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5500) for the relief of William D. Graham (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5501) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church at Shepherdstown, W. Va.; and

A bill (S. 5502) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Muses Bottom, W. Va.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5503) granting an increase of pension to W. A. Stewart (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5504) granting an increase of pension to James A. Brians (with accompanying papers).

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5506) granting an increase of pension to John Murray Murch, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5507) to increase the membership of the Philippine Commission, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 5508) to establish a system of postal savings banks, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to say, Mr. President, that this is the postal savings-bank bill favored by officials of the Post-Office Department, and I present it at their request. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5509) for the relief of Mary A. Graham;

A bill (S. 5510) for the relief of the owners of the tug Juno; and

A bill (S. 5511) for the relief of the trustees of Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church of Gettysburg, Pa.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5512) granting an increase of pension to George Jacobs, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5513) granting a pension to Emma A. Davis;

A bill (S. 5514) granting a pension to Lena Roedelsheimer; and

A bill (S. 5515) granting an increase of pension to William S. Nail.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 5516) providing for the erection of a public building at Independence, Mo., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 5517) granting an increase of pension to Sophronia Roberts, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCCREARY introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5518) for the relief of the trustees of the Baptist Church of Tateville, Ky.; and

A bill (S. 5519) for the relief of Louis Landram.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5520) to authorize the allotment to J. Morris Cook of his proportionate share in any of the land of the Grande Ronde Reservation, formerly belonging to the Umpqua tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced a bill (S. 5521) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Melissa Gathright, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5522) for the relief of W. R. Hall, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOURNE introduced a bill (S. 5523) granting an increase of pension to Lizzie Kapus, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5524) granting an increase of pension to Samuel N. Alford, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (S. 5525) to erect a custom-house and post-office building in the city of South Boston, Va.; and

A bill (S. 5526) for the erection of a public building at Bedford City, Va.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 5527) for the relief of Martha E. Terwilliger, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5528) for the relief of Joseph M. Padgett and others, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5529) granting an increase of pension to Daniel R. Hanwell, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, those of us who are living in Washington, either temporarily or permanently, have been very much startled and undoubtedly made uneasy by the condition of crime disclosed here and the robberies which have occurred in the most public places by day and by night. There is a clamor abroad for a large increase of the police force and all that sort of thing. Twenty-two cases in six months compel our attention.

Thinking over the situation, it has occurred to me that the cause ought to be removed, if it is possible to find it, rather than go to the expense of attempting to prevent such crimes by finding the criminals after the crimes have been committed. I am sure, from my own knowledge of the negro race, that the widespread vagrancy, which is evident here as well as in other cities where the negroes are in large numbers, is the cause of this criminality. There are other reasons, undoubtedly, among them the over education of some negroes, who are made to have higher aspirations than it is possible for them to attain. They become criminals, and rob and steal rather than work. But without dealing with the theories and the philosophy which will undoubtedly be brought out if we go into a discussion, I want to introduce a bill for the purpose of suppressing vagrancy in this District, and I ask that it be read.

The bill (S. 5505) to define and suppress vagrancy within the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described persons in the District of Columbia are hereby declared to be vagrants:

Idle persons who, not having visible means of support, live without lawful employment; persons wandering abroad and visiting tippling shops or houses of ill fame, or lodging in groceries, outhouses, market places, sheds, barns, or in the open air, and not giving a good account of themselves; persons wandering abroad and begging, or who go about from door to door or place themselves in the streets, highways, passages, or other public places to beg or receive alms.

All persons leading an idle, immoral, or profligate life who have no property to support them and who are able of body to work and do not work, including all able-bodied persons without other visible means of support who shall live in idleness upon the wages or earnings of their mother, wife, or minor child or children.

SEC. 2. That every person in the District of Columbia who shall be convicted of vagrancy under the provisions of this act shall be required to enter into security in a sum not exceeding $500, conditioned upon his good behavior and industry for the period of one year; and if he shall fail to give such security, he shall be committed to the workhouse in the said District for a term not to exceed one year. The security herein mentioned shall be in the nature of a recognizance to the District of Columbia, with a surety or sureties to be approved by the police court of the said District, in which court all prosecutions under this act shall be conducted in the manner now provided by law for the prosecution of offenses against the laws and ordinances of the said District.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to say further that the body of the bill is taken from the Massachusetts code. There are some slight alterations to suit local conditions, and a little elaboration. I tried to make the net a little more broad to increase its catching qualities.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FRAZIER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce from $1,440 to $1,800, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Senate press gallery, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River on the Missouri side across from Atchison, Kans., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona from $2,000 to $3,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM H. THOMAS.

On motion of Mr. WARNER, it was Ordered, That the papers filed for consideration in connection with the bill (S. 735) granting a pension to William H. Thomas be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 6195. An act to authorize A. J. Smith and his associates to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 13735. An act to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have two very important documents in the way of reports upon naval conditions, which I shall ask, after a brief explanation, to have printed in the RECORD and also to be made Senate documents.

In the January number of a widely circulated magazine appeared a leading article, entitled "The Needs of Our Navy," by Henry Reuterdahl, associate of the United States Naval Institute. The article naturally attracted attention far and wide, not only in this country but throughout all of the world interested in the development and maintenance of great navies. It was a most carefully written and elaborate article. It attacked the Navy Department, the bureaus engaged in the construction of war ships, and in detail assailed the design and construction of the new battle ships, especially those that have been authorized by Congress in the last fifteen years. It dealt sweepingly with almost every important part entering into the design and construction of a great battle ship, the location of the armor belt, the height of the freeboard, the position and height of the guns, the turret ammunition and hoist, and the size and efficacy of turret ports.

The article was so general in its attack and the subject so completely included the design and structure of battle ships that, as I have said, the attention of the country and of the press was at once directed to it, and Congress immediately not only took an interest in the subject, but many Senators and Members, as well as honest, intelligent men outside, were troubled and distressed by the criticism.

Following the appearance of the article and the broad and deep interest in it in Congress and out, and as the conditions and administration of the Navy had been subjects considered here from year to year, I prepared a bill (S. 3335) entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," and introduced it in the Senate, with some remarks explaining its purpose. When introduced, it naturally attracted the attention of Senators who had been interested in naval matters and other Senators, and I remember distinctly a question asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is a member of the Naval Committee and has taken a great and intelligent interest in every subject touching the Navy. The Senator from South Carolina asked me, I thought fittingly, whether the committee, in the consideration of this bill, would take any course that would shut off an investigation as to conditions in the Navy. He referred to what I may characterize, and every Senator will recognize to what I refer, as the Brownson incident—the difference that had arisen between Admiral Brownson and the President—and he also referred to the article in McClure's Magazine, and asked whether the charges made there with reference to the administration of the Navy, the efficiency of the bureaus, building ships, and the designs and structure of these vessels would be considered when the committee took up the bill.

The first and cardinal proposition of the bill introduced by me, which is now before the Naval Committee, relates to the administration of the bureaus and the duties which they shall perform; and it involves every question that is raised by the magazine article. It is the intention, I may say, of the committee in conducting this investigation under the terms of the bill which the Senate has sent to the committee, to go into all the questions relating to the work of the bureaus that have built the ships and the result of their work.

The Senator from South Carolina, as I remember, asked if it was a fact, as charged, that we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars upon ships that, when submitted to the test either of war or wave, will be found useless. That the committee should examine into.

Several weeks have passed, and I have frequently been asked, as other members of the committee have, why the committee has not proceeded to the investigation. The reason is contained in the papers which I shall presently bring before the Senate for printing. I learned that the Department, naturally solicitous and disturbed—I perhaps do not use too strong a word—by the charges of lack of efficiency in this great work of the bureaus in designing and building these ships, had set afoot a careful investigation of all the facts. I learned that the action of the Secretary was taken in connection with, perhaps at the suggestion, certainly with the entire approval of the President of the United States.

That investigation, the result of which is found in the papers which I shall present, was conducted by two very eminent officers in the United States Navy. One is Rear-Admiral Converse, known not only in the Navy, but to Congress and to the world as one of the most accomplished and experienced of the older officers of the Navy, who has held its most important places of duty and command at sea and on shore. He has given weeks of careful investigation into all of the conditions surrounding the bureaus and the work of the Navy Department in the design and building of battle ships His report is on my desk, and a little later I shall ask that it be printed as a document and referred to the committee.

In addition to that there is the report of Rear-Admiral Capps, who is at the head of the great Construction Bureau of the Navy Department, that has more to do with the design and construction of all the ships of the Navy than any other, a younger officer of the Navy, but of distinguished service, who, I think, has the confidence of everybody who knows him. I have also his report, and I shall ask, for I shall not consume much further time of the Senate, for the printing of these communications for the use of the committee and Senate. They are prepared at some length, because they cover a very broad ground, and they could not be complete unless the investigation had been most thorough.

I have the less hesitation, Mr. President, in asking not only that these important reports be printed and set before the Senate and Congress and the country, but in asking Senators interested in the very great questions that will come before Congress during this session touching the work of the Navy, its extent, its purposes, its mission, and its duties, to examine so far as they can these reports. Especially I ask members of the Naval Committee, who will have to consider the subject, to study them carefully.

I am justified in this, Mr. President, by the fact, which I do not think Senators or the public appreciate, that we have put into the new Navy for its structure and maintenance over twelve hundred million dollars. In the last twelve years, for the construction of ships and their maintenance and the maintaining of the Navy which we have authorized, the American people have put in within ten million dollars of a billion dollars in money—nine hundred and ninety million five hundred and seventy-two thousand and odd dollars.

This immense amount of money, Mr. President, has built up a magnificent Navy. I doubt whether that is fully appreciated. There is great clamor in certain quarters for an immense increase in the Navy, as though we had but a feeble modern or medium-sized Navy. We have to-day, with the ships that are nearing completion, what is held to be on good authority the second best navy in all the world. Examination by our own experts, I may say, discloses this, and the highest British authorities have stated that, as I have said, the American Navy to-day, including the ships which are nearing completion and are now already authorized, makes up the second great navy in efficiency in the entire world, and we are expending each year more than $100,000,000 in building and maintaining the American Navy.

Senators must remember that immense as is the cost of the original battle ship, when the battle ship is finished her large expense begins. The maintaining of the Navy, the manning, the conduct, the exercises, the voyages of these immense fleets amount each year to tens and tens and tens of millions of dollars. It is a part of what we are involved in with every battle ship that we build.

The distinctive question covered by these papers and which will first be considered by the Naval Committee of the Senate is the question whether these are good ships. The criticisms that are rife and that have startled the country and Congress and the world deny this. It will be a part of the business of the Naval Committee, assisted by these papers and the summoning of important officers of the Navy, to settle this question so far as it can one way or the other.

I have faith to believe, Mr. President, that the present system in the Navy, which has carried us through three wars, while perhaps, like everything of human device, not perfect, is the best system practicable and of possible operation. I do not think these ships are perfect. No man can build a house and have it burn down, as has been my fortune in the past, and build a second house that will not be an improvement on the first, although conducted upon the same general plan. The Bureaus that have in charge this great work, to which we have committed them by our appropriations, have made changes in designs, plans, and structures from year to year. But, Mr. President, every other naval power has done the same thing. It would not be good management and good husbandry of the money committed to the Navy Department by Congress if improvements from time to time were not made in the ships, in their class, in their design, in their entire structure. I have given some attention to the subject for a good many years, and I have reported all the naval appropriations for more than thirty years, and taking these ships, small and large, as they come forth from the Department and are submitted to their tests, and are armored and equipped and manned and sent forth to sail the seas, I believe they compare favorably with corresponding ships in any other navy, and that the Department has done its work well, so that to-day we have, I believe, as I hope that the examinations to be made by the Naval Committee will disclose, that we have to-day a magnificent Navy in size, and a Navy of as good ships as corresponding ships built by other naval powers anywhere in the entire world.

The committee, taking these investigations as a basis of the first distinctive part of the bill which I had the honor to introduce, and which is now before the committee, the work of the Bureaus building the ships, will, I hope, make a thorough examination, summon naval officers, summon critics, summon everybody who can throw light; and as soon as it is practicable, considering the magnitude of the subject and the engrossment of many members of the committee in other duties besides that on the Naval Committee, will submit to the Senate the result of its investigations and its report upon the Senate bill which is now before that committee.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Before the Senator sits down, I should like to ask him a question.

I notice what the Senator says about the character of our ships. Of course I assume that his attention has been called to the criticisms by quite a competent individual, apparently, of the physical condition of our ships, particularly in some details that he mentions. Does the Senator mean to say that that is an error, and the physical conditions are different, or being as stated, that they are not objectionable? I refer to the article in McClure's Magazine.

Mr. HALE. That is the article I have alluded to and which was undoubtedly the basis of the naval investigation. Of course I must be guided by the facts disclosed in the investigation. I have read a portion of these important documents, and if their conclusions are correct, the criticisms are unfair, are unsupported by the facts, and do not disclose the real condition and efficacy of the battle ships. But that is one of the subjects that the committee has got to go into. That is my impression.

There is one, I may say, curious feature about the criticism to which I have referred and upon which the investigation was set afoot. It discloses a certain familiarity with naval conditions and naval work and naval structure, which apparently could only be possessed by naval officers who are presumed to know, and who do know more about the details and the technicalities of naval construction than any outside person, whether he be a member of the Naval Institute, or a newspaper critic, or whatever he may be. There is a certain familiarity, I repeat, shown in this article, and one of the purposes of the investigation to be conducted—and I think the committee should go into that also—is to see whether naval officers, and, if so, who they are, have contributed to these criticisms, and whether they are right, and we have got a comparatively useless, though enormously expensive, Navy.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word on this subject. I think the defects pointed out in this article could be just as easily understood by any intelligent citizen as by a naval officer. The question of whether the magazine, where the powder is stored, is in a position in a ship to be ignited in the ordinary course of the operation of the ship is one that you or I, Mr. President, could tell just as well as the most skillful navigator in the world. Another question, as to whether the armor is too low on the ship and whether it should be higher, seems to me a question of common consideration and common sense. I do not think we want either a skilled engineer or a skilled officer to tell us whether there is danger to a ship with lower armor that does not exist if the armor is higher. I do not think there is any question about those things.

Mr. President, I do not pretend to be an expert in this matter; I never was on board a war vessel in my life; but I do know that, if you have got a condition where a powder magazine is liable, when a gun is fired, to have the fire go into it and blow it up, that is a mistake. Any American with a little common horse sense would know that. The question is, Does that fact exist? I do not know whether it does or does not. That is one of the things which I presume the Department must look into.

Of course I know the difficulty of investigating these questions and coming to a proper conclusion. I know every officer of the Department who has been connected with the Government for the last twenty-five years will stand by what the Government has done, and that if we get any information which amounts to anything, we must call somebody from the outside and use some common sense.

I have had a good deal of pride in the American Navy. I have been pretty liberal in voting for ships ever since I have been in public life, but I confess, Mr. President, that after reading this article I was greatly shocked, at least, and was somewhat worried over the condition which the writer says exists. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says, the man who wrote that article shows a very thorough acquaintance with the character of each ship and the distinctive features of each ship of which he attempted to treat.

I do not believe this article can be turned down, Mr. President, by a simple inquiry of a few naval officers as to whether or not they think this is a proper thing to do. Let us compare our Navy with the other navies of the world with reference to these alleged defects. If they are found to exist, let us see if there is not a way to remedy them, which I have no doubt there is, in the construction of the ships, and see to it when we build ships in the future that we do not build them of a defective type.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the suggestion which the Senator from Colorado makes is precisely what will constitute the work of the Naval Committee to get at all the facts. As I have said, no better basis to start upon could be had than a broad and faithful examination, first, by the Navy Department itself, to be submitted to the test which the Senator suggests, of good sense, and the application of everyday reasoning and observation as to those ships before any report shall be made. Each of the subjects to which the Senator referred, and all of the others to which I have referred, touching the design and structure of each one of these ships, is fully treated of in these papers, whether correctly, whether arriving at a right conclusion, whether they will stand the test of the examination of the committee it is not for me now to say, but I have no doubt we shall summon officers and experts, and whoever shall be wanted to throw light on these great questions, and it will be valuable for the committee to have these reports.

I present, Mr. President, first, a statement of Rear-Admiral Converse in refutation of alleged defects of the design and construction of certain naval vessels of the United States. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document, and be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine presents a statement of Rear-Admiral Converse, which he asks may be printed in the RECORD without reading, and also printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Statement of Rear-Admiral Converse, in refutation of alleged defects in design and construction of certain naval vessels of the United States.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1908.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal instructions, I have the honor to submit the following statement in regard to certain criticisms which have appeared from time to time in the public prints and elsewhere purporting to describe matters connected with the Navy and which, from their character, would seem to have been prepared by persons whose knowledge of the subjects discussed was limited and incorrect. These articles have undoubtedly caused wrong impressions, which a statement of the facts may in a measure correct.

In investigating this matter, recourse has been had to the official records of the Department, to the reports made by officers of our Navy and of foreign services well qualified to pass upon the subjects handled, to professional and other publications of acknowledged authority and high standing, and to other sources also recognized as authoritative.

The records and correspondence bearing upon the designs of our earlier battle ships are voluminous and complete, and it is apparent that the subject was thoroughly considered and discussed during the preparation of the designs of these vessels, and although decided differences of opinion appear, there seems to have been ample justification for the designs which finally received the approval of the Department.

It is not claimed that mistakes have not been made or that our ships are without faults; but in view of the then state of the art of battle-ship building, this fact is not to be wondered at. It is remarkable that the mistakes were so few and that none were really serious. In this respect our record will compare most favorably with that of foreign services.

BATTLE DRILLS.

Battle drill is the exercise or drill of the ships of the fleet individually or collectively for the purpose of training to meet the enemy under the conditions probable or liable to occur in battle. These conditions are varied and numerous, and no human being can foresee or foretell them. The training should, therefore, be along those lines which are deemed most favorable to us for meeting and defeating an enemy under the circumstances upon which we consider that he is likely to make his attacks. To this end our Navy has for some years past, so far as possible with the ships available, endeavored to solve practically problems of attack and defense of our coasts, and in carrying out this policy has worked alone, at other times in cooperation with the Naval War College, which has devised and studied these problems, and still at other times with the Army and Militia. It has been the practice in our Navy in the conduct of fleet and squadron operations to have a special board of officers devise and outline the contemplated scheme, but the carrying out of the details under the general plans has been left to the wisdom and discretion of the Commander in Chief and the commanding officers under him. The following extract from an order of the Secretary of the Navy will give an idea of the instructions and the manner of execution:

"The object of the maneuvers is to gain experience useful in war, and it is therefore desirable that all drills and exercises during the winter shall be carried out under the conditions pertaining to actual war."

Squadron and fleet operations have in accordance with the above quoted instructions been consistently carried out so far as practicable under war conditions. Scouting expeditions were sent to get in touch with the enemy and report his movements to the heavy battle fleet; signal stations were established at prominent headlands and on islands along the coast; torpedo attacks were made by both surface and submarine torpedo vessels; forts were engaged; and at temporary naval bases guns were landed and mounted, mines planted, picket boats kept patrolling, guard ships established for protection of mine fields against attacks by an enemy, and many other details incident to war conditions which are too numerous to attempt to mention.

Drills by divisions (four ships) and squadrons (eight ships) have been carried on whenever ships could be assembled for the purpose; but in a small navy such as ours, with ships required virtually at all times to guard our varied interests in widely scattered parts of the globe, the assembling of the necessary number of ships for drill has been frequently and much hampered. In the spring of 1903 it was practicable, for the first time since the construction of the "new navy," to obtain a squadron of eight battle ships—the least number necessary for properly performing squadron drills—and since then those eight battle ships have been, so far as possible, kept together for drill purposes. In the spring of 1907, by the completion of new vessels, this number was increased to sixteen battle ships, thus completing two squadrons, which when united formed a fleet. It then, for the first time, became possible to hold and carry out fleet tactics, which were begun in July and August last. In September it became necessary, on account of target practice and needed repairs, to separate the ships temporarily and later on to fit them for their voyage to the Pacific coast, upon which they are now engaged.

Before the eight battle ships were available (in the spring of 1903) fleet drills assimilating war conditions were carried on with cruisers, gunboats, torpedo boats, and such other vessels as could be brought together and used, and frequently the necessary number of vessels for conducting operations were obtained by assigning steam launches, by doubling the distance between ships, and supposing vessels in the intervening vacant spaces, and in other similar ways.

Owing to want of similarity in size, speed, handiness, and other tactical qualities of the vessels employed, drills of this nature were most unsatisfactory and productive of little benefit, either in training officers to handle ships or in developing tactics.

In addition to the hundreds of times when ships were drilled at sea and in port in tactics, as shown by the reports of officers engaged therein and by the entries in the log books, the following instances of "battle drills"—that is, drills such as would be useful and perhaps necessary in battle—have been conducted since the summer of 1900:

September, 1900. The North Atlantic fleet, in cooperation with the Army, carried out a series of maneuvers in Narragansett Bay and also submarine-boat operations in conjunction with the fleet.

Summer, 1901. Extensive maneuvers were held in and about the waters of Long Island Sound.

August, 1902. A fleet-search problem assimilating the search for a hostile fleet attempting an attack upon the New England coast was carried out.

August and September, 1902. Combined Army and Navy maneuvers for the attack and defense of the south coast of New England were carried out.

December, 1902. The combined North Atlantic, European, and South Atlantic squadrons carried out search problems for assumed hostile fleets in the vicinity of Culebra.

December, 1902, and January, 1903. The Asiatic fleet, operated in the attack upon, seizure, and defense of Subig Bay, Philippine Islands.

July and August, 1903. The North Atlantic fleet conducted another search problem for a hostile fleet assumed to be operating against the New England coast.

August, 1903. The fleet held joint maneuvers with the Army off Portland, Me.

February and March, 1903. Fleet maneuvers were carried out in the vicinity of Culebra.

June, 1905. Joint Army and Navy maneuvers were held in Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River, the ships attacking and the Army defending.

July, 1905. Atlantic fleet carried out a search problem for a hostile fleet, assumed to be intending an attack along the New England coast.

January, 1906. A fleet-search problem between assumed hostile fleets was conducted in the Atlantic Ocean between Hampton Roads and Culebra.

February, 1906. Another fleet-search problem between assumed hostile fleets was carried out in the Caribbean Sea.

March, 1906. Fleet tactics using tentative tactical signals were carried out in the vicinity of Guantanamo.

July, 1906. Tactical drills were conducted with the fleet operating along the New England coast.

January and February, 1907. The Atlantic fleet conducted fleet tactics in the Caribbean Sea and vicinity, and the Asiatic fleet similar tactics in Far Eastern waters.

July, August, and September, 1907. The Atlantic fleet conducted fleet tactics off the Atlantic coast.

In addition to and not included in the foregoing test of exercises and operations are those conducted during the past several years by the three torpedo flotillas and the submarines, which have acted at times independently of the battle ships and at other times in conjunction therewith. At present there are four torpedo-boat flotillas and two submarine-boat flotillas in service, and it is anticipated that excellent results will be obtained from the exercising and operating of these flotillas under the plans and schemes contemplated.

It may be added in connection with the foregoing partial list of battle drills, that the squadrons of vessels taking part therein were commanded during the various years above referred to by Rear-Admirals Farquhar, Higginson, Sumner, Barker, Evans, Sands, and Sigsbee, all of whom saw active service during the civil war, and the commanding officers under them in almost all cases had similar experience during that war or in the war with Spain. It is only natural that such men as these, having gone through active hostilities themselves, would conduct battle drills with the ships under their command on the practical lines which their own experience and study had taught them. Whether considered of any merit or not by amateur critics in our own country, foreign navies and foreign publications of acknowledged professional standing have not failed to note and pay attention to these exercises.

It has been stated that there is no navy in the world which has had so little battle drill as ours, and that since the Spanish war, in 1898, the American Navy has had only "ten days of actual battle maneuvers—about sixty or eighty hours in nine years." The assertion that no navy in the world has had so little drill as ours is, in view of the actual facts of the case, as above shown, very erroneous and misleading. In regard to the assertion that since 1898 only ten days of actual battle maneuvers have been carried out by the Navy, attention is invited to the foregoing list of principal squadron and fleet exercises since 1900, which were carried out under conditions assimilating, so far as practicable, those to be expected and anticipated to occur in actual war, and were consequently battle maneuvers or drills in all respects, based upon carefully studied plans of what an enemy might attempt and how best such attacks might be met and repulsed. Considering the force available, it was not possible in peace times to have had more effective or realistic battle drills than such as these.

Now, that we have an assured fleet of sixteen battle ships, consisting of two squadrons of eight vessels each, it will be possible to carry out practically, systematically, and continuously schemes of fleet tactics and naval operations; but it is necessary that every effort be made to keep not less than this number of vessels together at all times, if that state of efficiency which our Navy is now rapidly tending toward and which the people of our country have a right to expect is to be maintained and fostered. The personnel of our Navy in ambition and professional knowledge is second to none in the world, and now that the opportunity—heretofore denied us by reason of lack of the requisite number of similar ships—has been reached we should make every possible endeavor to maintain this favorable condition, and in a comparatively short time the results from study, practice, and exercise of our fleet will leave us, perhaps, little to be criticised or desired professionally when compared with other navies.

FREEBOARD OF AMERICAN SHIPS.

Since the designing of our first battle ships of the Indiana and Kearsarge classes, which, by the way, were more properly considered as coast-line battle ships as distinguished from those of succeeding classes, which were seagoing battle ships, it has been the policy, with increase of speed and length of vessel, to add to the height of the freeboard, until in our latest ships now under construction the forecastle deck has been given a height above a load water line of 25 feet 9½ inches. Some criticism has been made from time to time because our earlier ships were not as high out of the water as some foreign vessels, but this is not a disadvantage so great as might appear or as many have tried to have the public believe. The Indiana and Kearsarge classes are too low forward for efficient fighting at sea in fairly heavy weather, but the remainder of our battle ships could without doubt give a good account of themselves in a fight at sea in any weather in which it is at all likely for fleets to engage. Our later designs of ships are fully the equal in regard to desirable or effective freeboard as foreign vessels.

In a recent magazine article criticisms were made of our ships with respect to their freeboard, which, in some respects, to say the least, were hardly in accord with the facts. The statements of the heights of the freeboard made in this article so far as regards vessels of our Navy are approximately correct, but the claim made by the author of the article referred to that "all modern battle ships in foreign navies have forward decks from about 22 to 28 feet above the water" is very far from the truth, as the following table, made from the most reliable data obtainable of representative battle ships of the navies named, will show, which gives the freeboard abreast the forward turret:

Name of vessel (class).	Nation.	Number of vessels completed.	Height of forward deck.
			Ft. in.
Dreadnought	Great Britain	1	28 0
King Edward	do	8	17 0
Triumph	do	2	18 0
Duncan	do	5	18 0
Majestic	do	9	20 6
Renown	do	1	18 3
Royal Sovereign	do	7	18 0
Aki	Japan	2	19 0
Kashima	Japan	2	18 6
Mikasa	do	1	18 6
Asahi	do	2	20 0
Republique	France	6	23 6
Jaureguibery	do	1	22 0
Suffren	do	1	23 0
Gaulois	do	3	24 0
Connecticut	United States	5	19 0
Virginia	do	5	18 2
Maine	do	3	18 9
Alabama	do	3	18 6
Kearsarge	do	2	13 3
Iowa	do	1	18 2

Of the above type, ships taken as representative of the British, Japanese, French, and our own navies, it will be noted that but one has a freeboard as high as 28 feet, as stated by the writer of the article, while the vast majority have a freeboard less than the minimum height fixed by this critic. On the whole, it would hardly be claimed, after an examination of this table, that the freeboard of our ships is so woefully short of what it should be or below the standard set by foreign services. It might be added, as a question for serious consideration in connection with the matter of high freeboard and high gun positions, that the Russian battle ships Borodino, Kniaz Suvaroff, Oslybia, and Alexander III, approximating 27 feet—higher than any of our own ships now in service or any of the type ships shown in the above table (excepting possibly the Dreadnought)—capsized or were otherwise sunk in the battle of the Sea of Japan, and this after only a comparatively short fight.

There is but one real justification for very high gun positions and that is to achieve efficiency for fighting in heavy weather at sea, and this single advantage is not only not likely, but is in all probability extremely unlikely to occur. To obtain this very slim advantage—improbable of realization—amateur critics would have us knowingly build our ships with such decreased protection or stability that injuries by shell, admitting water to the hull, may seriously endanger if not actually cause the capsizing of our vessels as in the cases above referred to. The question of high gun positions as against that of moderate height is one worthy of the very gravest consideration. Is it wisdom to adopt the former in the hope of attaining a condition for a lone advantage which may, and in all probability will, never be realized—and even at that time, as in all other times of the life of the ship, be subjected to the greatly overmatching disadvantage of necessarily loss of stability, the one element above all others upon which the safety of a vessel depends?

In discussing freeboard the fact should not be overlooked that it always has been the policy of our Navy to have our vessels always armed better than our possible opponents, and when it becomes a question of choice between lightly armed and armored vessels with comparatively high freeboard and more powerful and heavily armed and armored ships of moderate but sufficient freeboard we have always striven for the latter, and in the instances where our ships have less freeboard it will be found that they, as with the rest of our vessels, more than outweigh this slight disadvantage by the more weighty and telling advantage of armor and armament, which fact will be amply shown from a comparison of our ships and batteries with vessels of other navies of the same date of design.

It may not be amiss while dealing with the subject of gun heights and freeboard to add that the Japanese in their most recently designed ships have, notwithstanding an increase of speed and length of vessels, not raised their gun positions nor the freeboard, which is one of the results gained from their experience from their recent war, and which seems to uphold the good idea of our system of building ships without the excessive heights deemed to be necessary by some critics.

HEIGHT OF GUN POSITIONS.

The following table, compiled from what is considered the most reliable authorities available, gives the height above water at the load water line of the main battery, forecastle, and broadside battery guns of our own ships and those of British and French vessels of the same relative year of laying down:

Vessels.	Nation.	Main battery.	Broadside guns.
1891.		Ft. in.	Ft. in.
Indiana	United States	17 9	8 guns at 25 0 4 guns at 14 10½
Royal Sovereign	Great Britain	23 0	6 guns at 22 0 4 guns at 14 0
Jaureguibery	France	26 6	8 guns at 25 0 4 guns at 19 0
1893.
Iowa	United States	25 6½	8 guns at 25 8 4 guns at 14 9
Renown	Great Britain	25 9	6 guns at 10 8 4 guns at 19 3
Bouvet	France	27 6	6 guns at 15 0 2 guns at 21 6
1896.
Kearsarge	United States	20 2⅛	2 guns at 29 4⅛ 2 guns at 27 11
Alabama	do	26 8⅛	14 guns at 15 2⅜ 10 guns at 15 3 4 guns at 22 11⅜
Magnificent	Great Britain	27 0	8 guns at 14 8 4 guns at 22 3
Gaulois	France	29 0	8 guns at 20 6 2 guns at 28 0
1899.
Maine	United States	26 10½	12 guns at 15 2½ 4 guns at 23 4½
Duncan	Great Britain	24 6	8 guns at 13 6 4 guns at 21 0
Suffren	France	30 0	6 guns at 23 0 4 guns at 15 0

Vessels.	Nation.	Main battery.	Broadside guns.
		Ft. in.	Ft. in.
1901.
Georgia	United States	25 3½	4 guns at 35 0 4 guns at 25 4 12 guns at 14 8¾
Republique	France	33 7	8 guns at 27 10½ 4 guns at 29 10 2 guns at 19 8 4 guns at 11 7½
1902.
Swiftsure	Great Britain	20 0 25 0	10 guns at 13 3 4 guns at 21 6
1903.
Connecticut	United States	26 5	8 guns at 26 6 12 guns at 15 0½
King Edward VII	Great Britain	23 6	10 guns at 12 10
Liberte	France	33 7	4 guns at 27 10½ 2 guns at 29 10 2 guns at 19 8 2 guns at 11 7½
1904.
Idaho	United States	23 3	8 guns at 23 2 8 guns at 14 7
Lord Nelson	Great Britain	27 0	10 guns at 23 0
1906.
Michigan	United States	25 5	2 guns at 33 5 2 guns at 25 6 2 guns at 25 5 2 guns at 17 6 10 guns at 21 11 4 guns at 29 5 8 guns at 37 2
Bellerophon	Great Britain		Heights not obtainable, but probably not greater than our vessels of same date.
Danton	France
1907.
Delaware	United States	31 4½	2 guns at 39 4½ 2 guns at 32 1½ 4 guns at 24 1¼ 14 guns at 14 4½
St. Vincent	Great Britain		Heights not obtainable, but probably not greater than our vessels of same date.
	France

In the foregoing the guns on the forecastle are classed under the head of main battery; and under the heading of "broadside guns" the heights of the intermediate battery guns firing on the broadside are given.

From the above table it will be seen that, compared with the British navy, our main battery guns, with the exception of the Indiana and Kearsarge classes (which were designed and built rather as coastwise than as seagoing ships), are about as high, if not higher, and that our broadside guns are considerably more elevated than in corresponding British ships, and the same may be said with regard to Japanese ships, as they are built almost on British lines.

The data for comparison with vessels of the German navy is not available, but it is hardly probable that the guns of their ships are any higher above the water than corresponding British ships. It will be observed that the heights of guns on French naval vessels are considerably higher than our own or the British. This policy of adopting high gun positions is a practice which the French have carried out for years, but which has not been followed by other nations, excepting the Russians. The wisdom of this practice of high gun positions is open to serious question, and it is quite probable that there are more resultant disadvantages than advantages when engaged in actual fighting and damages permitting the entry of water into the hull have been received, in which case the vitally important element of stability is a matter of the gravest danger in highly built ships, and much less so in those not so high.

After careful examination of the plans and data available, compiled from the most reliable sources, it is found that, with respect to the height of freeboard forward, height of main gun axes, and heights of broadside gun axes, our battle ships, with the exception of the Indiana and Kearsarge classes, are as high, if not higher, than the British and Japanese battle ships of the same period of design. These heights have been regarded as quite satisfactory by British and American officers of wide experience. We have never deemed it advisable to follow the French idea of great height of freeboard, but in our latest-designed ships, with increased speed, length of hull, and fine water lines, it has been thought wise to add to the freeboard. This, however, does not appear to be the Japanese practice, as in their latest battle ship the Aki, of approximately 20,000 tons, they have still held the freeboard forward down to less than that of our Connecticut class.

Inasmuch as high freeboards in ships of moderate length involves an enormous increase in weight without corresponding increase in military efficiency, it may be regarded that our practice of the past ten years or more, supported as it has been by that of Great Britain and Japan, with respect to freeboard and height of guns, has been wise and productive of good results. Moreover, the behavior of the Japanese battle ships in the fight of the Sea of Japan should be conclusive testimony as to the stability of such vessels to fight capably under rough weather conditions, were such additional practical evidence necessary. Finally, it may be added that to officers who have commanded our battle ships there seems unanimity of opinion that they can, with the possible exception of the Indiana and Kearsarge classes, fight their batteries in any sea in which naval actions are at all likely to take place. These opinions of officers who have actually commanded our ships are, it would seem, entitled to greater weight than the critics, among whom the loudest and most bitter have never commanded a ship, and therefore can have little, if any, practical knowledge upon which to base their erroneous criticisms.

TORPEDO-DEFENSE GUNS.

One of the lessons deduced from the Russo-Japanese war was that the 3 and 6 pounder guns, theretofore regarded as a part of a battle ship's defense against torpedo boat attack, were insufficient in power to effectively stop a modern torpedo boat under ordinary circumstances. Furthermore, since the range of the torpedo has recently increased greatly, guns of larger caliber and greater power and longer range have become necessary to prevent torpedo attacks. The 5-inch gun is now considered the smallest caliber effective for this work and has been adopted by us. All our battle ships now carry intermediate batteries of 5-inch or larger caliber, and those vessels still having 3 and 6 pounders on board are to have them replaced by guns of larger caliber as fast as the heavier guns can be provided. In the meanwhile our vessels are by no means unprovided to beat off hostile attacks of torpedo boats, as it is a well-known fact that the intermediate batteries of rapid or quick firing guns carried by our ships are amply able to meet the necessities, and, on the whole, are also more numerous than are carried by battle ships of other navies of approximately the same time of design.

BATTLE-SHIP ARMOR.

The armor of a battle ship is divided into two general classes:

First. That used for the protection of the gun positions.

Second. That used for the protection of the hull.

It may be assumed that the armor for the protection of the guns' positions of the vessels of our Navy is distributed satisfactorily, as the criticisms which have recently appeared have been almost exclusively confined to the distribution of the armor used for the protection of the hull.

The weight which can be devoted to armor protection is limited; and hence it becomes necessary to distribute such armor as is allowed to the best possible advantage.

The object of the hull armor is, generally speaking, twofold:

1. To protect the vitals of the ship—engines, boilers, and ammunition;

2. To preserve the buoyancy and stability of the ship itself.

The above are distinct functions. A shot may penetrate the vitals and disable the machinery or explode a boiler or magazine, thus disabling or destroying the ship, while the buoyancy and stability have sustained little or no damage.

Again, if there is inadequate protection to buoyancy and stability, a number of shots between wind and water may sink the ship bodily or throw so much of the plane of flotation open to the sea that the ship loses stability and capsizes, while the vitals are absolutely unhurt.

For convenience the armor used for protection of the hull may be designated as "belt armor," "side armor," and "protective deck."

The "belt armor" usually consists of a narrow belt (varying in our ships from a minimum of 7′ 6″ to a maximum of 9′ 3″ in width) sufficiently thick to resist penetration by the heaviest projectile, located with reference to the water-line of the ship and extending sufficiently far below the water to preclude all possibility of a shot entering the side or bottom of the vessel, unless, indeed, through an excessive roll or a listing of the ship due to wound or injury received, the side should become exposed below the belt on the raised side.

The "side armor" is thinner than the belt armor, but as thick as the limited weight available will permit, is placed on top of the belt armor and extends to varying heights, generally to the deck above.

The "protective deck" is, as its name implies, an armored watertight deck, completely covering the vitals of the vessel, and is usually at the level of the upper edge of the belt armor, extending flat to the sides in some vessels, and in others having its outer edges curved down to join the side at the lower edge of the belt.

A "cofferdam" several feet high filled with cellulose is built at the junction of the belt and protective deck as a further protection for the preservation of buoyancy and stability.

If the function of the belt armor was simply to prevent a projectile from reaching the vitals of the ship—engines, boilers, and magazines—evidently its position would be fixed wholly by the internal arrangement of the ship, and would be entirely independent of the vessel's draft. Further consideration of this function of the belt may be, therefore, omitted and its functions as a means of preserving the buoyancy and stability of the vessel, the qualities with which we are principally interested, considered.

The piercing of the hull under or below the belt would almost certainly be fatal to the vessel. The compartments here are large, the pressure of the water great, and it would be almost impossible to make use successfully of any appliance to stop the inflow and repair damage. Very probably, also, the projectile entering below the belt armor would meet with little resistance and would penetrate into the central portion of the ship, and if it exploded there, very possibly put the ship completely out of action. On the other hand, even should the upper edge of the belt be at the water line, the entrance of a shell above the belt armor would also be above the protective deck, and so long as the latter remains intact (i. e., not pierced by either the shell itself or by its fragments) no disastrous results would be entailed, as the parts of the hull above the belt and protective deck are subdivided by water-tight and other compartments in comparatively small sections, and the inflow of water into these small compartments detached from one another would be checked by the cellulose cofferdam and by the filled coal bunkers. Furthermore, the amount of water which would enter a vessel through a hole but a few inches above the waterline would not be materially greater than the quantity which would enter through an exactly equal hole two or three feet above that line in the case of a ship moving at speed in a seaway.

In 1895, the late Rear-Admiral Sampson, then Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, wrote: "There must be a fixed depth of the armor below the water for ships of the same beam which would best fulfill its use, and this depth should always be maintained in action. * * * The depth should be whatever theory and observation may establish." It appears as the results of study and observation that at about this time the depth of armor below the water necessary for the protection of the hulls of our ships was fixed at 4 feet for vessels having approximately 70 feet beam.

The belt varies in width, depending on thickness (as affecting weight), and other considerations, and in our service has been from 7½ to 9½ feet in width. The lower edge of the belt is approximately 4 feet below the designed normal water-line on our earlier vessels and 5 feet on some of the more recent, and the upper edge is from 2½ feet to 4¼ feet above that line.

As the lower edge of the belt armor, in order to achieve the best results, must be a given depth below the water when a vessel is in action, the question which naturally presented itself was: What would be the probable draft of a vessel when in action? Would it be the vessel's deepest draft? Its lightest draft? Or some intermediate draft?

A board, of which Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker, United States Navy, was president, on May 18, 1896, reported:

"A battle ship's 'normal' draft should be her 'fighting draft'—otherwise the term is inaccurate and misleading—not her maximum draft with all the ammunition, coal, and stores that she can carry, but her draft with a large percentage of these supplies—not less than two-thirds of her full capacity of each on board. And the position of the armor belt should bear its proper relation to this actual load line, not to a fictitious load line seldom realized under service conditions."

The above definition of a vessel's "normal draft" practically obtains to-day, the only exception being in regard to the amount of coal carried. This is somewhat less—and in our service corresponds to foreign practice—thus permitting a more accurate comparison to be made with vessels of other nations, as regards speed, maneuvering qualities, freeboard, height of gun positions, etc. It is with this "normal draft" as a standard that vessels of our Navy have been designed.

It is, however, unfortunately a fact, not only with respect to our own, but with respect to all other naval services, that the actual draft of men-of-war at completion is frequently greater than that for which they were designed, the principal reason for this discrepancy being due to changes of a military character made after the designs have been approved, and sometimes after actual construction has progressed for several years. This was notably the case with respect to the Indiana class of vessels, where an additional water-tight bulkhead was added after the unfortunate Victoria disaster, and in the Virginia and Connecticut classes, where radical changes in the turret and battery foundations were necessitated by improvements in the battery which had been developed subsequently to the approval of the design, but before the completion of the building of the vessel. The visible effect of this increased displacement is most apparent in the decrease in the height of the upper edge of the belt armor above the line of flotation of the vessel, this decrease amounting in some cases to 5 or 6 inches, rarely more than 9 inches. This fact, however, does not materially affect the defensive qualities of the vessel.

Much of the criticism which has been made in regard to the distribution of the belt armor of vessels of our Navy seems to be based upon the assumption that vessels will always strive to go into action at their deep-load draft, as is shown by the following quotations:

"To get into action with everything on board possible in the way of ammunition, stores, and coal will be a prime object of all good strategists. Therefore the water line about which the armor should be distributed is not the normal line." (Naval Critic.)

"No ship (battle ship) * * * has yet been planned to have a water-line protection reaching more than 6 inches above the water when she is ready to fight. The condition of our armored cruisers is almost the same." (Civilian Critic.)

Notwithstanding the above assertions, many of the most distinguished and experienced officers of our own and foreign navies still hold the opinion expressed in 1896 by that board of distinguished officers, of which the late Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker was president, that "the fighting draft of a battle ship would not be her maximum draft with all the ammunition, coal, and stores that she can carry * * * and that the position of the armor belt should bear its proper relation to this actual load line—not to a fictitious load line seldom realized in service conditions."

In view, however, of the very marked increase in the rapidity of gun fire since the above was written, it is undoubtedly desirable that a vessel should carry her full, or even an excess, supply of ammunition when in condition for battle, instead of the two-thirds supply, as above stated. This amount of ammunition carried would, of course, tend to increase the displacement and to give greater draft; but at the same time many articles carried in peace times would be sent ashore, as being unnecessary in war time and would largely, if not entirely, compensate for the increased supply of ammunition taken on board, and the final result would very probably be little or no increase of draft, the "normal draft" remaining practically undisturbed.

One of the principal causes of the defeat of the Russian fleet in the battle of Tsushima Straits in May, 1905, is attributed to the fact that the vessels of that fleet were overloaded with coal and stores of all kinds; and it is asserted that his subordinates were unable to understand the great desire which Admiral Rojestvensky always seemed to have to carry immense amounts of coal—his vessels having on board at this battle enough to steam a distance of more than 3,000 miles, while the actual distance required to be traveled was but 900. His ships were similarly overloaded with stores and supplies. This overloaded condition of the Russian fleet, let it be understood, was while passing through the waters and in immediate proximity to the naval bases of a hostile fleet of relatively their own strength, and with the probability of meeting the enemy's fleet in battle so great that it might have been regarded as almost a certainty. On the other hand, it is stated on reliable authority that the Japanese fleet, in anticipation of meeting the Russian fleet, had been completely stripped by removing everything possible in the way of weight (equipment, superfluous stores, etc.), from the vessels, and that they had on board at the time of the battle provisions sufficient to last only ten days. It may be reasonably assumed because of their lightness these vessels were near what we would call their "normal draft." Togo's fleet was in fighting trim; Rojestvensky's fleet was not. The result could easily have been forecast; still the critics of our Navy would have us believe that ships should always, as a preparation for battle, put themselves in the condition of those that met defeat.

The newly organized "battle ship fleet" proceeded to sea for "tactical" drill on August 26, 1907, and continued at sea exercising daily until the afternoon of September 5. An officer noted for his professional attainments and accuracy of judgment, who was detailed especially as an observer upon the drill and upon the behavior of the ships, reported as follows:

"Armor belt. There was little or no seaway to judge of its effect in exposing the armor belt of the battle ships. But the combined result of the sea and helm was observed at times to make a difference of 1 to 2 feet in the amount of the belt exposed. The amount of coal in the fleet during these exercises may be considered as normal—that is, the submergence of the armor belt was about the average. In all cases the top of the belt was exposed above the water, and in some cases upon arrival at Rockport the belt was exposed 3 or 4 feet."

This is the height of the armor belt above the water line after the arrival of the ships in port after the drills, even while the majority of them had considerably more than 1,000 tons of coal on board, and one only of the entire number had less than 750 tons, which is shown by an examination of the log books of the various vessels at the time. It may be further stated that with only one exception all the vessels composing the fleet above mentioned began the drills with bunker coal much in excess of their normal supply, several having from 1,500 to 1,800 tons on board, and at Rockport the majority still had from 900 to 1,600 tons remaining—that is, had about or more than one-half their total bunker capacity filled and still available for service—and yet the height of the armor belt above water was as stated above. Evidently, under these conditions, which are said to have been normal, the expectation of having the armor belt above water when the vessels are at their designed "normal draft" and ready for efficient service seems reasonably well borne out in practice.

Again, when this same fleet sailed for the West Indies last winter the ships were so loaded down that the upper edge of their belt armor was near the water line, and similarly when the fleet sailed but a short time ago for the Pacific their draft was even greater than on the other occasion. Both these cases, however, were exceptional, in that the fleet was making a "strategic" move and carried with it everything necessary for its own consumption on the cruise and everything possible in the way of supplies and ammunition for use at its future base, conditions which would not obtain in case of anticipated or imminent fleet action.

Notwithstanding, however, the low position of the top of the main armor belt upon the two occasions above mentioned, which were, as above stated, exceptional and unlikely to occur in the event of hostilities, still the safety of the vessels was in no way jeopardized thereby, as in our ships the protective deck is about on a level with the top of the belt armor. Any projectile striking against that part of the belt armor still above the water line would, in all probability, be either entirely broken up or in any case rendered practically harmless so far as any injury to the protective deck is concerned. Were a projectile, however, to strike underneath the belt armor, it would pierce the thin plating of the ship and perhaps destroy the motive power as well as fatally affect the flotation or stability by the large amount of water rapidly entering the large compartments of the vessel. As the belt is at its maximum depth below the water line, it affords an unusual protection to the bottom of the ship, and therefore there need be little or no apprehension of an injury in that region. On the other hand, a projectile striking above the armor belt, but at the water line, may pierce the ship's side and cause damage by explosion within, but such damage will not extend below the protective deck. The result, aside from the local effect of the explosion, will be that water will flow in, and may, unless checked, fill the smaller compartment to the height of the hole and affect the vessel's stability to that extent. This will be the result whether the top of the armor belt be at the water's edge or 2 or more feet above it. It therefore must be evident that a shell entering below the belt armor is of vital importance, while one entering above the belt, even if submerged, is incomparably less serious. Finally, as weights in the construction of our ships limit the width of the belt armor to from about 7 to 9 feet, it may be considered that about 5 feet below the normal water line would be a desirable distribution for battle conditions. But as submergence of the belt varies at times several feet, we must bear in mind that it is better to have the top of the belt awash or even submerged than to run any risk whatever of getting the bottom of the belt too high—that is, too near the surface of the water.

Referring to statements frequently made in print and otherwise from persons whose information upon the subject is not complete, to the effect that the main armor belt of our ships is habitually submerged or awash, a word in explanation of this error may not be amiss. In some of our ships the main armor belt protecting the magazines, engine, and boiler spaces, the vitals of the ship, extends usually from 2 to 3 feet or more above water when the ship has her ammunition, coal, and stores about in condition for active service; and this belt is, after covering the portion of the ship containing the vitals, narrowed down 15 inches and continued to the bow and to the stern where protection is not so vital. There is reason for believing that in some instances commanding officers have, by filling or emptying the trimming tanks, the shifting of weights, the use of coal exclusively from forward bunkers or other perfectly legitimate means, so trimmed their respective ships that they are down (when loaded) from 1½ to 2 or more feet by the stern. This depression or trimming by the stern, of course, causes a like depression of the after end of the narrowed-down armor belt, and in some instances it may be true that the extreme after end of this belt has been thereby submerged or awash, but a corresponding rise of armor necessarily follows from the extreme stern to the extreme bow. This condition of trimming by the stern is an entirely personal preference of the commanding officer of the individual ship, and may be due to the possibility of the ship steaming or handling easier in squadron; but it is hardly at all probable that she would be trimmed thus in time of war or preparatory to going into action. Even if so trimmed, the main armor belt—that is, the part protecting the vitals (the primary reason for its existence)—would be still well above water, and in no instance would it be submerged.

It is possible that persons unfamiliar with battle ships may take the top of the (usually red) painted water line ("boot-topping"), as representing the upper limit of the armor belt. This, however, can not be taken as a proper guide, as the position of the painted water line is variable, at times being possibly 2 feet or more below the top of the armor belt, and may have no relation or connection with its actual position. It is, therefore, readily seen how easily incorrect ideas of the height of the armor belt above water may be formed if judged from the position of the painted water line.

Those who advocate that the "deep-load draft" is the "fighting draft" claim that the belt armor should be disposed with reference to this water line so far as regards the submergence of its lower edge. As has been stated hereinbefore, the minimum depth to which the belt should extend below the water in order to afford proper protection has been fixed approximately 4 feet for our earliest vessels and 5 feet for the latest. Assume the belt armor to extend 5 feet below the deep-load line. As coal, stores, and ammunition are consumed the depth to which the belt extends below the water is constantly decreasing, and when these stores are reduced to what is considered the normal supply—which condition, in the opinion of many officers, is the proper fighting trim—the lower edge of the belt will be considerably less than 3 feet below the water in many of the ships. The most important part of the vessel (that containing the vitals) is thus left unprotected, and it is gravely proposed by these critics to bring the ship back to its deep-load draft (and thus submerge the belt to its proper depth) by the admission of water to the double bottoms. Were this theory carried out in our large ships of recent design the amount of water necessary to accomplish the results would be approximately 2,000 tons, but the structure of the ship will not permit of so large an amount being admitted to the double bottoms.

If the admission of the required amount of water were possible, it would mean:

a. A loss of the protection which the double-bottom system is primarily designed to give a vessel.

b. An increase of draft amounting in some cases to more than 2 feet.

c. A decrease of speed due to increase in draft and displacement amounting to from a knot to a knot and a half or even more.

d. Decreased handiness of the ship, due to the great draft.

e. A decrease in free board of approximately 2 feet.

f. A decrease in the height of gun positions by approximately 2 feet.

Certainly a vessel whose fighting efficiency has thus been impaired by artificial means is not in condition to meet an enemy who has taken the usual precautions deemed necessary to "prepare and clear his ship for action."

On the other hand, if the belt armor was disposed with reference to the "normal draft" of the ship, its lower edge would then be at least 5 feet below the surface of the water at all drafts between the "normal" and the "deep-load" draft, and it would not be necessary to compensate for the consumption of stores or reduction of weights by any artificial means; the under-water body of the ship would be protected so far as is contemplated by belt armor and the double-bottom system and in this respect always ready for battle. The additional weight of armor necessarily for this disposition of the belt would be approximately 225 tons, which would not under any circumstances increase the draft of the vessel more than 3 inches.

As the object of the belt armor is to prevent projectiles from entering the hull of the vessel at or below the water line, its thickness must necessarily be made to depend upon the quality of the material used. In our early days of battle-ship construction it was found that in order to prevent the penetration of the heaviest projectiles (13-inch) at a distance of 1,000 yards a thickness of 18 inches was necessary in the then state of the art of armor making. As the water itself would offer some resistance to a striking projectile, plates were made thickest at the upper edge and tapered gradually toward the lower. Of course it was necessary to make the belt as narrow as possible to fulfill its essential requirements in vessels of that date on account of the great weight involved. Of necessity the side armor was made thin—in some of the early ships only 4 inches. Improvements in armor making have been constant but gradual, and at the present time, without decreasing the resisting power of the belt armor, it has been possible to gradually reduce its thickness, and the saving in weight has been partially applied to increasing the thickness of the side armor, until at the present time, in our latest-designed ships, the difference in thickness of the belt and side armor is but 1 inch, and it is probable that even that difference will disappear in the near future, so that there will be no distinction between the two. While preserving full protection below the water, equal protection can now be afforded to the hull for a considerable height above. As the protective deck is still retained, it should be apparent to even the most biased critics that the protection thus afforded will compare most favorably with that of the ships of other nations.

TURRET DESIGNS WITH RESPECT TO AMMUNITION HOISTS AND MAGAZINE SAFETY.

Questions concerning the numerous mechanical devices and detail arrangements which go to make up such a complicated machine as a battle ship require considerable knowledge of details before discussions relating thereto can be readily understood by those not technically informed.

This observation applies with more or less force to the subject of turret design and to the criticisms relative to the open shaft direct ammunition hoist system employed in our battle ships as compared with one of the systems used in England and known as the "two-stage hoist," with a second handling room just beneath the turret floor.

The unfortunate accidents which have occurred in four of our turrets have more than ever forcibly called attention to the danger to which a ship's magazine may at times be exposed, and to the precautions usually employed in turret designs, both in this country and abroad, to avoid such a possible disaster. A description of the practice pursued in the turret designs of our own ships and those of foreign ships showing the general arrangement usually adopted will illustrate this point.

AMERICAN DESIGN.

The American turret design with respect to its ammunition supply may be described as of the all around loading direct ammunition hoist type. That is, the guns can be loaded at any position in the arc of their train and while in motion, as distinguishing the type from the former English custom of having to revolve the turrets to a fixed position for loading after each time the guns were fired.

The ammunition is hoisted from what is known as the "handling room" up a central hoist in the vertical axis of the turret and thence directly to the breech of the gun. All the parts connected with this ammunition hoist revolve with the turret.

Around the handling room at the base of the ammunition hoist are grouped the magazine and shell rooms for the storage of ammunition. These magazines and shell rooms are especially constructed compartments kept closed by water-tight doors and fitted with arrangements for flooding, etc. The powder in the magazines is stored in air-tight copper tanks and when required for loading into gun it is removed from the copper tank, passed through a scuttle closed by a flap in the door, and placed on the hoist which carries it direct to the breech of the gun. This general arrangement is shown as Sketch No. 1. To provide additional safety for the magazine a platform has been more recently placed between the turret floor and the handling room below, with an automatic flap steel door, through which passes the ammunition carrier.

ENGLISH TURRETS FOR 12-INCH GUNS.

English battle ships, commencing with the Dreadnought, Thunderer, and Devastation in 1869 up to the Colossus class of 1886, carried muzzle-loading guns, and that turret system has now become obsolete. Commencing with the Colossus class of 1886 the first of the breech-loading guns were mounted in turrets controlled by hydraulic power. The guns were loaded by training the turret to a fixed loading position, so as to bring the breech of the gun over an ammunition hoist working within a shaft or trunk built into the structure of the ship and independent of the revolving parts of the turret. The ammunition was supplied in carriers which traveled from the handling room on the magazine and shell-room deck direct to the breech of the gun. This same general arrangement was used on the English battle ships Camperdown, Anson, Howe, Rodney, Collingwood, Nile, Trafalgar, Royal Sovereign, Royal Oak, Ramilles, Revolution, Repulse, Empress of India, Hood, Barfleur (reconstructed 1903), Centurion (reconstructed 1903), and Revenge, which ships were built between 1895 and 1896. (See fig. 2.)

By this time the method of loading guns adopted in this country and France as a standard type for turrets was recognized by the English as possessing many advantages. The English "fixed" loading positions not only took a great deal of time to train their guns for loading, but also gave indication to the enemy when the guns were out of action and exposed a side view of them to the enemy's fire.

The criticisms against the English "fixed" loading position brought forth the design shown in sketch No. 3, which may be regarded as the second stage in the evolution of the modern English turret. In this design the natural conservative spirit is shown in the retention of the fixed loading position, while at the same time it was supplemented by a central ammunition tube revolving with the turret and through which the cordite could be hoisted from the magazine handling room direct through the turret floor. A number of explosive shells were carried in the turret and a number of charges of cordite were stored in pockets in the turret floor. By this means a limited number of rounds could be fired at any point in the arc of train and cordite could be supplied through the central loading tube when the supply required replenishing. Also when the supply of shell in the turret was exhausted, it was necessary to train to the old "fixed" loading position to replenish it. It will be seen at a glance that this was a compromise, but it is interesting as showing the process of evolution by which the "fixed" loading position was finally abandoned. This design of turret was placed in only a limited number of ships (seven) of the Majestic class built between 1895 and 1898 and included the Magnificent, Mars, Hannibal, Jupiter, Victoria, and Prince George. (Fig. 3.)

The next step is shown in figure 4, which was placed in five vessels of the Canopus class, the Cæsar, Illustrious, Ocean, and Goliath, built between 1897 and 1900. This design abandoned the "fixed" loading position and in a natural mechanical evolution attached the upper part of the "fixed" loading hoist to the revolving part of the turret, and used this portion of the hoist in connection with the central tube hoist. This resulted in what was called a "relay chamber" or a "working room" beneath the turret platform, where the ammunition was transferred from the lower hoist to the upper hoist. This arrangement has also recently been designated as "the two-stage hoist." In these ships it did not prove entirely satisfactory, due to hand loading and detail arrangements.

The next mechanical development toward simplicity would naturally result in a combination of the upper and lower hoists into one single hoist, and this we actually find to be the case, as shown in figure 5, which was installed in the English battle ships Glory and Albion, built in 1901, and in several foreign ships built by Armstrong & Co. This design shows the ammunition hoist inclosed in a trunk leading from the handling room abreast the magazine direct to the breech of the gun. This design of turret is characterized by a writer in a recent number of the Naval and Military Record as "the cleverest piece of workmanship and design that had yet been seen in naval turrets, but the two ships as a whole were never a success." The ammunition was a long time going up the long hoist and nothing was gained, as expected.

The next design was installed in the English ships Centurion, Barfleur, and Renown in 1903. It was a return to the Canopus type of 1900, with a relay chamber beneath the gun, making the two-stage hoist. Steam and electricity were introduced as part of the motive power.

Following these vessels came the nine vessels of the Formidable class, completed between 1902 and 1904. These also had the Canopus type of turret, with a 4° loading position, supplemented by a 1° hand-loading position and a chain-folding rammer.

The four vessels of the Prince of Wales class, 1902–1904, had a similar type of turret, but a further improvement was made by the introduction of a rammer that embodied loading to take place at any angle of elevation as well as at any angle of train.

In 1904 the Triumph and Swiftsure were completed in England. Their 10-inch turret mounts had central ammunition supply from the handling room direct to breech of gun. The design is similar in all important respects to that of the American turret design, except that the guns can be loaded at any angle of elevation.

The eight vessels of the King Edward VII class of 1905–6 and subsequent vessels have 12-inch turrets of the Canopus type of 1900, with improvements in details, some having a chain rammer enabling the guns to be loaded at any angle of elevation as well as at any angle of train. This has become the standard type of the English 12-inch turret mount and is shown in figure 6.

ENGLISH TURRETS FOR 9.2-INCH GUNS AND LESS.

The turrets for all English guns less than 12-inch, such as 9.2-inch, 7.5-inch, and 6-inch guns, differ materially from the turret designs described above. With these guns the English employ an ammunition hoist running from the shell room or handling room abreast the magazine direct to the turret.

The first 9.2-inch turrets of this general character were installed on the Powerful and Terrible in 1898. The shells were carried in bins underneath the floor of the turntable. "The cordite was supplied by means of a central trunk, which revolved with the turntable."

The Cressy, Aboukir, Good Hope, Leviathan, and Drake, of 1903–4, carried two single 9.2-inch guns on Armstrong mounts. A "shell carrier was provided as in the Powerful" and "hoists provided means of replenishing the shell bins, when necessary, and cordite was supplied by a central hoist direct to the gun from the magazine."

The Hogue, King Alfred, Bacchante, Eurydus, and Sutlej, 1902–3, had mounts built by Vickers and were practically the same as the Cressy class above. It is illustrated in figure 7, where is shown the manner of conveying the powder direct to the turret through a central revolving tube, the projectiles store under the turret floor, and the independent shell hoist for renewing the supply.

The ten ships of the Lancaster class, 1903–4, had 6-inch twin-turret mounts with electric control. "A traveling bay underneath the floor of the turntable carried 150 projectiles and the supply of cordite was by a dredger hoist working direct from the magazine."

The six vessels of the Devonshire class, 1904–5, carry four single 7.5-inch turrets. "The shell is carried in bins underneath the turntable floor, and cordite is supplied by hydraulically worked central tube." "Vertical tubes outside the turret for sending up additional shells direct from the shell room."

The six vessels of the Duke of Edinburgh class, 1905–1908, carry six single 9.2-inch turrets and four single 7.5-inch turrets. They are similar turrets to the above, as shown in figure 7.* This is the general standard type of mount (Hogue type of 1902) in the English navy on board both battle ships and cruisers for guns of this caliber.

FRENCH TURRET DESIGN.

The turret mounting for heavy guns in the French navy is very similar to that of the American design. In general the turret is carried on a truncated cone revolving on a pivot in the handling room, or the turret may be supported on roller bearings beneath the barbette.

* Not printed in RECORD.

The ammunition is hoisted through this central cone or tube from the magazine compartment direct to the gun in the turret similar to the arrangement employed by us. A typical French design for heavy guns is shown in figure 8.[a] In turrets for smaller caliber guns the arrangements are somewhat different, and the Naval Annual of 1901 states that the English 9.2-inch turret (Hogue type) is practically the same mount as used in the French navy for many years.

In other cases the smaller turrets have a ready ammunition supply in a relay chamber beneath the gun supplied by a central hoist. The ammunition is passed by hand hoist through scuttles in the turret floor to load the gun.

Some of the more modern French turrets instead of having the ammunition go direct to the breech of the gun, as shown in the sketch, have it delivered direct from the handling room to the turret at the side of the gun, from which position it is carried around the gun to rear and loaded by hand. Mr. Canet, the eminent French ordnance officer, stated in a recent lecture:

"The typical English practice, as regards ammunition hoists, is to make them in two sections, the lower to bring the ammunition from the magazine to a relay chamber, where it is taken upward again to the gun by another hoist. This system allows of a more rapid firing, as there is a large supply of ammunition under the gun; besides, there is less danger in the case of a shell bursting in the turret. Hence it appears better than the use of a single hoist direct from the magazine, as is the custom in French battle ships. * * * The turrets for the ships now building will embody all the improvements I have noticed above, such as relay chambers loading in any position and duplicate sights so that the rate of fire may be raised to two rounds per minute."

In some of the secondary turrets the base of the hoist is completely unmasked, going down into the handling room at quite a distance from the magazine, very much like our own system. In some modern cases the ammunition hoist for other guns is undefended at the base, although going directly in the middle of the magazine. It is customary in the French service to carry a few rounds of ammunition in the turret. This was also formerly a practice in some classes of English ships, but it appears that the present custom of the English is to carry shells only in the turrets or underneath the turret floor.

TURRET DESIGNS OF OTHER COUNTRIES.

In ship construction and design of naval vessels nearly all secondary powers have followed the practice of the English or French, in which countries most of their ships have been built. The Japanese have, in general, followed the English, and the Russians have followed both the English and the French. The latest English design of Vickers turret mounting is almost an exact duplicate of the American design of turret, having direct one stage ammunition hoist, spring return, with electric power throughout for handling and control. (See figure 9, from Engineering, March 22, 1907.)

SUMMARY.

Reviewing the practice of the different naval powers in respect to the design of turrets and the method of supplying ammunition it will be seen that the differences are not radical departures from any general idea, but refer principally to the detail mechanical arrangements. In all there exists an armored revolving gun platform to which ammunition is conveyed from the powder magazine and shell room on the lowest deck directly beneath the guns. Hydraulic, steam, pneumatic, electric, or hand power may be used to perform the various operations connected with serving the gun. Partitions, doors, and flaps separate the magazine from the turret over the route of the powder in its passage to the gun.

In this last respect the difference which has recently attracted most attention is that between the direct open-shaft ammunition hoist of the American turret and the two-stage closed-shaft hoist of the English 12-inch turret with their safety arrangements.

Taking the practice in the English navy, we find there are two standard types of turret mounts; one with a two-stage hoist and the other with a direct hoist.

The two-stage hoist is applied to about 56 turrets on battle ships mounting 12-inch guns.

The direct hoist is applied to 8 turrets on battle ships mounting 12-inch guns, and to 18 turrets mounting 9.2-inch guns, and to about 136 turrets on armored cruisers mounting 9.2-inch guns or less; that is, a total in the British navy of 162 turrets flitted with direct, as against 56 fitted with the two-stage hoist.

In all other navies the direct hoist is most frequently installed.

In regard to the safety of the magazine, it would appear from this practice that the question of a one or two stage hoist is immaterial. Safety more directly depends upon the number and security of door protection, or flaps, and the isolation of the powder in transit.

The English adopted their two-stage hoist because they found by practical experience it gave greater rapidity of loading, and the question of safety did not enter into the discussion at the time of its adoption. In both types of English turrets the safety devices would appear to be equally effective whether with a broken hoist or direct hoist. To insure equal rapidity the broken hoist requires more charges of powder to be en route between magazine and gun, and in case of accident the confined space of the relay chamber and inclosed trunk would cause the powder to burn with greater violence than with more open arrangements. The closed trunk of the direct hoist would also confine the gases more, and requires the doors and flaps to be effective. The English practice of carrying a large number of explosive shell within the turret has not heretofore been adopted in this country, nor that of carrying an emergency or ready supply of powder within the turret floor or relay chamber as practiced in some designs of foreign ships.

After an examination of the designs of turrets in foreign navies, it can not be said that the practice abroad in general is any safer than that in this country, and if the great majority of foreign turrets were to be subjected to four such severe ordeals as ours have passed through it is difficult to say that they would have fared any better or even as well.

There remains no question, however, but that effective screens should be interposed to isolate the powder charge after passing out of the magazine, and whether we adopt the more complicated two-stage English hoist to gain rapidity or adhere to the simpler direct hoist of American design, it is independent of the question of safety devices which can be made equally effective for both.

AMMUNITION HOISTS.

Of each of the battle ships of the Navy now in commission and building it is known that at the time of their design the ammunition hoists were fully able to supply more than the quantity of ammunition then considered necessary for the most effective use of the guns under battle conditions.

Within the past few years the rapidity of gun fire has undergone a most surprising increase, and in consequence in some of our ships the ammunition hoists are, by reason of their earlier design, unequal to the demands now required to supply the guns under the conditions laid down for conducting our present system of target practice, which may be considered in the main as theoretical and misleading and not in the least likely to be met with in war. The apparent deficiency in the supply by the present hoists as shown under target-practice conditions would, however, not be by any means so great in battle as is apparently considered by some of the critics, as it is extremely doubtful if in actual fighting as much ammunition would be required or could be used as is now the case under present target-practice firing. As an instance of the very marked change in times in seconds between fires of the various calibers of guns which were considered good and effective firing by the Department between the years 1897 and 1903, when compared with the rapidity of fire as shown by the same calibers of guns in the record target practice held during the year 1907, the following table may be interesting:

Department's instruction relative to target practice, July 22, 1897—Time between fires.

	Seconds.
13-inch B. L. R.	320
12-inch B. L. R.	300
10-inch B. L. R.	240
8-inch B. L. R.	120
6-inch B. L. R.	90
5-inch B. L. R.	70
4-inch B. L. R.	60
6-inch R. F.	40
5-inch R. F.	25
4-inch R. F.	20
6-pounder	12
3-pounder	10

Results obtained at record target practice, 1907—Time between fires.

	Seconds.
13-inch (Alabama class)	40
13-inch (Indiana class)	51
12-inch (Maine class)	45
12-inch (Iowa class)	51
8-inch (Colorado class)	24
8-inch (Kearsarge class)	30
8-inch (Indiana class)	32
8-inch (Iowa class)	33
6-inch 50 calibers	7.9
6-inch 40 calibers	8.2
5-inch 40 calibers	5.5
3-inch 50 calibers	4.8
6-pounder semiautomatic	3.9
6-pounder rapid-fire	5.2
3-pounder	5

From the above table it will be easily seen that ammunition hoists fully capable of meeting all demands anticipated at the time of their design a few years since may not now be capable, nor could they reasonably be expected to be capable, of supplying the largely increased demand (an increase of from five to eight fold) made upon them by the surprising development of rapidity of gun fire. It is expected that recently designed and coming designs of hoists will fully meet present demands, but it is quite probable that the development of the next few years may render designs now equal to all demands liable to the same faults the critics observe in our earlier designs—that is, unequal to meet a future unknown increased requirement. In some of the ships necessary changes have already been made to bring the hoists up to the present requirements, and it is hoped, as circumstances permit vessels to be withdrawn temporarily from service, the remaining hoists may be changed to meet the increased demands.

IN AND OUT TURNING SCREWS.

Until 1895 it had been the practice in our Navy to build all twin-screw ships with out-turning screws, notwithstanding the fact that other navies, noticeably the British, had for some time been designing vessels with in-turning screws. Experiments were carried out, and after much research, the conclusion was reached that the in-turning screws gave a slight gain in speed without loss in maneuvering qualities, so long as the vessels were under way; but with no way on, the in-turning were not quite so efficient as out-turning screws. The arrangement of the machinery in vessels fitted with in-turning screws, however, was considered more desirable. The advantages were supposed to be somewhat in favor of the in-turning, and in 1895 they were adopted for some of our vessels. Since then there have been constructed seven battle ships, eight armored cruisers, six cruisers, two gunboats, twelve torpedo-boat destroyers, seven torpedo boats, and four monitors, having in-turning screws.

After considerable trial and further experiment with the vessels built with in-turning screws, it was decided that their supposed advantages did not compensate for the disadvantage of maneuvering when in squadron and under certain other circumstances, and the Department on April 15, 1903, decided to design all future vessels with out-turning screws; and, furthermore, to change from in to out turning screws all vessels then building, provided the condition of the work on the vessels under construction permitted this to be done without excessive cost. All of our vessels designed since April, 1903, have out-turning screws.

THE "KEARSARGE" AND "KENTUCKY."

The act of Congress of March 2, 1895, authorized the construction of two "seagoing coast-line battle ships," subsequently named the Kearsarge and Kentucky. These ships were to be larger and more powerful than any of their predecessors, the Indiana, Massachusetts, Oregon, and Iowa.

The records of the Department show that during the preparation of the plans for these vessels the opinions of many officers of high professional standing were sought on the various military and other features involved, and it is believed that the designs at the time of their approval, twelve years ago, embodied as far as practicable all the improvements and best ideas relative to battle ships then known.

Among other new features introduced into these two ships was an improved method of controlling the recoil of the heavy 13-inch turret guns. In previous vessels this recoil has been checked by two hydraulic cylinders located under the gun. This system had not given satisfaction. A new type of carriage was designed having four recoil cylinders—two on top and two below the gun—but the center of oscillation of the gun itself was necessarily changed, so that the distance between it and the side of the turret was about 14 inches greater than before. This change necessitated a somewhat larger port opening, in order that full elevation and depression might be given the guns. In all cases it had been customary to provide for a clearance of 1 inch on either side and above and below the gun and its port when the former was at extreme elevation or depression.

At the time of the design of the Kearsarge the port area was known to be slightly greater than that of previous ships, and was fully considered and recognized as a disadvantage, but was thought to be more than compensated for by the advantages derived from the new type of mount and also by the knowledge that a chance shell entering the port and damaging a recoil cylinder would not, as in all previous turret mounts, put the gun out of action, as the remaining two or three recoil cylinders would still be sufficient to push the gun back into the firing position, which is not the case in prior battle ships, where the gun might be completely disabled by a small fragment of shell or, perhaps, even by a shock rupturing one or more of the several hydraulic or steam pipes operating the gun.

For the reasons above stated, in addition to others, the best opinion inclined to the view that the turrets of the Kearsarge and Kentucky were, notwithstanding the increased areas of their ports, much more reliable and effective for heavy gun service than those of any of their predecessors. This view is fully borne out by the twelve years of excellent service performed by these guns, and they are still efficient weapons.

It has been stated that "the openings above and below the guns in the turrets of these ships are 10 feet square." If this were the case, the exposed area would be 100 square feet. As a matter of fact, it is by actual measurement 9.12 square feet.

The accompanying sketch,[a] drawn to scale, shows the outside face of the 13-inch turret gun ports of the Indiana, Iowa, Kearsarge, and Alabama classes of battle ships and represents the actual appearance of the turret ports with the gun's level, the hatched portion being the section of the gun at the outer face of the port. It will be seen that the relative sizes of the areas exposed to hostile shot do not differ so greatly in varying types of ships as some critics would have the public believe. In the case of the Iowa the guns are 12-inch instead of 13-inch and the range of elevation is only 13° instead of 15°, as in the other types, which accounts for her turret openings being smaller than the others shown in the drawings.

The chances that even one heavy shell would enter the space above the port in action are very remote indeed; but the phenomenal advance made during the past few years in rapidity and accuracy of fire of the intermediate and secondary batteries of warships has accentuated the recognized importance of reducing the port area to a minimum, and of providing a suitable protection. Steps were taken to accomplish this result in 1903; and all vessels completed since the beginning of 1904 (except four cruisers of the Colorado class, having 8-inch guns) have been fitted with shutters or shields as shown in the sketches following pages 65 and 66. Similar protection is to be fitted to the older vessels when circumstances permit of their being withdrawn from service sufficiently long to enable the change to be completed.

As has been previously stated, there was probably more discussion over the preliminary designs for battle ships Nos. 5 and 6 (Kearsarge and Kentucky) than over any others which have been built for our Navy. The general questions of the battery, armor, speed, etc., were fully discussed. The proposition to use superposed turrets was novel, and the views of many officers were sought. The relative merits of the 12-inch and 13-inch guns were duly considered, and the caliber of the intermediate battery was fixed at 5 inches, because that was considered the largest that could use "fixed" ammunition, then deemed essential to any gun deserving the name of "rapid fire." Whether these 5-inch guns should be mounted in pairs in small turrets, or be boxed in, or simply separated from one another by splinter bulkheads, was fully argued, and conclusions reached only after mature deliberation.

It is worthy of note that at the time these vessels were built our Navy was still using brown powder in its heavy guns, and on account of the residue left after firing it was necessary to sponge out the bore of the gun after each round. Accordingly the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance stated that the rate of fire of the batteries of these vessels would be as follows:

13-inch guns, one shot every 300 seconds;
8-inch guns, one shot every 120 seconds;
5-inch guns, one shot every 20 seconds.

The guns and mounts were designed to meet these requirements.

At the recent target practice the maximum rate of fire for the guns of the Kearsarge was given as follows:

13-inch guns, one shot every 35.5 seconds;
8-inch guns, one shot every 22.9 seconds;
5-inch guns, one shot every 4.24 seconds.

The adoption of smokeless powder did away with the necessity for sponging out the guns after firing, as it left no residue in the bore, and hence it became possible to greatly increase the rapidity of fire. This powder also gave increased velocity and consequently greater range and penetration to the projectiles, and by the adoption of new sights increased accuracy of fire has been obtained; but the guns being shorter than those of more recent construction, are much less powerful. While the offensive powers of these vessels have been greatly improved, the defensive qualities still remain the same as when the ships were designed, nor can they well be changed until the vessels are withdrawn from active service for a general overhauling and remodeling.

It is claimed that these vessels are "not fit for service in battle line against really modern vessels." No one would claim that these ships could engage in battle on terms of equality with the most modern battle ships, as they are inferior in size, armor, and armament to the latest vessels of our own and foreign navies, and to assert otherwise would be tantamount to denying that there had been any progress made in the art of battle-ship building for twelve years. No commander would hesitate to take these vessels into a fleet action, and it can not for a moment be believed but that, with their heavy battery of 13 and 8 inch guns and good armor protection, they would give an excellent account of themselves, not only against ships of about their own date of design, but also against any other vessel falling within the range of their guns. They are good and effective ships, but we do not claim they are as efficient as more recent vessels.

GENERAL NOTES.

Criticisms have been frequently made of the fact that a few of our large vessels are not fitted with automobile torpedoes, and at the present time it is recognized that the absence of these torpedoes is somewhat of a disadvantage. At the time of the design of the large vessels which are not fitted with torpedoes the question of the advisability of giving them a torpedo outfit received careful and thorough discussion and consideration, and the outfit was omitted for what were deemed very good and sufficient reasons. At the time these vessels were designed (from about 1900 to 1902) the torpedo had an effective range of about 1,000 to 1,200 yards, and as it was not expected that hostile ships would engage in action within that distance the torpedo became a weapon of secondary importance, and it was not thought that the installation of this comparatively secondary weapon in large vessels would longer justify the assignment of the necessary space, which could be used to so much more effective military purpose otherwise. As late as 1905 a most distinguished admiral of the British navy, writing of the use of the torpedo during the naval operations of the campaign of 1904 in the war between Japan and Russia, stated: "It is not too much to say that experience of the late campaign, confirming as it does the arguments of students of tactics in these days of long-range guns, justifies a demand that torpedoes should be withdrawn from the armament of cruisers and battle ships."

Since our large cruisers and battle ships not fitted with torpedoes were designed the effective range of the torpedo has undergone a great increase, and it is now claimed to be efficient up to 4,000 yards. This improvement has rendered them again, as in former days, a weapon to be reckoned with and consequently we readopted them, and all our large vessels designed since this improvement carry torpedoes, as do also all of the other vessels originally so designed wherever it has been practicable to so rearrange their underwater space as to enable the tubes and accessories to be installed.

It may be stated that our policy of temporarily abandoning the torpedo for battle ships and armored cruisers when it failed to keep pace with what was considered battle range for guns and again taking it up when improvements made it once more a useful and effective weapon within the battle ranges was not different from the policy pursued by foreign navies.

Referring to some of the criticisms recently appearing in print, it may be stated in general terms that in our Navy sighting hoods were put on turrets because no other practicable way of pointing the guns effectively existed. No criticism, however, seems to have been made by the critics of the fact that all other navies with turreted ships follow the same system and for the same reason as ourselves.

The test of battle only will decide a suitable type of conning tower. As experience is gained the towers of our ships are modified, so far as possible, to meet the conditions required, and towers for ships building are designed in accordance with the latest reliable data. Changes of form, etc., have not been adopted simply because some foreign designers have evolved a novelty, but because it was not apparent that they were sufficiently superior to our own to justify such change until it had been demonstrated by actual test that they possessed merit. But we have never hesitated to adopt an idea that promised increased efficiency.

It is not advisable to adopt as fulfilling service requirements ideas evolved solely from the results of target practice, as such may be in many respects misleading. Ships fight in the open, rolling sea, at fast and varying speeds, constantly changing ranges, with always some pitching or rolling motion, and requiring for efficient sighting a large field of view for the gun pointer, much of whose light is shut off by reason of his protected position behind armor, and who fires at a target the speed and direction of which may be also constantly changing; whereas at target practice it is the invariable custom to choose a smooth sea, ideal weather conditions, the firing ship moves at a fixed speed, and fires at a stationary target generally at a known range; only one ship fires at a time, and be it remembered, with no shots striking or coming toward the firing ship to disconcert or excite the men pointing the guns. Battle conditions (that is, conditions under which we are likely to fight) should be the criterion and not the ideal conditions selected for target practice.

It is noted that in one of the criticisms recently made in a printed article the author refers, in condemning the heights of our broadside batteries, to the disadvantage these guns would work under in an engagement where the enemy is to windward, and states that the leeward position is to be sought inasmuch as the ship so situated is clear of her own smoke. The "weather gauge" was a primary advantage in the days of sailing ships, and its advantage over the lee is greater to-day than this critic seems to think. It is doubtful if any captain would select the leeward position, and particularly so if there was any sea running, as most probably would be the case. Modern gunpowder gives out little or no smoke, and therefore the great advantage claimed by the critic above referred to fails; but, instead, the leeward ship has the greater and more important disadvantage of the smoke from his antagonist's funnels and of flying spray and moisture obscuring the glass of the telescope, which will seriously interfere with the aiming and firing of the guns. The question of the direction of the sun is also one of much importance, and if it is a case of choice of windward position with the sun at his back or leeward position with the sun in his face, there is little doubt but that the critic above referred to would change his views. Practical experience is the best of all teachers, and it requires this as well as study to discuss professional matters; otherwise in advocating a small and perhaps unimportant advantage sight may be lost of the several more weighty and overmatching disadvantages.

The question of the selection of an efficient or satisfactory range finder is one that we have been struggling with for years, and the fact of its not having been developed is due not to any lack of human effort or ingenuity. Other nations have experienced the same difficulty. Our ships are now supplied with the best range finder thus far known. The main difficulty lies in the physical impracticability, at the present stage of human knowledge, of being able to measure trigonometrically a distance of several miles from the necessary short base line possible to be had on board the measuring ship. Many of the greatest minds of the world have been engaged on this problem for years, but unfortunately with no great success up to the present day.

To the claim that we have no means of handling a fleet in a fog, it may be said that at the present stage of human knowledge it will always be a difficult problem to properly handle a fleet in a fog, and in this respect our Navy does not differ from others. We are possibly neither behind nor ahead of other nations in this respect. When nature permits us to see through a fog or science develops a means of penetrating its cloud we can hope to overcome this difficulty, but until then we will, like all other human beings, be compelled to struggle with the problem.

The international regulations for preventing collisions at sea which have been enacted by Congress into law require that the steam whistle or siren shall be so placed that its sound will not be intercepted by any obstruction, and consequently our steam whistles and sirens, in compliance with this law, are placed forward of the smoke pipes. While it might be undoubtedly more convenient and less trying upon the hearing of the officer of the deck if the whistle were placed abaft the smokestack, yet so long as the law remains as at present we can not place the whistle where its sound will be obstructed.

[a] Not printed in RECORD.

In a recently published magazine article severe criticisms were made regarding accidents (the dates of which were specifically stated) which have happened in the turrets of three of our battle ships, and it was claimed that notwithstanding these accidents—prior unfortunate experiences, and of the recommendations and reports of various officers thereon—nothing was done to remedy the defects complained of. It is inconceivable that a person would jeopardize his reputation for veracity by making such specific statements upon matters of the character referred to without verifying his data or satisfying himself as to the reliability and trustworthiness of the source from which his information was obtained.

The official records of the Department amply and clearly disprove the statements made as to nothing having been done to remedy the defects alleged to exist in our direct-loading ammunition hoists, as prior to the unfortunate accident on board the Missouri in April, 1904, both the Bureaus of Ordnance and Construction and Repair had endeavored to obtain a satisfactory form of shutter doors designed to close the opening in the turret floors after the passage of the ammunition cars to the guns. A design developed at the Washington Navy-Yard in March and April of 1904 was authorized to be constructed with a view to its application to the turrets of the Virginia class of battle ships then under construction, as well as to all other vessels as far as practicable. Before, however, this shutter, which was attached to the ammunition hoist rails, was completed, a satisfactory shutter attached to the turret itself was perfected and has since been applied in all turrets.

As early as January, 1904, the Bureau of Ordnance took up the matter of the design of a two-stage ammunition hoist with a company well known as manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance material, in connection with a model subsequently exhibited by them at the World's Fair, St. Louis. Every effort was made to put an ammunition hoist of this type in the U. S. S. New Hampshire, and contracts were actually made in August, 1905. It was found, however, that the design was too heavy, involving a total increase in structural weight of the turrets of more than 150 tons, and that it could not be installed without greatly exceeding the weights allowed for ordnance outfit.

Modifications of this type of hoist were subsequently made by which its weight was greatly reduced, and the adoption of this hoist, or a hoist of similar nature, was determined upon by the board of construction prior to the accident on the Georgia. The report of the special turret board simply confirmed the action of the Board of Construction, but was not received until months after the type of turret above referred to had been decided upon, and did not therefore cause the adoption of the turret as has been claimed by the incorrectly informed persons alluded to.

It is needless to add that all criticisms made from time to time concerning any detail of our ships which have reached the Board of Construction have received its careful attention and consideration. Whether the criticism was important and well based or whether it was, as the majority have proved to be, lacking in merit, no difference was made in taking them up, for all have been carefully weighed. When the conditions and circumstances seemed to merit action by the board such has been invariably taken.

To criticise is human nature, and men interested in a subject or its development are generally much given to making suggestions or criticisms regarding changes which, in their opinions, would be improvements. Particularly is this the case where little or no responsibility lies with the critic, and perhaps more so even when one has a professional interest in the subject under consideration. To the person, however, charged with the responsibility of the adoption of the changes suggested by the critics, and particularly so where such changes may seriously affect the public welfare and involve the expenditure of large sums of Government money, it is only natural that he, having this great responsibility, should require that the advantages claimed for the alterations be satisfactorily proved before the time, labor, and money necessary to carry out the suggested ideas are expended This very proper requirement is in many cases resented by critics, some of whom are prone to publish their grievances because of the not immediate acceptance of their ideas, and to claim that inventions and improvements are not adopted as they should be—that those in authority are too conservative, and to make various other allegations.

If such critics were to investigate they might find that in many cases their own ideas were not entirely original; that perhaps others had been working along the same or similar lines and had perhaps evolved a more completed project, or even, perhaps, that experiment had proved their schemes not suitable for naval purposes. It is this question of investigating and demonstrating the usefulness of an invention, suggested change, or alteration before adoption and before authorizing the expenditure of large sums of public money which protects the Government, but at the same time affords the critic, who has no responsibility toward the country, the opportunity so many avail themselves of—to criticise unfavorably and perhaps unjustly the person upon whom the direct responsibility for the protection of the interests of the Government really lies, and who, in so far as the Navy is concerned and about whom I feel qualified to speak, are faithful to their trust.

In concluding this report, which has been made after a thorough consideration of the defects known, as well as claimed, to exist in the battle ships of our Navy, and using the most reliable and authentic data obtainable, the following facts may be regarded as established:

Battle drills.—In recent years our Navy has paid much attention to war drills and exercises, and the tendency has been to continue to increase and widen our experience in this respect. These drills have been, however, necessarily carried out with the limited number of ships available, which, unfortunately, did not make a homogeneous fleet; but now, with sixteen practically similar battle ships in commission, we hope to gain great advantages from the continuation of the battle-fleet drills begun with those ships last year as soon as the fleet could be withdrawn from the Jamestown Exposition.

Freeboard of our ships.—Examination of the plans and other reliable data concerning our own and foreign ships of the same date of design shows clearly that in the matter of freeboard we compare, with the exception of the Indiana and Kentucky classes, the first-built battle ships of the Navy, most favorably. With reference to the British and Japanese battle ships, which have given good results under service conditions, our vessels have, in the main, more freeboard, and in the instances where they exceed us, it is only by such few inches as may be, for any practical advantages, ignored.

Height of gun positions.—Here again, excepting the Indiana and Kentucky classes, our ships carry their forward turret guns generally as high or even higher above water than similar ships of the British and Japanese navies, and in the heights above water of guns firing on the broadside we are noticeably in the lead. Everything considered, our gun heights are amply sufficient to meet the necessities of battle, second to those of no other nation in effectiveness, and can be used efficiently in any sea fighting in which naval actions are at all likely to take place.

Armor.—A comparison of the height of armor belts of our ships with those of foreign ships of same date and design shows that, in general, our armor belt is somewhat higher above water, and, furthermore, that the armor of our ships is usually thicker and fully as well distributed, both above as well as below the water line. In the matter of the main armor belt, about which much criticism has appeared, when our ships are brought into actual combat we have nothing to fear from any alleged superiority of foreign vessels of the same date of design.

Turret designs. The turret designs of our ships are in the main very similar to those of the French and to the great majority of ships of the British and Japanese navies. The general arrangement of the magazine about a handling room into which the ammunition hoist leads, is also similar in all navies. The dangers which we, and others, have principally to contend with are those of liability to flare back at the breech of the gun and the accidental ignition of grains of powder. The remedy is twofold: By preventing the escape of all gas from the breech of the gun into the turret; and, second, by the interposition of partitions or screens fitted with doors and flaps along the route of the powder charges from the handling rooms to the gun, by which means the flame from the burning grains would be prevented from coming in contact with the powder in transit. Devices to accomplish both of these results have been installed in our ships. The advantages of the two-stage ammunition hoist in the matter of safety are not manifest, nor have they been fully established over the straight-lead hoist which we have heretofore used in our service. We are in our latest-designed ships installing the two-stage hoist, primarily because it affords a more rapid supply of ammunition to the guns, but its adoption as our future standard has not yet been decided upon.

Supply of ammunition.—It may be stated with certainty that no navy has as yet ammunition hoists capable of supplying ammunition to the guns at the rate called for by our modern target-practice conditions; nor will the guns, in all probability, in action require ammunition at those rates. Our hoists are not inferior to those of foreign ships, and with the changes to be made or already made in them will meet all the necessities of our ships.

In and out turning screws.—We built some vessels with in-turning screws because of their supposed advantages and because also foreign navies with larger experience were doing the same. We ceased building such vessels when we had satisfied ourselves that the advantages were supposed rather than real.

The Kearsarge and Kentucky.—The exposed openings of the gun ports of these vessels are recognized as being larger than desirable. The two ships, however, are efficient and serviceable vessels and are in no sense of the word the failures some persons have alleged. The enlarged port area was a necessity due to improvement in the efficiency of the gun mounts and was but a small factor of disadvantage when compared with the several advantages which made the guns of those two ships superior as weapons of war to any which we had theretofore constructed. These two ships were, however, designed more than twelve years ago and do not, of course, embody all the improvements of up-to-date ships, and on this account it is the intention to give them a general overhauling as soon as the funds are available.

Torpedoes.—At the present time our supply of torpedoes is less than it should be. This fault, however, is due to the inability of our manufacturers to build them and not to any lack of effort upon the part of the Navy to procure a sufficiency. It is hoped in the near future this present difficulty may be overcome. The output of torpedoes will be materially increased by the torpedo factory now building at the naval station, Newport, R. I., and which will soon be in full operation.

Gun sights and range finders.—In these respects our ships are in no manner second to those of other navies.

Finally.—Our ships are not inferior to those in foreign services. We have made compromises in our designs of battle ships, because it is impossible to construct a perfect battle ship; such compromises have, perhaps, detracted from the desired perfect ship in some respect, but at the same time have made it possible to improve upon some other existing disadvantages, and, on the whole, the compromises, each and all, have tended toward a nearer approach to the desired perfect finality. Other nations have labored and will, like ourselves, continue to labor under this same difficulty in endeavoring to approach as near as possible to that impossibility—a perfect battle ship. In making compromises in the building of our ships, I am satisfied that in every instance all concerned in the work have acted honestly and patriotically and only with the desire to produce the best ship possible. The result has been in each case, ship by ship and year by year, an improvement upon all that have preceded, and no ship has been built by us inferior to those of any nation designed at the same time.

The quality of the matériel of our Navy is inferior to none; in quantity of vessels alone are we lacking. With an increase in number of ships, the American Navy will have been supplied the only feature necessary to make it second to none in all that tends toward fighting efficiency, and when the stress of actual combat, if such should ever unfortunately come, brings the only really practical test our country need have no misgivings or fear but that our battle ships will give an excellent account of themselves and prove themselves all that we have designed them for and know them to be.

Very respectfully,

G. A. CONVERSE,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy (Retired).

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I also present a report concerning certain alleged defects in naval vessels of the United States, prepared by Rear-Admiral Washington Lee Capps, Chief Constructor of the United States Navy and Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. I ask that this also may be inserted in the RECORD, printed as a Senate document, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Report concerning certain alleged defects in vessels of the United States Navy, by Washington Lee Capps, Chief Constructor United States Navy and Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1908.

SIR: In conformity with the Department's instructions to prepare data with respect to height of freeboard, gun height, water-line armor distribution, and other features of the design of typical battle ships of the United States and the most important foreign navies, so far as such data might be available, with a view to definitely and conclusively refuting the many misstatements which have recently appeared in the public press, and especially the misstatements contained in a recent magazine article, I beg to submit the following report:

The preparation of data with respect to vessels of the United States Navy is, of course, not difficult, although its presentation in a form which would readily meet the needs of the Department required much time and labor. The preparation of reasonably accurate data of a similar character with respect to foreign battle ships involved much greater difficulty; but the chief constructor has fully availed himself of the resources of the Department in obtaining such data and has had examined all the most important special reports on such subjects, including reports of naval officers who have recently made tours of inspection in foreign countries, reports on file in the office of naval intelligence based upon the reports of naval attachés, official parliamentary and other documents which give statistics of foreign naval vessels, and the principal British and French professional publications which deal with naval matters; he has also utilized the personal knowledge and professional notes of various members of the corps of naval constructors who have been educated at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, England; the École d'Application du Genie Maritime, Paris, France, and the University of Glasgow, Glasgow, Scotland, these officers having kept more or less in direct touch with professional developments in those countries. Although it can not be claimed that the data with respect to foreign battle ships is wholly accurate, it can be stated with entire assurance that it is the most accurate obtainable without having access to actual official drawings and specifications.

It is noteworthy, however, that in the case of several foreign ships unusually reliable official data was available; also that in the case of those battle ships of the Japanese fleet which took part in the battle of the Sea of Japan there was at hand accurate data, which had previously been printed in English scientific publications, as well as very complete descriptions, with detailed data, prepared by the director of naval construction of the Japanese navy and published in the proceedings of a scientific society of Japan, and subsequently translated and republished in one of the most important English engineering publications. It is therefore evident that comparison between American battle ships and such Japanese battle ships as existed at the time of the Russo-Japanese war can be made accurately, and that comparison with certain other foreign battle ships can also be made with an unusual degree of accuracy.

In order that the Department might have complete information in a convenient form the following tabular statements and plans have been prepared and are made a part of this report:

I. Tabular statement giving principal characteristics of typical foreign battle ships.

II. Comparative table of gun heights, etc., of typical modern battle ships.

III. Tabular statement of heights of upper edge of main water-line belt armor above trial or designed load water line for typical foreign and United States battle ships.

IV. Length, width, and thickness of water-line armor and upper side belt armor for United States battle ships.

V. Tabular statement of principal characteristics of Russian and Japanese ships which took part in the battle of the Straits of Tsushima, otherwise called "battle of Sea of Japan."

VI. Tabular statement of heights of turret and broadside gun axes above designed load water line for United States battle ships and armored cruisers.

VII. Cross sections of typical battle ships of the United States and foreign navies, showing breadth and thickness of main water-line belt; also depth of submersion of lower edge of main-armor belt below the designed water line; also height of top of main-armor belt above designed load water line; also designed load displacement and coal carried on designed load displacement; also height of freeboard and height of broadside gun axes.

VIII. Profiles and cross sections of typical battle ships of the United States Navy, giving distribution of armor, heights of gun axes, etc. (Sheets 1 to 14.)

IX. Profiles and cross sections of typical foreign battle ships, giving distribution of armor, heights of gun axes, etc. (Sheets 1 to 15.)

X. Booklet of profiles of United States battle ships, showing development of side-armor protection.

Among the various foreign publications, special reports, etc., consulted were the following:

Parliamentary papers and other published official documents relating to foreign ships.
Special reports.
Photographs of foreign ships.
Transactions of the Institution of Naval Architects.
Bulletin de L'Association Technique Maritime.
Other foreign technical society publications.
Engineer (London).
Engineering (London).
Naval and Military Record (London).
Nautical Gazette.
Armee at Marine.
Le Yacht.
Brassey's Naval Annual.
Naval Pocket Book (Clowes).
Jane's All the World's Fighting Ships.
Les Flottes de Combat.

After reading some of the sensational comments which have recently been made concerning certain features of battle-ship design, one would be justified in believing that such features were novelties whose consideration had not heretofore been thought of, or else that the questions involved were so complex as to have confused and misled the responsible designers of the United States Navy as well as those of the principal foreign navies.

It would also appear that ill-informed representatives of a would-be new school of design deemed it necessary to invite special attention to professional subjects, which, as a matter of fact, had already received most serious consideration by officers of thorough professional training and experience as subordinate officers and commanders of naval vessels or fleets. That the large majority of the alleged defects in our naval vessels do not exist in fact will be conclusively shown in the following pages; but before entering upon any argument which involves the use of the data contained in the previously enumerated plans and tabular statements, and before entering upon any categorical refutation of the many misstatements of fact contained in the magazine article already alluded to, it is deemed necessary to define with accuracy the conventional phrases used by naval designers in distinguishing between "light displacement," "load displacement," and "deep-load displacement," for it is doubtless the confusion of these terms by the non-expert that has been responsible for so much of the silly and misleading criticism which has had such vogue in the secular and semitechnical press and, I regret deeply to add, among some of the less well-informed officers of the United States Navy.

"Light displacement" in all navies is a term which describes the condition of the ship when complete in all respects—with armor, armament, machinery, equipment, etc., on board, but without coal, water, ammunition, or stores of any kind, or personnel.

"Designed load displacement" in the United States Navy, as well as in foreign navies, corresponds to our more familiar designation of "trial" or "normal" displacement and indicates the condition of the vessel when it is complete in all respects, as in the "light" condition, and, in addition, has on board the personnel and all outfit, a certain proportion of ammunition and all consumable stores, and an arbitrarily determined quantity of coal in the bunkers, also water in boilers at steaming level, and, in the case of battle ships, about 100 tons of fresh water in tanks and double bottoms. In the United States Navy this condition provides for two-thirds of all ammunition and consumable stores being on board, and since the design of the Kearsarge class (more than twelve years ago) the quantity of coal in the bunkers, on the designed load displacement, has been from 800 to 1,000 tons, except in the case of the 17-knot battle ships Idaho and Mississippi. An examination of the quantity of coal in the bunkers of typical foreign ships under similar conditions indicates that there were from 700 to 950 tons of coal in the bunkers on the designed load displacement. In this connection it is interesting to note that the "designed load displacement of the Dreadnought provided for only 900 tons of coal in the bunkers, although the bunker capacity was 2,700 tons. The published accounts indicate that the actual load draft of that vessel was considerably more than 1 foot greater, with the 900 tons of coal on board, than was provided for in the design.

"Deep load displacement" in our own and foreign navies is a term which indicates the displacement of the vessel fully completed, ready for sea, with all stores, ammunition, coal, etc., on board, and is a condition which, of course, only obtains when the vessel has been freshly provisioned, coaled, etc. It also includes not only the full supply of potable water, but a substantial amount of reserve fresh water for the boilers, etc. It is obvious, therefore, that there are many weights on board at such a time which could be quickly disposed of and the ship lightened to that extent should the necessity therefor arise, even though the enemy should be met with shortly after leaving port.

Inasmuch as some arbitrary plane of reference is absolutely essential in determining such important features as water-line protection, height of freeboard, etc., the water line at designed load displacement is the arbitrary plane of reference naturally selected. It would be obviously improper to consider such important features as "freeboard," "water-line armor protection," etc., as being governed by the draft of the vessel at "light" displacement. It would be almost equally improper to consider that such qualities should be governed by the draft of the vessel at "deep-load" displacement. By common consent, therefore, all designers in all countries of which the chief constructor has knowledge base such essential requirements of the vessel as the "freeboard," "water-line armor distribution," etc., upon the draft at the designed load displacement, this displacement being one which may reasonably be regarded as representing the minimum displacement at which battle ships will begin an engagement. The distribution of water-line armor, freeboard, height of gun axes, etc., are, however, such that even should a vessel be compelled to engage in battle shortly after being provisioned and coaled, the protection of the vital portions of the vessel and the ability to fight the guns under all ordinary conditions of weather would be as thoroughly assured as possible for the particular type of design in question.

The consideration of freeboard, gun height, water-line armor distribution, etc., is now and always has been a matter of the gravest concern to naval designers and naval officers who are, in any responsible way, connected with naval design. The transactions of scientific societies and reports of boards of officers of the United States Navy and foreign navies afford ample evidence of the truth of the foregoing statement, and definite reference will be made to some of the more important of these documents later on in this report.

It is unquestionably true, and a fact never disputed so far as I am aware, that in many instances, in all navies, battle ships, as completed, have a somewhat greater draft of water than that provided for in the original design, this excess draft being mainly due, not to errors of calculation or design, but largely to extra weights involved in "changes" and other weights added subsequent to the approval of the design, and for which the designers were not responsible. The changes are, in the large majority of cases, desirable, inasmuch as they increase the military efficiency of the vessel, and, as a rule, are the result of unusual developments in ordnance or other naval matériel subsequent to the completion of the design of the vessel. Such changes are, however, only justifiable when they make a definite addition to the military value of the vessel, and those charged with the actual responsibility of completing the vessel as nearly as possible in accordance with the original design have very great difficulty in limiting such changes to those which will give a definite increase to the military efficiency of the vessel when completed. That the excess draft, for which the designer is in no sense primarily responsible, and which he often has great difficulty in controlling within reasonable limits, does not often gravely affect the freeboard of the vessel or effective distribution of the water-line armor, may be readily understood when it is stated that the excess draft, in the case of battle ships forming the present Atlantic battle-ship fleet, amounts to as much as 11 inches in the case of one ship only, and in the majority of the vessels of the fleet averages 7½ inches and under. To dwell longer upon this phase of the question would seem needless.

While definite knowledge of the meaning of the various terms used for indicating the displacement of battle ships would appear to leave no possible ground for error in comparing the qualities of different battle ships of different navies, the confusion of such terms is apparently responsible for the perpetration of many of the extraordinary blunders which have been made by self-satisfied critics in their criticism of vessels of the United States Navy. In fact, so far as may be judged from the statements of such ill-informed writers, it appears that the draft, displacement, free board, etc., of foreign vessels at designed load displacement have been compared with similar characteristics of United States vessels at deep-load displacement. As the variation between the "designed load" and "deep load" displacement of the larger battle ships designed in the last seven or eight years is more than 2 feet, the unfairness and grave error involved in any such comparison should be quite obvious to anyone who has once been advised as to the real facts. There appear to be those, however (and I am compelled to believe that some of them are officers of the naval service, who ought to know better), who either will not or can not appreciate the absolute unfairness—to use no harsher expression—of comparing vessels of different countries under dissimilar conditions of displacement. Moreover, in the consideration of all such questions as freeboard, height of gun axes, distribution of water-line armor, etc., it should be borne clearly in mind that, broadly speaking, there are two distinct and radically different "schools of naval design," each of which has had from time to time a substantial following among naval officers and naval designers. What may be termed the American and British school of designers has held to a moderate freeboard and moderate height of main-gun axes, thus obtaining a very substantial increase of defensive and offensive powers by reason of the saving of weight resulting therefrom. The Japanese have closely followed the American and British school or design. As a matter of fact, the Japanese battle ships which took part in the battle of the Sea of Japan were built in England, and very closely followed the British school of design. On the other hand, the French school has heretofore inclined, with few exceptions, to high freeboard, great height of gun axes, and a very considerable water-line armor protection, but has been compelled to accept serious sacrifices consequent thereupon.

A complete exposition of the characteristics and merits of the two schools of design would be entirely too involved to present in a report of this kind; but, in brief, it may be stated that the forward freeboard and height of main battery in French ships is, in general, one deck height greater than the freeboard and height of forward main battery on vessels of the British, American, and Japanese ships. Such an excessive freeboard and elevation of the forward main battery involves serious disadvantages, among them being greatly increased target area; serious diminution in the armor protection of the hull structure supporting the main battery emplacements; serious decrease of stability of the vessel under damaged conditions.

Of course the designed height of freeboard forward on any given type of battle ship is necessarily dependent upon the prospective maximum speed, the location of the heavy weights with respect to the extremities, and the length of the vessel; so that a freeboard which would be quite sufficient at moderate speed for a full-lined vessel of 400 or 450 feet in length, with a normal distribution of weights, would be by no means sufficient at high speed for a much longer vessel with fine water lines and, comparatively speaking, a concentration of heavy weights nearer the extremities of the vessel. Concerning this, however, more will appear later on when disposing in detail of certain recent very inaccurate allegations concerning naval vessels.

In considering the general questions of height of freeboard, height of main gun axes, etc., for battle ships of dimensions, displacement, and speed corresponding in a general way to those of battle ships of the United States Atlantic fleet, also the best location of the water-line belt and other armor for same, and the very inaccurate and misleading statements which have appeared in relation thereto, the Chief Constructor begs to invite special attention to a most notable discussion which took place in London about nineteen years ago with respect to these very matters. The writer of this report, who was then on special duty in London, had the good fortune to attend all of the meetings at which this public discussion took place and to this day can vividly recall the impressions made upon him by the various speakers. The majority of the gentlemen who participated in this discussion were seagoing officers of the British navy and were thoroughly representative of the very best elements in that navy. They were men whose names were household words in Great Britain, and a perusal of some of the comments made by these officers will fully convince any impartial judge that all the seagoing and military qualities of the Royal Sovereign class were given the most serious and careful consideration by the most experienced seagoing officers of the British navy at that time.

In referring at length to the designs and the discussion upon the designs of the Royal Sovereign, it seems hardly necessary to dwell upon the fact that in Great Britain, for many years, everything connected with the development of the navy has been considered of the most vital importance, in view of the popular conviction that the navy is the right arm of the national defense and, in time of war, would really be responsible for the life of the nation. British naval designs and the opinions of officers of the British navy in relation thereto are therefore entitled to the most serious consideration in determining what is the most desirable type of battle ship; and while British designers and British naval officers are quite as liable to error as those of other countries, the vitally essential character and the size of the British navy are such as to entitle it to marked consideration in comparing the relative merits of battle ships of foreign navies.

The meeting and discussion above referred to took place in London in April, 1889, at a time when British naval matériel and the action of the British Admiralty in relation thereto were being severely criticised. Designs of battle ships prepared and presented for general criticism under such conditions would naturally receive unusual consideration. Moreover, in order that the situation with respect to responsibility for battle-ship designs may be fully appreciated, it may be stated that the board of admiralty had complete and undisputed responsibility in such matters and two-thirds of its membership was composed of specially selected naval officers, the naval membership at that time being as follows:

Admiral Sir Arthur William Acland Hood.
Admiral Sir Richard Vesey Hamilton.
Rear-Admiral John Ommanney Hopkins.
Rear-Admiral Charles Frederick Hotham.

This unusually strong and representative board of admiralty, desiring to develop a design of battle ship which would fully embody the ideas of the seagoing element and effectively dispose of such adverse criticism as had previously been made concerning battle-ship design, instructed the director of naval construction, Mr. (now Sir) William H. White, to prepare tentative designs which would represent certain special characteristics which were then in favor among different groups of naval officers. These sketch designs, when completed, were thoroughly discussed by the board of admiralty, which also invited comments from distinguished officers of the British navy who had recently returned to shore duty after a period of command afloat. After mature deliberation two designs were selected, one of them being what was then described as a "high-freeboard" barbette vessel and the other a "low-freeboard" turret vessel. The high-freeboard barbette vessel was the Royal Sovereign, and it was this type which received the unqualified commendation of the board of admiralty and its additional advisers of the naval service.

In view of the extensive criticism which had previously been made, the director of naval construction sought and obtained permission from the Admiralty to prepare a complete description, with outline plans, of the high-freeboard barbette battle ships and the comparatively low freeboard turret battle ships, for publication in the proceedings of the Institution of Naval Architects and for discussion at the subsequent meeting of that society. This paper of Sir William White's also contained tabular data and outline plans of certain battle ships previously designed for the British Admiralty, also comparison with some of the latest foreign designs. Especial attention was invited to the fact that the forward freeboard of the barbette battle ship of the Royal Sovereign class was very considerably higher than that of the Nile and Trafalgar and Camperdown classes, which were the immediate predecessors of the Royal Sovereign type in the British navy.

As previously noted, this paper of Sir William White's was discussed at the spring meeting of the Institution of Naval Architects in 1889, and the discussion was participated in by the most prominent British naval officers then in London, as well as by prominent naval architects, among them being two former directors of naval construction, Sir Nathaniel Barnaby and Sir Edward Reed. Among those, other than naval architects, who took part in the discussion, and extracts from whose remarks will hereafter be given, were Lord Armstrong, founder of the celebrated gun factory and shipyard near Newcastle on Tyne, and the following distinguished naval officers: Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, who, during a period of ten years, was controller of the British navy, an office which had under its jurisdiction the entire British naval material; Admiral-of-the-Fleet Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby, who was at that time principal naval aid-de-camp to the Sovereign and an officer of the greatest distinction, who had held some of the most important commands in the British service, both afloat and ashore; Admiral (at that time captain) Sir G. H. U Noel, an officer who has long been recognized as an authority in all matters pertaining to the development of the fleet and who has only recently returned from command of the British Asiatic fleet; Admiral (then captain) Right Hon. Lord Charles Beresford, who is at present in command of one of the most powerful fleets of battle ships in the world, and whose reputation is too well known to require further comment; also Admiral Lord Clanwilliam, Admiral P. H. Colomb, Captain (afterwards admiral) Long, and other officers of distinction. As previously noted, the Board of Admiralty, which originally passed upon the various general designs prepared by Sir William White, and selected that which was subsequently adopted for the Royal Sovereign class, included Admiral Sir Arthur William Acland Hood, Admiral Sir Richard Vesey Hamilton, Rear-Admiral John Ommanney Hopkins, and Rear-Admiral Charles Frederick Hotham, officers of highest professional standing and distinction, and thoroughly identified with the most experienced and best-informed element in the British navy.

Moreover, there were on duty at the Admiralty at this time and associated with the naval lords above mentioned many officers who, in the higher grades to which they have since been promoted, have acquitted themselves with distinction. Among them may be mentioned Capt. John A. Fisher, at that time director of naval ordnance and torpedoes, and at present admiral of the fleet and first sea lord of the British Admiralty; Rear-Admiral Sir George Tryon, at that time admiral superintendent of naval reserves and generally regarded as one of the most capable officers in the British navy; Capt. Edward Hobart Seymour, at that time assistant to the admiral superintendent of naval reserves, at present admiral of the fleet, and recently in command of the China station; Capt. Cyprian A. G. Bridge, at that time director of naval intelligence, subsequently admiral in command of the China station; Capt. Reginald Neville Custance, at that time assistant director of naval intelligence, now vice-admiral in command of one of the most important divisions of the English fleet, and Capt. S. M. Eardley Wilmot, at that time assistant director of naval intelligence and a writer of distinction upon professional subjects.

The enumeration of the names and the duties performed by the above-noted officers indicates clearly the professional standing of the seagoing element of the British navy, which considered the designs of the Royal Sovereign, so that in all the questions which were raised and discussed in connection with the general designs of that vessel—the height of freeboard, the height of gun axes, and the distribution of water-line armor—conspicuous representatives of those who were ultimately to command vessels and fleets in the British service, had ample opportunity to submit their opinions. It will also appear, in the subsequent comments made by various officers who discussed these designs, that the designs as approved were entirely satisfactory to the seagoing element of the British navy and were many times alluded to as being entirely representative of the views of seagoing officers.

The comments of those who took part in the discussion of the Royal Sovereign design are very explicit, and so aptly and completely express the views of the seagoing branch with respect to that particular design that I will submit for your information, without further comment, extracts from the discussion itself, preceding these extracts by a few paragraphs from Sir William White's paper, and inviting special attention to the fact that the British Institution of Naval Architects is the largest and most important body of professional naval architects in the world, and has also in its membership a very large number of British naval officers, as well as officers of foreign navies:

[Extracts from a paper entitled "On the designs for the new battle ships," prepared by W. H. White, esq., F. R. S., assistant controller of the navy and director of naval construction, read at the thirtieth session of the Institution of Naval Architects, April 10, 1889.]

[Italics not those of author or speakers.]

Recognizing the great interest which is now being taken in the designs of the eight first-class battle ships which are proposed to be added to the navy, and feeling convinced that no equally suitable opportunity could be obtained for replying to criticisms of the designs which have appeared in the public press, I applied for and obtained permission from the first lord of the Admiralty to prepare this paper. * * *

Apart from the fact that I am the head of that staff, and apart from any question of my personal competence, I desire to state that there never has been a time during my experience with the Admiralty Office—an experience extending over twenty-two years—when the members of that staff included so many thoroughly educated, capable, and qualified naval architects and marine engineers as are now serving there. * * *

If, with such a staff, with all our recorded data and experience, with our grand experimental establishment at Haslar, so ably conducted by my friend Mr. Froude, and with all the valuable assistance and suggestions coming to us from the naval service, and our professional colleagues in the dock yards, as well as the constant benefits we derive from a full knowledge of the work done by private shipbuilders and foreign competitors, we do not, in the "Whitehall office," succeed in producing "the best possible ships" consistent with the instructions of the Board of Admiralty, then there can be no excuse. But I contend that the allegations made against the professional officers of the Admiralty have been loosely made, and are proved to be unfounded, as regards the designs of the new battle ships, by the facts which have been adduced.

On this question I shall not be expected to give an opinion. It involves an inquiry into the competency of the Board of Admiralty and our system of naval administration. But, at the risk of repeating statements already made, I must say that there never have been designs more deliberately and carefully considered. The selection was made from amongst a large number of alternative designs, after a careful review of what is being done abroad, and with reference to various proposals not yet embodied in actual ships. Fortunately, it could be based upon a great mass of new experimental data, obtained by actual trials against the Resistance and elsewhere, and giving the latest and best information in relation to guns, projectiles, explosives, and armor. Moreover, the Board of Admiralty has availed itself of the advice and assistance of a number of distinguished officers before coming to a decision.

Obviously there is room for differences of opinion, since actual experience in naval warfare under modern conditions is almost entirely wanting. The matter, therefore, resolves itself into one of relative authority and experimental information. Under these circumstances, the naval service and the country will probably prefer to accept the conclusions of a responsible and well-informed body like the Board of Admiralty, rather than those of any individual.

Discussion on Sir William White's paper "On the designs for the new battle ships:"

Lord ARMSTRONG. With regard to the question of armor, it certainly appears to me, from all that we have heard both from Mr. White and from Sir Edward Reed, and from all that we can gather from these numerous diagrams, that we may come to this conclusion, that if we render a ship absolutely safe from being sunk by modern artillery we shall simply eliminate its power of sinking anything else. It is clear to me we must have a compromise between defensive power and offensive power, and as far as I can judge from a hasty inspection of these diagrams, and from listening to all that has been said upon the subject, it does appear to me that the compromise which is presented by these latest designs, especially by the battle ship of barbette stamp, that we have in that ship the best compromise between defensive power and offensive power that has yet been submitted to the public.

Capt. Lord CHARLES BERESFORD. I think that Lord Armstrong hit the right nail on the head in this great controversy, as to what is the best platform that you can build to send your men and guns to sea to fight an action with. The controversy is between the armor and the armament; and Lord Armstrong, in my humble opinion, hit the right nail on the head when he said, "If you build a ship with the capabilities which Sir Edward Reed demands, and justly demands, from his point of view you would have nothing offensive to hit your enemy with. That is the real point as I look at it. A ship is always a compromise." * * *

I say distinctly as a seaman, and I hope one of my brother officers will get up and contradict me if he does not agree with me, that what we want in a ship is the offensive part. We are very glad to have as much defensive as we can, but we do not want to sacrifice in any particular whatever the offensive power which we possess of knocking the enemy into a cocked hat. * * *

I do not believe they could have made a better ship than these new ones, although Sir Edward Reed does not agree with it. I hope he will produce his ship. I think he will be the first to agree with me that in a fair argument theory is of no use to any man and theoretical argument should be practically demonstrated. Mr. White and the Board of Admiralty have produced their ships, and I dare say I could find fault with those ships; but, taking the compromise, I think they are the best class of battle ship you can make for the present day, having regard to the new high explosives. * * * On our navy depends our existence, and we must not run the chance, with our want of knowledge of actual warefare, of foreign nations getting something other than we have got which might win them the action if we came to hostility. * * * Those new ships now have, in my humble opinion, for the first time been proposed to be built in a businesslike way, and in the way in which any mercantile firm would build their own ships or a man-of-war, if they had to build one. They have got the seamen together—by the seamen I mean the engineers and the artillerymen and the men who have got to fight the ships—and they have stated what they wanted to have, both in regard to capability of offense and defense, draft, and speed. * * * You must have a ruling power; somebody has got to lay down your ships, and this somebody, whoever he has been, has been put to do it in a businesslike way for the first time, and therefore I should take the opinion of my brother officers against my own, who have been asked first of all, "What do you want to fight with?" * * *

It was put very well the other day by Mr. White in his paper. We keep on arguing as to what damage the ship will receive and we quite forget the offensive power that we possess that we are going to give the enemy the benefit of.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir GEOFFREY PHIPPS HORNBY. Lord Ravensworth, my lords, and gentlemen, I have come here following an officer (Lord Charles Beresford), whom I am sorry to say I must call a younger officer. In almost everything he has said with reference to the service at large I entirely agree, and I think that he expresses the feeling of the greater part of the naval profession. * * *

All I wish to point out is this, that I feel with reference to these ships as a naval officer, and as one who has served on board ironclads, that I should be glad indeed to serve in such ships as these which are now shown us, because they seem to me to embody the idea which Lord Charles Beresford has so strongly put forward, and what I believe is the idea of every naval officer, that they are ships of very great offensive power. They have great speed, which I consider is the highest quality that any ship can have; and, mind you, I do not want to put my opinion forward; I go upon the opinion of our highest authority, that of Lord Nelson. * * * Why I approve particularly of these ships is that I think, as Lord Charles Beresford said, that hitherto our ships have never been built in the right way—that is to say, you have never asked the man who is going to inhabit the house what sort of house he would like to have, but have disregarded the opinion that those gentlemen have given, the requirements that those gentlemen have laid down. But now these requirements have been carried out, very much to the satisfaction of those who are particularly concerned—that is, the officers who have to command your fleets. The names of the officers to whom these plans have been referred, and who have approved of them, are those of officers who have just left active service. Only one name has been omitted, viz, that of Admiral Tryon, and that is in consequence of his having been laid up by an accident, but otherwise you have the opinion of the officer commanding the Channel fleet, the officer lately in command of the China fleet, and the officer lately commanding the India fleet. I say myself you have got every name barring one which could guarantee the propriety of these ships, and for my part I feel, on their opinions much more strongly than I do upon my own, that these ships are good, and will be serviceable ships, and such as any admiral will be fortunate to command.

Rear-Admiral P. H. COLOMB. My lord and gentlemen, I think two distinct points must be apparent to the meeting from the discussions which have gone on. First of all you have got a number of naval officers in perfect agreement, which is not common; and, secondly, that the difficulties which the naval architect has to deal with in building battle ships are the difficulties of opinion—that is to say, the naval architect has to go by the opinion of the day when he builds; and sometimes after he has built opinion turns somewhat against him. * * *

I should like to say, speaking as a naval officer, about these designs, that this thing has not been done in a corner. That is to say, the navy has been taken into the confidence of the constructors, and the Board of Admiralty, in a way that it never was before, and I think the result must be this, that never in this theater will naval officers be able to get up and denounce those ships if they turn out differently from what they expect, but that the constructors will be able to turn round upon us, and say, They are your ships; they are not ours. I think the navy is quite prepared to accept the responsibility for these ships for, taking them all in all, we are agreed generally that they are as good as the opinion of the day will allow us to have them. * * * But I want to say, finally, that I believe the feeling of the service is entirely clear on the designs of these new battle ships; that taking what the service asks for all round they are the fairest, the most open, and the most complete attempt to meet the naval opinion of the day.

Admiral Lord CLANWILLIAM. I will not detain the meeting two minutes. I only wish to add my testimony as a naval officer to the general opinion throughout the service that these vessels are of the right sort, and that we have every confidence in the ability of the officers who gave the instructions to Mr. White to design them.

Capt. S. LONG. The only other point upon which I would take up the time of the meeting is with regard to the high freeboard forward of the new ships, which is an interesting question. I notice in Plate IX that the lower part of the freeboard forward is divided up into small spaces. I was very sorry to see that, but I would remark that the height of freeboard [any excess over what is necessary is most objectionable owing to the increased weight and size of target involved in it] which is necessary is a very important question, and one upon which, I think, experience might throw a good deal of light.

* * * * * * *

Capt. G. H. U. NOEL. Being the third naval officer who has spoken in succession, I am afraid you will be tired of hearing what the navy has got to say, but I won't be very long. In the few remarks I have to make I hope that Sir Nathaniel Barnaby and the gentlemen present will excuse my dwelling not so much on to-day's paper as on yesterday's. I would like to express my entire confidence in the exceptional ability of the chief constructor of the navy, Mr. White, and to thank him for his admirable paper of yesterday. I believe that he came back to the Admiralty fully intending that what he did there he would do in concert with the naval authorities, and it was in consequence of his carrying out that intention that we got this new type of ship, which was so greatly approved of in the discussion yesterday. * * *

We want to have some offensive power as well as being, to some extent, protected. On this question, speaking of the Admiral class, I stated in a paper read at this institution in 1885, that with an addition of about 150 tons of 3-inch steel plating, sufficient to give the Collingwood a 6-foot water-line belt at her unarmored ends, I thought that she would be as capable and effective a vessel as any afloat at that time. I still adhere to that opinion.

(The freeboard of the Collingwood, forward, was about 7 feet less than that of the Royal Sovereign, and about 8 feet less than that of the Connecticut.)

Admiral Sir W. HOUSTON STEWART. During the ten years that I was at the Admiralty, the Admiralty of the day, one administration after another used the utmost endeavors to obtain the views, opinions, and criticisms of naval officers in regard to the designs proposed, and I confirm what I said yesterday when that noble lord, gallant naval officer, popular orator, and efficient member of Parliament was speaking, that during the time I was comptroller of the navy no design went forth from the Admiralty that was not stamped with the Board's seal in the presence of the Board of Admiralty and signed by the responsible naval officers of the day. Sir Edward Reed paid me the compliment in a letter in the Times the other day to say that he believed I was primarily responsible for the Admiral class. If it is so, I may accept that responsibility with pride, because I was associated with some of our most distinguished and most efficient naval officers who formed the Board of Admiralty at the time that class of ships was designed.

The foregoing quotations from remarks made by distinguished British naval officers are too direct and conclusive to need further comment. A brief summary of some of the most salient remarks will be useful, however, in fixing them in our minds.

Lord Charles Beresford stated:

"I do not believe they could have made a better ship than these new ones. * * * They have got the seamen together (by the seamen I mean the engineers and the artillerymen and the men who have got to fight the ships), and they have stated what they wanted to have, both in regard to capability of offense and defense, draft and speed."

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby concurred in almost everything said by Lord Charles Beresford, with reference to the service at large, and stated in conclusion that the requirements of the seagoing officers—

* * * "Have been carried out very much to the satisfaction of those who are particularly concerned—that is, the officers who have to command your fleets. * * * I say myself you have got every name barring one which could guarantee the propriety of these ships, and, for my part, I feel on their opinions much more strongly than I do upon my own, that these ships are good, and will be serviceable ships, and such as any admiral will be fortunate to command."

Rear-Admiral P. H. Colomb said:

"I think two distinct points must be apparent to the meeting from the discussions which have gone on. First of all, that you have got a number of naval officers in perfect agreement, which is not common; and secondly, that the difficulties which the naval architect has to deal with in building battle ships are the difficulties of opinion. * * * The navy has been taken into the confidence of the constructors and the Board of Admiralty in a way that it never was before, and I think the result must be this, that never in this theater will naval officers be able to get up and denounce those ships if they turn out differently from what they expect, but that the constructors will be able to turn round upon us and say: They are your ships; they are not ours. * * * But I want to say, finally, that I believe the feeling of the service is entirely clear on the designs of these new battle ships; that taking what the service asks for all round they are the fairest, the most open, and the most complete attempt to meet the naval opinion of the day."

Admiral Lord CLANWILLIAM. * * * I only wish to add my testimony as a naval officer to the general opinion throughout the service that these vessels are of the right sort, and that we have every confidence in the ability of the officers who gave the instructions to Mr. White to design them.

Capt. G. H. U. NOEL. * * * I would like to express my entire confidence in the exceptional ability of the chief constructor of the navy, Mr. White, and to thank him for his admirable paper of yesterday. I believe that he came back to the Admiralty fully intending that what he did there he would do in concert with the naval authorities, and it was in consequence of his carrying out that intention that we got this new type of ship, which was so greatly approved of in the discussion yesterday.

Nothing could possibly be more conclusive than the foregoing remarks as to the approval of the Royal Sovereign designs by the seagoing element. The selfsame questions of "height of freeboard forward," "height of gun axes," "location of water-line belt armor," etc., were involved at that time in the same manner as to-day. The subsequent action of British boards of admiralty and British designers with respect to all succeeding battle ships of the British navy, up to the time of the approval of the Dreadnought's designs, was largely based upon the unanimous conclusions which had been reached in the case of the Royal Sovereign designs.

Since, therefore, the general characteristics of the Royal Sovereign, so far as concerned "displacement," "dimensions," "height of freeboard," "height of gun axes," "water-line armor distribution," etc., are so strictly comparable with those of the majority of the battle ships in the United States Atlantic fleet, it is especially interesting to note that the designed freeboard of the Royal Sovereign class abreast the forward barbette is about 18 feet; the corresponding freeboard forward on fourteen of the sixteen battle ships of the United States Atlantic fleet is greater than 18 feet, the Kearsarge and Kentucky being the only vessels in the whole battle ship fleet now in commission whose forward freeboard is less than that of the Royal Sovereign. Moreover, the height of the forward main battery guns of the Royal Sovereign class above the designed load water line is about 3 feet less than the height of forward turret guns above the designed load water line of the five vessels of the Connecticut class, the three vessels of the Maine class, and the two vessels of the Illinois class, now attached to the Atlantic fleet, and more than 2 feet less than the four vessels of the Virginia class; the forward main battery guns of the Royal Sovereign class are thus appreciably lower than the forward main battery guns of all the battle ships of the Atlantic fleet except the two vessels of the Kearsarge class. The height of the upper edge of the main water-line belt armor of the Royal Sovereign class above the water line at designed load displacement is less than that of all battle ships of the Kearsarge, Illinois, Maine, Connecticut, and Vermont classes, and just equal to that of the Virginia class, the height above water of the upper edge of the main water-line belt of the five vessels of the Connecticut and Vermont classes being 1 foot 3 inches greater than that of the Royal Sovereign under similar conditions of load displacement.

It is also worthy of note that the lower edge of the main water-line belt of the Royal Sovereign class below the designed load water line is 5 feet 6 inches, and the responsible designer at that time had to defend himself against rather severe criticism from certain quarters for having approved so narrow a belt of water-line armor. It is especially interesting to note, therefore, in this connection that the most serious criticism recently directed against battle ships of the United States Navy was that the lower edge of the water-line belt armor was too deeply immersed, although, as a matter of fact, in no case has the lower edge of the water-line belt armor of United States battle ships been more deeply immersed than 5 feet at the designed load displacement, the corresponding immersion of the Royal Sovereign's armor, be it noted, being 5 feet 6 inches.

Since "height of freeboard," "height of gun axes," and "location of water-line belt armor" are necessarily governed by the probable behavior of the vessel in a seaway, and inasmuch as the behavior of the sea has in no sense changed during the past nineteen years, designs whose seagoing qualities fully satisfied the most representative officers in the British navy in 1889 should be entirely satisfactory to-day, so far as concerns seagoing qualities. As a matter of fact, the freeboard established for the Royal Sovereign and the degree of submergence of the lower edge of the main water-line belt at designed load displacement have remained substantially the same for battle ships of the British navy which have been designed during the past nineteen years, with the possible exception of the Majestic class and the most recently designed battle ships, viz, those of the Dreadnought class. The extra freeboard of the Dreadnought, however, is a perfectly natural and logical development for a vessel of such great length, fine water lines, and comparative concentration of heavy weights near the extremities. Therefore the greater height of freeboard forward on the Dreadnought is in no sense, and can not possibly be construed as, a reflection upon the designs of battle ships of the British navy which preceded the Dreadnought, nor is it in any sense a confession that the freeboard of the battle ships previously designed was insufficient.

Appendices I, II, III, and VI, and the cross sections of typical battle ships of the United States and foreign navies shown in Appendix VII are conclusive in showing how favorably battle ships of the United States Navy compare with battle ships of corresponding dates in the British and Japanese navies as regards heights of gun axes and location of water-line belt armor. As already noted, the French school of design, which had previously been somewhat closely followed by the Russians, involved high freeboards, high gun axes, and more extensive water-line armor protection, but with obviously serious sacrifices in other directions. Aside from the conclusive testimony afforded by the discussion of the Royal Sovereign designs, there is ample evidence to prove that questions of height and freeboard, height of gun axes, and proper location of water-line armor with reference to the designed load water line have been given most complete consideration by thoroughly competent officers of the United States Navy from the earliest days of our experience as builders of battle ships.

On March 25, 1896, the Acting Secretary of the Navy appointed a board (of which the late Rear-Admiral John G. Walker, U. S. Navy, was president) "for the purpose of considering and reporting upon the best plan for the installation of the main batteries of such battle ships as Congress may authorize during its present session," and other questions relating to battle-ship design. The other members of this special board were Commodore R. L. Phythian, Chief Engineer Edward Farmer, Capt. Philip H. Cooper, and Naval Constructor J. J. Woodward, U. S. Navy. Subsequently Captain (now Rear-Admiral) Remey, relieved Captain Cooper, and Lieut. (now Capt.) S. A. Staunton was appointed an additional member of the board. This board, though primarily convened to make recommendations with respect to the battery of vessels for which appropriations were expected to be made, very properly considered the whole question of battle-ship design in order that it might arrive at an intelligent conclusion with respect to the best type of battery to be adopted. By specific order of the Secretary of the Navy all bureaus were directed to furnish this board with complete data with respect to the subjects then under consideration, and the board witnessed various armor and gun tests, made a sea voyage on the U. S. S. Indiana, and inspected the Massachusetts and Iowa, then in course of construction. The following quotation from the board's report is therefore most interesting:

"The board, upon its earliest inquiry into the nature of its duties, found them of a most comprehensive character. The installation of the battery of a battle ship is not a question which stands alone. It is inseparably connected with the size of guns, their number, and the armored protection which their emplacements are to have. This total weight of armament depends in its turn upon the size of the ship, her hull protection, and the speed and coal endurance contemplated in her design. Connected with these features and bearing materially upon her military efficiency are the habitability of a ship (which includes sufficient quarters and berthing space for the officers and men necessary to properly navigate and fight the ship) and her seagoing qualities, i. e., her capacity for steaming and fighting in bad weather.

"The necessity of these adjustments is a matter of common knowledge and is condensed into the axiomatic saying that 'every ship is a compromise.' The board assumes, however, that the new battle ships will be as to size, speed, and coal endurance substantially the same as those already building, viz, of about 11,500 tons normal displacement, 16 knots speed, and 1,200 to 1,600 tons coal capacity, and with these assumptions it proceeded to attack the problem placed before it.

"To arrive at a conclusion upon a problem so complex, it is necessary to narrow the issue by successive steps. Considering size, speed, coal endurance, and hull protection as fixed within narrow margins, the board had next to consider the different types of batteries installed and projected. These are for our own Navy three in number, viz:

"(1) That of the Indiana and class.

"(2) That of the Iowa.

"(3) That of the Kearsarge and Kentucky.

"It became the board's duty to recommend the adoption of one of these types, or to suggest such modifications as, in its opinion, would make a better ship than any of them."

Subsequent comment upon the action of the Walker board and upon "freeboard" in our own and in foreign services is fully set forth in the following quotations from the chief constructor's recent testimony before the House Naval Committee:

"The board also invited attention to the desirability of carrying a larger proportion of the coal and stores at the normal draft than had previously been customary, and that at her normal draft (which should also be her fighting draft) she should carry not less than two-thirds of her full capacity of ammunition, coal, and stores, and that the position of the armor belt should bear a proper relation to this load line. From that time to the present day two-thirds of the ammunition and all consumable stores, other than coal, have been carried on the designed load displacement of the vessel. The proportion of coal carried at designed load displacement, however, has not been in our service, nor in any other service, as much as two-thirds of the full capacity of the bunkers, except in the case of vessels of the Alabama class, which vessels were the direct outcome of the Walker board's recommendations. The subsequent reduction in the proportion of coal carried was due undoubtedly to the fact that while the Alabama class had a bunker capacity of only 1,200 tons, thus making two-thirds of the bunker capacity a very fair proportion of the coal to be carried at designed displacement, subsequent designs provided for a very much greater bunker capacity, so that 900 to 1,000 tons was regarded as a suitable amount to be carried at the designed load displacement. The practice of the United States Navy in this respect is practically identical with that of foreign navies. The Walker board also invited particular attention to the desirability of battle ships of the United States Navy being able to 'perform any duty required of ships of their type and strength, and that their seagoing qualities should not be inferior to those of the battle ships of other navies.' The conclusion and recommendations of the board were as follows:

"That the new battle ships, when fully equipped for service and containing not less than two-thirds of their full capacity of ammunition, stores, and coal, should not be deeper than their 'normal' or designed draft upon which their speed is based, and that their weights of armor and armament should be restricted accordingly.

"That they should have sufficient berthing space to accommodate the officers and men of their war complements in such a manner as to maintain their health and vigor.

"That no feature of their design should be permitted to seriously impair good seagoing and sea-enduring qualities.

"That they should have high freeboard forward and low freeboard aft, substantially like the Iowa, and be armor belted like the Kearsarge.

"That their principal battery should consist of four 13-inch guns mounted in two turrets in pairs, substantially as the Iowa's 12-inch guns are mounted; these principal turrets to be placed as close to each other as the machinery space conveniently permits.

"That their auxiliary battery shall consist of fourteen rapid-fire 6-inch guns, ten on the main deck and four on the upper deck, all behind 6-inch armor. Two of the guns on the main deck in the eyes of the ship have forward fire, two of the guns on the upper deck have forward fire, and the other two fire aft. All of the 6-inch guns fire in broadside, seven on each side."

It thus appears that this specially selected board, a large majority of whose members were seagoing officers, recommended a vessel whose freeboard, water-line protection, etc., was regarded as entirely satisfactory to the seagoing element at that time. The actual vessels whose design embodied the recommendations of this board are the Alabama, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and the board's recommendation as to "freeboards" indicated that they regarded the "forward freeboard" provided for the Alabama class as "high."

Again, the general board of the Navy, which is composed entirely of seagoing officers and is presided over by one of the most distinguished officers the American Navy has ever had, recommended, under date of October 17, 1903, in a report submitting its opinion as to the principal characteristics which should be embodied in battle ships as follows: "To have high freeboard forward. In this respect the Iowa type impresses favorably. Armor protection: similar to the Maine class." Subsequently the board modified its recommendation as to the armor protection and concurred in the recommendation of the Board on Construction as to the superiority of distribution of armor on the Vermont class. It may be noted in this connection that the "high freeboard" forward on the Iowa is slightly less than that of any vessel in the United States Atlantic battle-ship fleet, except the Kearsarge and Kentucky.

We therefore have a height of freeboard and distribution of water-line belt armor in the large majority of battle ships of the United States Navy which commanded the explicit approval of thoroughly representative seagoing officers in our own service; and vessels of similar characteristics had and still have the approval of service sentiment in the British and Japanese navies; and the sentiment to-day of those who have given careful and exhaustive consideration to these subjects is just as definite and pronounced as it was when these matters of freeboard and waterline armor arrangement were first under consideration.

It should also be remembered that the designs of all vessels of the United States Navy are passed upon by the Board on Construction. The original title of this board was, in fact, the Board on the Designs of Ships. Among the membership of this board from 1889 to the date of the approval of the designs of the Connecticut class (the most recently designed class of vessels now attached to the battle-ship fleet) were the following well-known officers of the United States Navy:

BOARD ON CONSTRUCTION.

	Period of service.
Admiral of the Navy George Dewey	1889–1893
Rear-Admiral Montgomery Sicard	1889–1890
Capt. G. B. White	1889–1890
Chief Constructor T. D. Wilson	1889–1893
Engineer in Chief George W. Melville	1889–1903
Rear-Admiral W. M. Folger	1890–1893
Rear-Admiral Charles H. Davis	1890–1893
Rear-Admiral Norman H. Farquhar	1890–1893
Rear-Admiral French E. Chadwick	1893–1897
Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson	1893–1897
Rear-Admiral Frederick Singer	1893–1896
Rear-Admiral E. O. Mathews	1894–1898
Chief Constructor Philip Hichborn	1893–1901
Rear-Admiral Charles O'Neil	1897–1904
Rear-Admiral R. B. Bradford	1897–1903
Capt. Richard Wainwright	1897–
Rear-Admiral Richardson Clover	1900–1902
Rear-Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee	1900–1902
Chief Constructor Francis T. Bowles	1901–1903

For further information concerning the duties and qualifications of the Board on Construction, attention is invited to the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1907, page 32, and to the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair for 1907, pages 16 and 17 and pages 47 to 49.

Considering, therefore, the overwhelming preponderance of representative naval opinion as to the desirability of freeboard and armor distribution similar to that actually provided on battle ships of our own Navy and on those of the same type and date of design in British and other important foreign navies, it is evident how very much astray are the self-satisfied critics who state that "all of our battle ships are deficient in freeboard, water-line protection," etc.

Perhaps the critic is not aware, however, that there are two distinct "schools of design," so far as concerns height of freeboard, height of gun axes, and water-line armor protection, and that, while the English, Japanese, American, and to a less extent, the German designers preferred moderate freeboard and a certain arrangement of water-line armor protection, the French and Russian designers had different ideas on those subjects. Thus, for many years, the tendency among French designers has been to elevate the main battery high above the water line—as a rule, about one deck height higher than in the British, American, and Japanese ships—at least so far as concerned the forward turrets. This possibly permits the forward main battery to be operated under conditions of sea during which gun fire of any kind must be regarded as futile; but, under any condition of sea in which naval battles are likely to be fought, such extreme elevation of the battery is regarded by naval designers and naval officers of most other countries as quite undesirable in view of the great sacrifices involved in such an arrangement—the consequent raising of the center of gravity of the vessel, less efficient armor protection to turret supports and greatly increased size of target being disadvantages of a most serious character.

I think it is pertinent in this connection to remark that the principal battle ships of the Russian fleet which took part in the battle of the Sea of Japan were designed in accordance with the ideas of what may be termed the "French school," while practically all of the battle ships and armored cruisers of the Japanese fleet were designed in accordance with British and American ideas of moderate freeboard, moderate gun heights, etc. All of the Japanese battle ships and armored cruisers which took part in the battle of the Sea of Japan were afloat and in good condition at the termination of the battle, and while high freeboards and a certain character of water-line armor protection may not have been directly responsible for the foundering of such vessels of the Russian fleet as were sunk by gun fire, the sacrifices which had to be made in order to develop that type of design were undoubtedly contributory to the ultimate foundering of those vessels. In order that it may be clearly apparent that the weather conditions during the battle of the Sea of Japan were such as to "try out" the moderate freeboards of the Japanese vessels, the following quotations with respect thereto are given:

"John Leyland, in Brassey's Annual for 1906, chapter 6, says, on page 105, that 'a heavy sea was running.' On page 99 he says that 'the weather was misty with a wind from the southwest and a sea which caused Rojestvensky's ships to roll heavily and greatly distress the destroyers.'

"Lieut. R. D. White, in the Proceedings of the Naval Institute of June, 1906, quotes one of the Russian officers as saying that 'the morning of May 27 was raw and cheerless; the cold wind blew from the southwest; a grayish mist hung overhead and shut out vision well short of the horizon. When the rain fell later in the day, it was cold and penetrating.'

"Henry Reuterdahl, in Jane's Fighting Ships, 1906–7, relating the story of the fight as told him by the survivors, states that 'there was a strong breeze and heavy sea, rising almost to a gale.'"

In order, however, that there may be no possible misunderstanding as to gun-fire casualties in the battle of the Sea of Japan, it should be noted that reports indicate that only two Russian battle ships were sunk as the direct result of gun fire during the more than five hours' fighting on the first day, and this in spite of the excessively overloaded condition of these vessels at the time of the battle, as indicated by subsequent official statements, this overloading naturally resulting in the complete submergence of the heavy water-line belt armor and a marked decrease of stability under damaged conditions. It is noteworthy, therefore, that, even under these unusual conditions of excessive overloading, with the definite decrease in defensive qualities consequent thereupon, only two battle ships entirely succumbed to gun fire, and one of these only after five hours' fighting. These facts would seem to be sufficiently eloquent when considering the possibilities of our own battle ships.

Again, we surely can assume that the Japanese have had as extensive experience under modern battle conditions at sea as any nation in the world; and yet a very recently designed Japanese battle ship, which presumably embodies the lessons learned at Tsushima, has approximately the same freeboard forward as our ships of the Maine and Alabama classes, although from 100 to 125 feet longer, thereby indicating clearly that the Japanese are willing to sacrifice something in freeboard and gun height, even in so long and speedy a vessel, in order to more fully develop other qualities.

Although the British, in their Dreadnought, and the United States Navy, in the Delaware, have considerably increased the freeboard forward on such vessels, such an increase in freeboard is in no sense a reflection upon previous designs or a confession that previous designers were in error, but is a perfectly normal and logical development due to increase in length of ship, increase in fineness of water lines, concentration of heavy weights relatively near the extremities, etc.

When a critic recently stated in a magazine article that it was only "after special pressure from the President of the United States that our latest ships were given proper freeboard," he simply advertised himself as a disseminator of false statements and as one quite ignorant of the subject he was presuming to discuss. As the Chief Constructor of the Navy, I can state most positively that no such criticism, no such suggestion, no such direction, has ever come to me from the President of the United States in relation to the designs of the Delaware class, the only class of battle ships in the United States Navy with very high freeboard forward—this high freeboard being given by the designer for reasons already set forth.

* * * Generally speaking, freeboard in excess of seagoing requirements is most undesirable in a battle ship. High freeboard involves a high center of gravity and considerably less stability under damaged conditions; it also means greater target area; moreover, the extra weight devoted to high freeboard decreases the percentage of displacement which can be devoted to other seriously important elements of the design. So far as I am aware, the sentiment of the English and Japanese services is distinctly in favor of the moderate freeboard which has been characteristic of our ships wherever such moderate freeboard is practicable. In the very long and fine-lined ship, however, with concentration of weight nearer the extremities, it is desirable, for seagoing reasons, as already stated, to raise the forecastle; but the Japanese are apparently so impressed with the desirability of limiting the elevation of their top weights and devoting as much weight as possible to armor and armament, that they appear to be willing to make some sacrifice in freeboard. They have, therefore, maintained approximately the same freeboard in their new and larger battle ships as seemed sufficient for their older and shorter vessels; and surely the Japanese have the advantage of great experience so far as concerns the essential requirements of battle ships under modern battle conditions.

From all of the foregoing, I have no hesitancy whatever in stating that the freeboard forward on American battle ships now in commission, with the sole exception of the Kearsarge and Kentucky, is ample to meet all the requirements of the batteries of those vessels under any conditions of sea which are likely to be met with in naval actions. The experience of the Japanese battle ships in the battle of the Sea of Japan leaves no possible ground for doubt upon that score—the Japanese battle ships, be it remembered, being somewhat inferior in freeboard and gun height, and having less effective distribution of water-line armor than a large majority of the battle ships of the United States Atlantic fleet.

With respect to the distribution of water-line armor in our battle ships, as compared with foreign battle ships of the same date of design, attention is invited to the cross sections of typical battle ships of the United States and foreign navies, shown in Appendix VII. The cross sections speak for themselves, and I have already described the care with which these cross sections have been prepared, all available data being consulted.

It is especially noteworthy that the water-line armor protection of practically all of the battle ships of the United States Atlantic fleet is equal, or superior, to that of Admiral Togo's flagship Mikasa; that the armor above the water-line belt for the Virginia class, and the Connecticut and Louisiana is of the same thickness as that of the Mikasa; that the armor above the water-line belt on the Vermont, Kansas, and Minnesota is 1 inch thicker than that of the Mikasa; that the height of the upper edge of the main-belt armor above the load water line on the five vessels of the Connecticut class is 1 foot 9 inches greater than the corresponding height of the belt armor on the Mikasa; also that the upper edge of the main belt armor of all other battle ships in the United States Atlantic fleet is more than 6 inches higher out of water at the designed load displacement than the upper edge of the main water-line belt armor of the Mikasa. Moreover, the main water-line belt and upper side belt of the Japanese battle ships Kashima and Katori, which were in course of construction for the Japanese navy at the time of the Russo-Japanese war, were practically identical with that of the Mikasa. Again, the distribution of main water-line belt and other side armor of the Aki, one of the latest Japanese battle ships, designed in 1906 after the close of the war, is almost identical with that of the United States battle ship Vermont, designed in 1904, except that the upper edge of the main belt armor of the Aki lacks 9 inches of being as high above the designed load water line as the corresponding armor of the Vermont. The Japanese have had very considerable experience as to the necessity of certain dispositions of armor, guns, freeboard, etc., so that I have no hesitancy in predicting, in view of the foregoing statement as to armor distribution, that the battle ships of the United States Atlantic fleet could give a most excellent account of themselves in any naval encounter in which they might become engaged.

The plans and tabular data accompanying this report are so complete and so self-explanatory that it does not seem necessary to make further comment with respect to the alleged insufficiency of freeboard, water-line armor protection, etc., of battle ships of the United States Navy. As a matter of interest, however, there will be attached to this report, as an appendix, some extracts from foreign periodicals which clearly indicate the high esteem in which American designs of battle ships have been held by foreign naval critics. The following quotation from the Chief Constructor's recent testimony before the Naval Committee of the House gives a statement of the reason for locating the water-line armor protection in the manner followed by American, British, and Japanese designers:

"The consensus of opinion among naval designers, and those naval officers who have given very considerable attention to the subject, appears to be that the lower edge of the main water-line belt armor at the designed load displacement should be immersed about 5 feet. It should be remembered that this is the immersion at the designed load displacement, or trial displacement, as it is usually called in our service, and not the deep-load displacement. This depth of submergence is, of course, more or less arbitrary and is based upon the amount of weight which can be devoted to armor protection and is governed to a certain extent also by the beam of the ship. The subject of weight is a very serious one for naval designers, and the immersion of the lower edge of the armor belt has been limited to 5 feet, not because that is ample, in the judgment of the designer, under all conditions, but because it is all that can be permitted under the allowance of weight for armor protection, and under ordinary conditions it should give ample protection. If the vessel were very light, it would not give satisfactory protection under ordinary conditions of rolling, but that risk must be taken. When, on the other hand, the vessel is deep loaded, the protection of the vessel under conditions of fairly heavy rolling is good; but even then a roll of 10 degrees would cause the lower edge of the armor to come out of water. It is thus obvious that protection of the water line is limited by the weight of armor which can be used for this purpose and is more or less a compromise."

Mr. BUTLER. Why do you want this protection below the water?

Admiral CAPPS. Because of the action of the sea. As the ship rolls the armor tends to emerge. Moreover, in a perfectly smooth sea—and I can show you dozens of photographs indicating this fact—the formation of waves at right angles to the line of travel of the vessel when going at high speed will cause an exposure of the side of the vessel, below the average water level, of 3 or 4 feet, and this in smooth water.

Mr. BUTLER. And when the ship rolls back, will it expose what we call the skin of the ship?

Admiral CAPPS. It is very apt to expose the skin of the ship. There will doubtless be many times during a naval action, in rough weather, when the bottom below the armor belt will be exposed; and while a hit at the water line or below the water line is apt to be rare (and this is the experience of naval battles so far), such a hit must always do very serious damage when penetration ensues, because there is a likelihood of hitting boilers or engines or magazines; and even if vital portions of the vessel are not struck, the vessel is much more easily flooded through an under-water opening in the bottom. It is thus apparent why protection below the water to a moderate extent is relatively of far greater importance than protection above the water line, and armor distribution is governed accordingly.

In the case of the Connecticut class, for instance, the heavy belt is 9 feet 3 inches wide and extends, at designed displacement, from 5 feet below to 4 feet 3 inches above. Above the main belt there are two other belts, the lower 6 inches thick, the upper 7 inches thick. For the Vermont, Kansas, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Mississippi, and Idaho, both upper belts are 7 inches thick. Moreover, the belt immediately above the water-line belt is reenforced by deep coal bunkers. In other words, a shot striking just above the main belt on the Minnesota would have to pass through 7 inches of armor, nearly 1 inch of structural plating and then nearly 20 feet of coal, if the upper bunkers are full. This very substantial protection above the heavy water-line belt is usually entirely ignored by critics, although it is worthy of note that this upper belt armor protection of the Minnesota and class is as heavy or heavier than the main water-line armor protection of thirteen important battle ships in the British navy built or purchased during the past ten years. So far as concerns the intake of water, it must be remembered that a shot hole just above the water line can only admit small quantities of water, which can easily be taken care of by the pumps or the water-tight subdivision of the hull; whereas, damage below the water line and especially below the protective deck is much more serious, since water then flows in quite freely under a "head" and may easily be beyond the capacity of the pumps.

* * * * * * *

In this connection, I would like to say right here that none of the allegations as to insufficient water-line armor have any bearing upon the South Carolina and Michigan and the North Dakota and Delaware, because the upper belt of those ships has a mean thickness equal to that of the main water-line belt of the Minnesota and class, being 10 inches thick at the bottom and 8 inches thick at the top; moreover, these vessels have a compartmental subdivision which will afford ample protection and stability even under conditions of serious under-water damage. Also, if compartments on one side of the ship are flooded, as Mr. Butler suggested a few moments ago, so that, under ordinary conditions, a change of trim of the ship would result, there would be no such continuing change of trim in these vessels, since complete arrangements have been made for flooding the opposite compartments and restoring the vessel to an approximate "even keel."

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would explain the length of this armor belt; and also state how our distribution of armor compares with the distribution of armor on the British and Japanese ships.

Admiral CAPPS. In general, the distribution of armor on ships of the same date, Japanese, English, and American, is very similar. The actual lengths of the belts on our ships have been calculated and are given in the table already alluded to. This sort of data for foreign vessels is not readily accessible, but we have fairly reliable information which has been gleaned from various sources, and, so far as our information goes, the armor protection of ships of the United States Navy is quite equal to, and in many instances surpasses, that of English and Japanese battle ships. In this connection, it may be noted with considerable interest that in the South Carolina class, which are vessels of nearly 2,000 tons less displacement than the British Dreadnoughts, the weight assigned to armor and hull is practically the same as that allowed for the Dreadnought. It is almost certain, therefore, that the armor protection of the South Carolina is superior to that of the Dreadnought. The armor protection of the Delaware is also superior to that of the latest British and Japanese battle ships, so far as our information indicates. The armor protection of the Minnesota is very similar, indeed, to that of British vessels of the King Edward class. While the belt above the main belt on the King Edward is 1 inch thicker than the corresponding belt in the Minnesota, the Minnesota's main belt is 1 foot 3 inches wider than that of the King Edward, and therefore there is 1 foot 3 inches more of the Minnesota's main belt out of water at the designed load displacement. Armor displacement, like other elements of war-ship design is a compromise, but the fundamental principles which govern its location are the same in all cases and in all countries.

The plans and tabular data accompanying this report, in conjunction with such explanations as appeared necessary in the text, will, I feel sure, conclusively demonstrate that "freeboard," "gun heights," "appropriate water-line armor distribution," and other seagoing necessities of battle ships have always received most earnest and intelligent consideration by naval officers charged with the grave responsibility of developing the best possible battle-ship designs for the United States Navy, and that an adequate development of these qualities has always been provided, having in view the state of advancement of naval matériel at the time of the approval of the designs in question.

I will now proceed, as briefly as possible, to a consideration of the most serious misrepresentations contained in a recent magazine article contributed by a writer who claims unusual knowledge of and familiarity with the vessels of the United States Navy.

It is obvious, however, that a reasonable brevity in this report will make it wholly impracticable to consider in detail all of his misleading statements. In order that there may be no necessity for referring directly to the article in question, quotations therefrom will be given, followed by such comments as may appear appropriate.

The writer of the article, after indicating the tragic results which would follow an outbreak of war which found our Navy unprepared, continues:

"This article will show some of the reasons why the American Navy is unprepared for war. It will be a statement of facts, not of opinions."

A careful perusal of this report and an examination of the tabular statements and plans herewith transmitted will doubtless convince the impartial reader that this particular magazine writer has great difficulty in distinguishing between facts and his own unsubstantiated and erroneous opinions.

Under the caption of "A fleet with main armor under water" this critic informs us that—

"A modern battle ship is a simple thing in its big general principles. Two points are essential in its protection—a shell-proof armor, which guards its water line; and high, shell-proof turrets, which lift up its guns just above the wash and spray of the waves. An X-ray photograph of its heavy armor would show a monitor with high turrets. The lower part of the smokestacks, the minor gun positions, the conning and signal towers, are all protected; but these two major points are the essentials in the armor of a battle ship.

"Obviously, the most important feature of all must be the belt along the water line. A wound upon a turret may silence that one turret's guns. A hole upon the water line will cripple or sink the ship. Of all the Russian follies which came to light in the great battle of Tsushima that sealed the fate of the Russian-Japanese war, one stands out especially. The Russian battle ships when they went into that fight were overloaded until the shell-proof armor of their water line was underneath the water. They were not battle ships at all. Within a year afterwards our Navy awoke to a realization of a startling fact: The ships of the battle fleet of the United States are in exactly the same condition as the Russian ships at Tsushima, not temporarily, but permanently."

The Chief Constructor, after twenty-eight years' service in the Navy, twenty-two of which have been devoted to special preparation for and performance of the duties of a naval constructor, regrets that he can not concur in the foregoing opinion as to the simplicity of a battle ship. A greater familiarity with the subject would perhaps lead the critic to modify his opinion, and perhaps even tend to make him concur in the opinions of many highly trained men of large experience, both as naval architects and naval officers, that, instead of a modern battle ship being a "simple thing," it is, in reality, a most complicated structure.

This magazine critic asserts that the most important feature of all "must be the belt along the water line." That the belt along the water line is a most important feature may be accepted without dispute. There are many other qualities, however, of equally great importance. He also asserts, with great assurance, that "a hole along the water line will cripple or sink the ship." The size and location of this hole, the subdivision of the ship, and the facilities for disposing of water entering under these conditions will unquestionably determine whether or not such a wound would "cripple or sink the ship." It may be stated with assurance, however, that no properly designed modern battle ship would have its buoyancy seriously impaired—and certainly could not be sunk—by a single or even several shot holes "along the water line." On the contrary, the behavior of the Russian ships in the battle of the Sea of Japan indicates conclusively how difficult it is to sink a battle ship by gun fire even when the vessel is heavily overloaded with an excess of stores, coal, etc., which carried the heavy armor belt far below the position which it might reasonably be expected to occupy under the stress of battle. As a matter of fact, despite the very unusual and quite unnecessary condition of overloading under which the Russian ships went into battle, it is worthy of special note that it was only after nearly an hour of heavy, concentrated fire by the Japanese that the Osliabia foundered, this vessel being the first of the Russian battle ships to succumb to gun fire. The large majority of the other Russian vessels which were ultimately sunk foundered as a result of torpedo attack or the opening of sea valves by their own crews and not gun fire. It is also noteworthy that the next ship after the Osliabia which foundered as a direct result of gun fire, had successfully resisted vital injury by gun fire for more than five hours—a profound tribute to the ability of the damaged battle ship to remain afloat even under the serious disadvantages of overloading which prevailed on vessels of the Russian fleet at the battle of the Sea of Japan.

It has already been stated in this report, and, in fact, is perfectly well known to those who have given any serious consideration to the subject of water-line and above-water-line armor protection of battle ships, that a wound above the main armor belt is of minor consequence as compared with one through the main water-line armor belt or below the main armor belt, for the simplest of all reasons: First, a shell penetrating the upper armor belt would be above the protective deck and would explode in coal bunkers, in all probability, if it exploded at all. The fragments of such a shell could not, under ordinary conditions, seriously affect the vital portions of the ship. Moreover, the inflow of water through a hole in the armor above the main belt, at or above the water line, would be gradual and quite within the control of the ship's pumps. Penetration through the main armor belt below the water line, however, or penetration of the hull entirely below the main armor belt would open the vessel to an inflow of water under a "head," and, while in the best-designed ships the flow of water through 12-inch holes, even under these conditions, could be taken care of by the pumps or the compartmental subdivision of the ship, it is possible that fragments of a shell so entering would strike portions of the motive machinery or boilers or other vital apparatus and seriously affect the efficiency of the vessel. For this reason, with a given amount of armor, it is imperative that the greatest protection should be given to the water line of a vessel in wake of machinery, boilers, and magazines, and that the lower edge of this armor belt should be sufficiently below the load water line as to afford ample protection to the vitals of the ship when the ship is subjected to the rolling and pitching motion of the sea. After a most exhaustive consideration of this subject by naval constructors and the best-informed naval officers of every important navy, the conclusions reached in each particular country are almost identical, and for the many battle ships which have been designed in England, France, America, Japan, Russia, and Germany during the past twenty years, the depth of submergence of the lower edge of the side belt armor below the designed load displacement water line is the same, within comparatively small variations, as is fully set forth in the plan of cross sections, Appendix VII.

The usual depth of submergence of the lower edge of main belt armor is about 5 feet, as shown on the various sections of typical ships given in Appendix VII. The cross sections show clearly the remarkable agreement among the designs of battle ships of all countries with respect to this much agitated question of depth of submergence of lower edge of main armor belt, and that for all the battle ships of the United States Navy, as well as those of foreign navies designed since 1899, there is almost absolute agreement; the maximum variation for American, British, French, Japanese, and Russian battle ships being only 3 inches, the overwhelming majority having a depth of submergence of just 5 feet, the depth of submergence adopted in the United States Navy.

It has been fully shown in another part of this report that our battle ships, when fully loaded, do not have the upper edge of their main armor belt immersed, and that even with a large excess of stores, etc., on board, the upper edge of the main armor belt of the five vessels of the Connecticut class, now with the fleet, and the Mississippi, Idaho, and New Hampshire, about to go into commission, would have more than a foot of their main belts above water. The author's statement that "The ships of the battle fleet of the United States are in exactly the same condition as the Russian ships at Tsushima—not temporarily, but permanently"—is therefore a heedless misstatement of fact, as can be readily demonstrated by the plans of the vessels, the vessels themselves, and the character of the consumable and nonpermanent stores carried when our battle ships are at their deep-load displacement.

The critic states that "Of all our battle ships, not one shows its main armor belt 6 inches above the water when fully equipped and ready for sea."

Disregarding the fact that there is a very substantial belt of armor above the main belt, also that a vessel fully equipped, with bunkers full, all stores and ammunition on board, etc., is by no means in the best condition, or the most probable condition in which a vessel may be expected to meet the enemy, the statement just quoted is not only misleading as to some of our battle ships, but absolutely false as to the rest. Carefully prepared data indicating the draft of water of battle ships of the Atlantic fleet at the time of their departure from navy-yards preliminary to assembling at Hampton Roads in December last (these vessels being then in an unusual condition of loading) directly disprove such a statement. Nearly all of these vessels had full bunkers, and in addition to the regular allowance of ammunition, stores, etc., had extra stores, ammunition, water for boilers, etc., also a large number of extra men and all the outfit and stores necessary therefor. But, even under these conditions, involving in some case extra weights of several hundred tons, not one of the five vessels of the Connecticut class, on reaching the high seas, had the upper edge of the belt armor less than 1 foot above the very deep-load water line then existing.

The writer states that—

"The constructors' plans were made to have from 12 to 30 inches of this out of water when each vessel makes her trial trip."

This is simply a false statement. The fact is that the "designed load displacement" or "trial displacement" of every vessel of the present Atlantic battle-ship fleet provided for not less than 36 inches of the main side armor belt being out of water at the designed load displacement, and the Connecticut class had 4 feet 3 inches of the heavy side armor belt out of water at the designed load draft. The overdraft, due to "changes," "weights added," etc., subsequent to approval of the design, has already been alluded to, likewise the comparatively moderate "overdraft" of our battle ships.

So far as our information can determine, however, the United States has no monopoly of such "changes," "extra weights," and "overdrafts." As a matter of fact, I believe the United States Navy to be somewhat more fortunate than the majority of navies in this respect—the battle ship Dreadnought being a particularly apt illustration in support of this belief, since not a single vessel of the United States Atlantic battle-ship fleet was as much as 1 foot overdraft when completed, while the Dreadnought is reported as considerably more than 1 foot over her designed draft.

The writer next states that—

"Above this (the heavy water-line armor) is a thinner armor which can be pierced by heavy shells. The standard heavy gun of to-day throws a steel projectile 12 inches in diameter, 4 feet long, and weighing 850 pounds, charged with a high explosive. The bursting of one of these shells in this thinner secondary armor would tear a hole bigger than a door upon a ship's water line.

The Chief Constructor has attended many experiments in which 12-inch projectiles have been fired against armor of the character of that constituting the "thinner armor" of battle ships, above alluded to, and has yet to see, and knows of no record of, any damage to such armor by a 12-inch projectile of the character presumably intended to be described by the writer. Of course the writer has the privilege of selecting the size of his "door," and it may have been that it was only a "wee bit of a door" that he had in mind.

The writer's statements with respect to the Russian battle ship Osliabia and the remarkable effect of gun fire, etc., on one of the armor plates of that vessel are not substantiated by such reasonably authentic accounts concerning the results of the battle of the Sea of Japan as have come to my notice, and a fairly extensive knowledge of the effects of gun fire on armor plate leads me to believe that the writer's informant had a too highly developed imagination. The effect described is more closely akin to what might happen if the unarmored side were struck by high explosive shells.

The writer makes certain other references to what happened to other vessels during the battle of the Sea of Japan, but the information on that subject is so contradictory, and the overloaded condition of the Russian ships at the time of the battle was so unusual and unnecessary, that further consideration seems useless. It is well to remember, however, that all reports indicate that, with two exceptions, the vessels of the Russian fleet, in the battle of the Sea of Japan withstood a terrific amount of punishment for more than five hours before foundering, and that the destruction of the large majority of those that were actually sunk was due to subsequent torpedo attack, or opening of sea valves, after the vessels were in a helpless condition, and not to gun fire. It appears to me that the "thin armor" and coal protection did noble work.

The writer then proceeds to comment upon—

"Our Investment in Ships with Submerged Armor," stating that our battle ships "lack a first essential of a battle ship—protection of the water line." Also that "No ship * * * has yet been planned to have a water-line protection reaching more than six inches above the water when she is ready to fight."

These statements are, in effect, a reiteration of previous misstatements, and like them are wholly misleading with respect to the sixteen battle ships now comprising the Atlantic fleet, and not only misleading, but fundamentally false as regards the last four battle ships designed and now under construction but not yet launched. Those four vessels (the South Carolina, Michigan, Delaware, and North Dakota) have above the water-line belt an upper belt whose mean thickness is equal to that of the thickness of the main water-line belt of the Kansas, Vermont, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Mississippi, and Idaho; also equal to the thickness of the main armor belt of Admiral Togo's flagship, the Mikasa, and the lately designed 20,000-ton Japanese battle ship Aki. So that, while the Mikasa, the Aki, and the United States battle ships of the Vermont and Mississippi classes, just noted, have the upper edge of their main water-line armor belt, at designed load displacement, out of water from 2 feet 6 inches in the case of the Mikasa to 4 feet 3 inches in the case of the Vermont, the South Carolina, and Delaware classes have the upper edge of their upper heavy side armor belt 10 feet and more above the water line.

The writer then proceeds to state that—

"No other nation of the world has ever made this fundamental mistake, except in the case of a few isolated ships."

Whatever may be the "fundamental mistake" to which the writer alludes, the water-line belt armor of United States battle ships is quite as favorably disposed for keeping out unfriendly projectiles as those of British, Russian, and Japanese vessels, and Appendix VII is quite conclusive on this point.

The writer then refers to the French and British methods of design, etc., ending with the statement—

"The Dreadnought, their famous battle ship, embodying the secret lessons of the Russian-Japanese war, represents the principle upon which all their ships are being built to-day."

As the Dreadnought is the only vessel of her class in commission, or anywhere near commission, and as the full fighting strength of the British battle-ship fleet of all classes at the present time is composed of more than sixty battle ships of characteristics entirely different from those of the Dreadnought, the writer's generalizations are misleading, to use no stronger term. Incidentally it may be remarked that he makes a very curious mistake with reference to the depth of submergence of the lower edge of the main water-line belt of the Dreadnought. The Naval Pocket Book for 1907 states that the lower edge of the main water-line belt armor of the Dreadnought is 7 feet below the water line. The most reliable information to which the Bureau has had access indicates that the lower edge of the main water-line belt of the Dreadnought, when the vessel was floating at the designed water line, was about 5 feet below the designed water line (this, however, when only 900 tons of coal out of 2,700 tons bunker capacity was on board). Although such information as is generally available indicates that the submergence of the lower edge of the Dreadnought's main-belt armor is less than 7 feet and approximately 5 feet, there is a report on file which states that the lower edge of the main-belt armor of that vessel is 8 feet below water; identical mistakes of this character are unusual.

Further along in his article the writer states that—

"Meanwhile the United States makes no movement to raise its water-line armor to where it should be. There is no defense for placing this armor under water. It is kept there simply because it has been placed there in the past. The initial mistake might be understood, for the designing of a battle ship is a most complex problem; but the continuation of the policy seems more incredible than its beginning."

The writer is to be congratulated on getting away from his original suggestion that a battle ship is a "simple thing," and recognizing that it is really "a most complex problem." With due respect to the critic's authority as a naval architect, however, the Chief Constructor begs to remark that defense for the placing of the water-line armor, as it actually is placed, on United States battle ships is not needed; it is purposely kept where placed because it is the best disposition which could be made. The initial idea in so placing it was not a mistake, and the continuation of the policy is entirely comprehensible to those who have any real knowledge of the subject. The opinion of our own and foreign designers and naval officers of greatest distinction is quite in accord on the subject, and were there weight to spare, the lower edge of main water-line belt would tend to go lower instead of being raised. Private advices from our battle-ship fleet, now on its way to the west coast, indicate that some of those who thought that battle ships could not roll their armor belts out of water in ordinarily rough water have "seen a light" and are not now so vehement about "submerged armor belts."

Next follows a plain, ordinary, false statement, since the writer says:

"The United States has five big battle ships now building, not one of them, in spite of the continual protest of our seagoing officers, with its main belt above the water line."

There are seven battle ships "now building"—the Mississippi and Idaho, the New Hampshire, the South Carolina and Michigan, and the Delaware and North Dakota. The first three battle ships just mentioned have the upper edge of main belt 4 feet 3 inches above the water line at designed load displacement. The upper edge of the upper main belt of the South Carolina and Michigan and Delaware and North Dakota (this belt is 10 inches thick at the bottom) is more than 10 feet above the water line at designed load displacement; in this respect these ships are superior to any known battle ship in the world.

The writer then proceeds to inveigh against—

"The Lowness of American Ships." He tells us that "a battle ship must fight at sea—in heavy weather."

It may be necessary to fight "in heavy weather," but I feel safe in saying that a battle ship does not have to fight under such conditions; in fact, there are more chances for moderately good weather than for rough weather, and history so proves. The design of a battle ship must provide, however, for fighting under such conditions of weather and sea as may probably exist at the time "action" becomes necessary, and the policy of foreign designers with respect to foreign designs and the direct testimony of our own battle ship commanders leaves no doubt as to the ability of our battle ships to give an excellent account of themselves in any sea in which battles are likely to be fought, for it may be taken for granted that the enemy will have the same sort of seaway in his part of the ocean that our ships will be having in theirs.

The writer next proceeds to inform us that a battle ship's gun ports and turrets must be "well out of water." Also, that—"* * * if this were not the case, the monitor—long since discarded—would not be the fighting ship of the world."

Comment is then made upon the Indiana, Kearsarge, and Kentucky classes. The Indiana class was designed about eighteen years ago, and it has been more than twelve years since the contract for the construction of the Kearsarge and Kentucky was signed. These vessels undoubtedly have low freeboard, as measured by more recent standards. It should not be forgotten, however, that they were appropriated for and designed as "coast-line battle ships," and that many foreign battle ships of that time had about the same freeboard. In an appendix to this report will be found quotations from a foreign scientific publication lauding the Indiana class of battle ships. In fact, the battery of the Indiana class, when considered in relation to the displacement of those vessels, created a distinct sensation in foreign services, and many and loud were the complaints at that time by foreign critics as to the ability of American designers to obtain so much greater offensive power in their battle ships than seemed to be possible with foreign designs, while preserving sufficiently good seagoing qualities. The Indiana and Kearsarge classes, however, which comprise altogether only five vessels (only two of them being now with the fleet), are the only battle ships in our Navy which can be regarded as "low freeboard" vessels, all of the others having a freeboard which, in the opinion of those who have had experience in command of such vessels and in the opinion of highest naval authority in our own and foreign services, is ample for all conditions of weather under which naval battles are likely to be fought with profit to either side. Dismissing further consideration of such "long-ago" designs as those of the Indiana and Kentucky classes, the height of freeboard forward provided for all other battle ships of the United States Navy is substantially the same as that adopted for every group of battle ships in the British navy prior to the design of the Dreadnaught, with the possible exception of the Majestic class. It also corresponds substantially to, though rather greater than, the freeboard of all battle ships of the Japanese Navy, with the exception of those captured from the Russians and refitted, but including one of their latest 20,000-ton battle ships; and this last fact is worthy of particular note, because this 20,000-ton battle ship is about 500 feet in length and is designed for high speed, and a contemperaneous design of a 20,000-ton battle ship for the United States Navy has about 6 feet more freeboard forward than this Japanese battle ship. This additional height of forward freeboard, however, does not in any sense mean that the "freeboards" previously provided for American battle ships were insufficient, but simply means that, with a vessel of so much greater length, finer water lines, and great concentration of weights nearer the extremities, additional freeboard forward is regarded as essential if such vessels are to fight their forward battery in a heavy sea when going at comparatively high speed.

The critic's love of exaggeration leads him to express himself very curiously in the following sentence:

"* * * all modern battle ships in foreign navies have forward decks from about 22 to 28 feet above the water. * * * And in the latest of the foreign ships, especially in the French and British navies, the high bow is universal."

It has already been stated that the French type of battle ship carries its main battery about one deck height higher above the water line than is the case with English, Japanese, and American battle ships. Since, however, out of the more than sixty battle ships in the British navy built and commissioned since 1889, only those of the Majestic class and the Dreadnought have greater freeboard than about 21 feet, and since all Japanese battle ships, except those captured from Russia, have freeboards of 20 feet or less, the statement that "all modern battle ships in foreign navies have forward decks from about 22 to 28 feet above the water," is as inaccurate as the majority of the statements made in this truly remarkable article. The use of "universal" in this connection scarcely needs comment. We are next advised of the disastrous results which would follow such grave deficiencies in freeboard as he alleges exist in our battle ships, and the critic gives us a graphic description of the way in which "green seas" come aboard, and how the Virginia, "with all her ports closed by steel bucklers, shipped 120 tons of water," etc. The lowest guns of the Virginia (those of the 6-inch broadside battery) are at about the same level as the gun-deck 6-inch broadside guns on the Royal Sovereign, and at approximately the same height as those of the majority of gun-deck broadside guns in British battle ships. They are higher, however, than the lowest tier of broadside guns of the very recent British Duncans, King Edwards, and Swiftsures, the French Republiques, and the majority of Japanese battle ships, so far as the data available indicates. The turret guns of the Virginia are higher than those of the British Duncans, King Edwards, Swiftsures, and the majority of Japanese battle ships.

In view of the mass of opinion of distinguished seagoing officers of the United States Navy and the British navy, already quoted, as to the excellent qualities, from a seaman's point of view, of the British Royal Sovereign and our own Iowa and Alabama, it is a waste of time to consider further the alleged inability of our battle ships of similar characteristics to fight their batteries in any seaway in which battles could be fought.

Before leaving this subject of broadside gun heights, however, it may be just as well to state that the magazine critic appears to confuse "gun heights" and "deck heights;" otherwise it is incomprehensible why he should reduce the broadside gun heights of nearly all the battle ships of the Atlantic fleet by about 4 feet, the heights of axes of the broadside guns of the majority of our battle ships being about 15 feet, instead of 11 feet above the designed load water line of the vessel.

Again, this imaginative critic informs us that—

"The broadside guns of foreign battle ships and cruisers are, generally speaking, twice as high as ours, and many of them are three times as high."

This is truly a remarkable statement, and is wholly without truth even as regards the "high freeboard" French ships. As previously stated, the heights of the axes of the lowest broadside guns of nearly all British battle ships are about the same as those of the United States battle ships; those of the Japanese, slightly lower; those of corresponding guns on some of the later French battle ships, even lower still. As previously noted, however, in certain of his very broad generalities, this magazine critic is apt to speak of the "French type" of battle ship as representing the rest of the world. In this instance, however, he quite oversteps himself even with respect to French battle ships, since the Republique, one of the latest design of French battle ships in commission, has four of her broadside guns nearer the water than any broadside guns of any battle ship in the United States Navy, and the next higher tier of broadside guns is only 5 feet higher than the lowest broadside 5-inch or 6-inch guns of our battle ships. So that, instead of being three times higher, which would make them more than 42 feet above the water line, they are, in fact, only about 19 feet above the designed load water line. This is only another indication of this critic's utter unreliability even as to data which is susceptible of easy verification.

The critic next proceeds to contrast the speed of the vessels of other navies with that of vessels of the United States Navy. The determination of the most suitable speed to be provided for any given type of battle ship is a question which has always involved much difference of opinion, and the speed finally decided upon is usually a compromise. The most suitable speed for battle ships is therefore hardly a suitable subject for discussion in a report of this kind. As usual, however, the critic's statements are general and inaccurate, even when they do not relate to the particular question at issue, for his next statement applies rather to freeboard than to speed. The critic says:

"In only fairly heavy seas, while the French and Japanese could be using their entire batteries, our forward turrets and three-quarters of our windward broadside guns would be heavily handicapped, if not quite useless."

Some of the guns on the French battle ships, we know, have high emplacements; others have unusually low locations. As for the Japanese, their battle ships, with the sole exception of those refitted since their capture from the Russians, have their guns at about the same height above the water line, etc., as guns similarly situated in battle ships of the United States Navy, with the advantage on the side of the United States ships, as already noted.

The critic next tells us that the defects above noted have long been known to the Navy Department, etc. He also makes the specific statement that—

"In 1903, after our last type of battle ship, the Connecticut, was established, the Idaho and Mississippi were proposed, with forward decks 16 feet high and after decks only 9."

It is presumed that the critic intended to convey the impression that the forward upper deck of the Idaho and Mississippi was 16 feet above the water line, and the after upper deck only 9 feet. The fact is that the forward upper deck of the Idaho and Mississippi is 19 feet 3 inches above the designed load water line, and the after upper deck more than 11 feet above the designed load water line. Although much shorter vessels than the Connecticut class, and with 1 knot less designed speed, the Idaho and Mississippi have only 9 inches less freeboard abreast their forward turrets than the Connecticut, and, in proportion to their displacement, have a much more powerful armament, and equally efficient armor protection. The Chief Constructor therefore dissents entirely from the critic's dictum that—

"The building of these ships, in face of the knowledge of what their lowering upon the water meant, was preposterous."

The designed freeboard of the South Carolina class, which the critic describes as "our semi-Dreadnoughts," is 19 feet 6 inches, instead of 18 feet, as stated by the writer. The freeboard of these vessels is only 1 foot less than that of the Connecticut class, is greater than that of Admiral Togo's flagship, the Mikasa, is greater than that of the Iowa, whose freeboard was highly commended by the General Board in 1903, and is about the same as that of the Royal Sovereign class and the majority of British battle ships, whose seaworthy qualities, ability to fight their guns under all conditions of weather, etc., have never been seriously questioned.

The writer's next statement is probably the most inexplicable of a large number of false or misleading statements. Referring to our last-designed 20,000-ton battle ship, he says:

"And these latest ships were given a proper freeboard only after special pressure from the President of the United States. On this point, again, the Navy itself refused to change its policy."

This is a definite and unequivocal statement concerning the official acts of at least two officials. So far as it concerns the work of the Chief Constructor in connection with any designs of ships which have been produced during the past four years, it is wholly false. The freeboard of the Delaware and North Dakota was determined in a rational and logical manner in conformity with the fundamental principles governing the design of vessels of that size and character and without suggestion or compulsion from any one. Since the Delaware class have much greater length than any previously-designed battle ships of the United States Navy, and since, in order to obtain the high speed required, the extremities of the under-water body of these vessels are unusually fine for battle ships, and, therefore, have less buoyancy, it was imperative, in view of the concentration of heavy weights comparatively near the extremities of the vessels, to give much greater freeboard forward to vessels of the Delaware class than had been previously given to vessels of the Connecticut class, in order to preserve the same relative degree of seaworthiness when traveling at high speed in a seaway. As already fully explained, however, this was a natural development for this type of vessel and did not in the slightest degree discredit the designs of the battle ships which had gone before.

The Chief Constructor has taken great pains to dispose in detail of the sensational allegations of this magazine writer with respect to those questions which directly affect work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and especially the vital questions of freeboard, height of gun axes, and water-line armor protection. The allegations of the critic with respect to matters in which the Bureau of Construction and Repair is only incidentally concerned are almost as sensational or misleading as those relating to matters for which the Bureau is directly responsible. To effectually dispose of the majority of these allegations would be a comparatively simple task; but inasmuch as this report has already extended itself to an unusual length, the Chief Constructor hardly feels warranted in covering ground which has already been covered, in all probability, by his colleague, Rear-Admiral George A. Converse, United States Navy, retired, whose report is understood to cover all matters relating to the Bureau of Ordnance, as well as those relating to personnel, drill, organization of the fleet, etc.

Moreover, many of the writer's misleading statements with respect to superstructure-armor protection, size of gun ports, protection of crew, type of ammunition hoists, etc., have been treated at some length by the Chief Constructor in his recent testimony before the House Naval Committee, a copy of which will be filed with this report as soon as received from the printer. For a gentleman who claims "a closer seagoing acquaintance" with the American Navy "than any other civilian possesses" the writer evinces a most unwarranted tendency to indulge in loose, irresponsible, misleading, or false statements concerning matters with which he should have definite knowledge if his ten years' familiarity with the Navy have been devoted to earnest and even passably intelligent study of its matériel in comparison with that of foreign navies. His apparently unsatiable desire for sensation at any cost leads him to make statements which, upon their very face, are too absurd for serious consideration. A few conspicuous instances of this must suffice.

The critic states in his article, referring to the Kearsarge and Kentucky, that—

"The openings above and below the guns in the turrets of these vessels are 10 feet square."

If this were true, practically the entire "port plates" of the 13-inch turrets of these vessels would have to be removed. The mere publication of a statement of this nature leaves the author open to an accusation of ignorance, gross carelessness, or malicious misrepresentation.

Again, this writer says:

"The mechanism for furnishing ammunition to the crews of the medium guns can give them only from one-fifth to one-third the amount that they can fire."

The rate of ammunition supply now provided for the main and secondary battery guns of nearly all of our battle ships is such that if the battery is served at the maximum possible rate of supply of the ammunition hoists, the magazines would be emptied in considerably less than an hour. It has been reported—and there is no good reason to doubt the accuracy of this report—that after five hours' fighting, during the first day's battle of the Sea of Japan, the Japanese fleet was still well supplied with ammunition. Reports indicate, also, that the number of rounds of ammunition per gun for battle ships of the United States fleet is not inferior to that provided for vessels of the Japanese navy. So that, if the critic really meant what he said, it would necessitate a rate of ammunition supply which would permit a rapidity of fire more than twenty-five times as great as the average found practicable by the Japanese fleet in the battle of the Sea of Japan, and would empty the magazines in less than ten minutes, if the entire battery were engaged. The effect upon both matériel and personnel of the ship maintaining this rate of fire would probably be nearly as disastrous as that produced by the projectiles themselves upon the enemy's ship.

In view of the grave misrepresentations which have been made, not only in the article now under consideration, but in the public press generally, brief allusion will be made to those criticisms which deal with that most important subject—turret ammunition hoists.

In making reference to what he styles "the open shaft to the magazine," the critic makes the following statement:

"Never, since the use of powder upon fighting ships, has there been such danger to the magazines as exists in every battle ship and armored cruiser in the American fleet. It is a first principle, recognized even in the days of wooden frigates, that powder must not be passed directly up to the gun deck through a vertical shaft. Primitive common sense demands that there must be no passageway straight down from the fire of the guns on the fighting deck to the magazines. The open turret of the United States battle ship is the only violation of this principle in the practice of the world."

The first sentence of the above quotation is wholly and unwarrantably untrue, if we are to accept the positive statements of ordnance experts who have given this matter serious attention. In the first place, the type of turret ammunition hoists in service in the United States Navy was developed by ordnance officers of conspicuous ability and knowledge of their profession. Among the chiefs of Bureau of Ordnance during the time that this type of ammunition hoist was being generally installed in the turrets of our battle ships and armored cruisers were:

Rear-Admiral Montgomery Sicard, who was subsequently commander in chief of the Atlantic fleet.

Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson, who was subsequently commander in chief of the American naval forces in the Atlantic Ocean during the war with Spain.

Rear-Admiral William M. Folger, who was subsequently commander in chief of our fleet in Asiatic waters.

Rear-Admiral Charles O'Neil, who for seven years was Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Associated with the above-noted distinguished officers were officers who had the complete confidence of their colleagues in the Navy and who were themselves subsequently in charge of some of the very turrets whose ammunition hoists are now alleged to be so very deadly and inexcusable. As a matter of fact, upon no single question connected with battle ship design does there appear to have been greater misunderstanding than there has been with respect to the relative safety of different types of ammunition hoists. There is the best possible authority for the statement that, as regards safety, the present United States type of turret ammunition hoist, with automatic shutters, is as safe as the two-stage type of ammunition hoist under the condition of greatest rapidity of service in action. Ordnance experts of unquestioned ability and experience have stated most positively that the real advantage of the two-stage hoist is that of greater rapidity of ammunition supply and not increased safety, since the increased rapidity of supply of ammunition can only be attained by having an auxiliary supply of ammunition in what may be termed the upper handling room, or else permitting several charges to be in transit from the magazine to the turret chamber at the same time. Moreover, the use of two independent small-chamber trunks for the two ammunition hoists increases the chance of explosive ignition of ammunition in transit from the magazine to the turret chamber should such charges be ignited by burning grains of powder or otherwise while in the tube, since the ignition of powder in a confined space is almost certain to cause dangerously high pressures, whereas the ignition of the same powder in a large unconfined space would result in less rapid combustion and comparatively low pressures.

It must not be forgotten that in the turret ammunition hoists of United States battle ships the car is loaded in a magazine handling room which is wholly separated from the magazines themselves by water-tight doors. These water-tight doors have in them scuttles with automatic flaps, the ammunition being passed from the magazine through the scuttles into the handling room. There is no necessity for an accumulation of powder in the handling room, and there are stringent regulations to provide against such an accumulation. There is, moreover, a platform shutting off the handling room from the upper part of the turret well. The ammunition car passes through this platform, automatic shutters closing the entrance as soon as the car has passed. As a matter of fact, the ignition in the turret chamber, on four separate occasions, of charges of powder, and on one of these occasions the ignition of a considerable quantity of powder in the handling room, without an explosion of the ammunition in the magazine resulting therefrom, would tend to indicate, not that the magazines were in danger of explosion from such a cause, but that they were unusually immune. The type of turret ammunition hoist in the United States Navy had nothing to do with the origin or causes of the ignition of the powder charges in the turret chamber on any of these occasions; nor will the substitution of a different type of hoist entirely remove the inevitable danger which must always exist in the handling of high explosives under target practice or battle conditions.

That every possible precaution will be taken to minimize these risks goes without saying, and I believe that the bureaus charged with such matters in the United States Navy have so far taken every possible precaution whose practicability and utility have been demonstrated.

I have excellent authority for the statement that all of the turret ammunition hoists of armored cruisers in the British navy lead direct from the magazine handling room to the turret chamber and are not of the interrupted-hoist type. Also that a large number of turret ammunition hoists on British battle ships are of the same direct-hoist type. The direct hoist is also in use on many French battle ships. I am informed that the essential difference between British direct hoists and American direct hoists is that in the British type there is a long tube leading from the magazine handling room to the turret chamber, open at the bottom, and having a suitable closure at the top; whereas in the American type of hoist the charge goes direct from the handling room to the turret chamber, this hoist having no circumscribing tube, there being instead an intermediate platform with automatic shutters, as previously described. In the opinion of some well-known ordnance experts, the use of the direct tube, as in the English navy, is no safer than that of the American type of direct hoist with intermediate platform, for reasons already stated.

The question now naturally arises, Why should there be any change in the turret ammunition hoists of American battle ships if the present hoist is satisfactory? An entirely satisfactory reply to such a question would involve a complete review of a large mass of official correspondence relating to ammunition hoists and extending over a period of many years. Briefly, however, it may be stated that there has apparently arisen, during the past few years, doubt as to the safety of the present type of ammunition hoists. This distrust is believed by some of those best qualified to judge to be wholly without foundation in fact. Those who have had any extended experience in the control of men, however, fully realize the serious results which might easily follow undue distrust of the safety of so important a mechanism as the turret ammunition hoist. The official records indicate that the two-stage type of hoist was directed to be installed in the turrets of all battle ships and armored cruisers of the United States Navy (other than the four last designed) as a direct result of the recommendation of a turret board appointed shortly after the accident in the turret of the Georgia, and that the Bureaus of Ordnance and Construction and Repair have acted in direct conformity with the Department's instructions approving the report of the board. It is also true that one of the seriously controlling features (so far as the Bureaus of Ordnance and Construction and Repair are concerned) in taking the preliminary steps to make this change in turret ammunition hoists was the recognition of the apparent distrust in which the present type of hoist was beginning to be held on account of the serious misrepresentations which had been made as to the safety of that type of hoist. Inasmuch, therefore, as the efficiency of any body of men is seriously impaired, if they honestly believe that the tools with which they are to work are at all unsafe, the Bureaus of Ordnance and Construction and Repair have been working together for some years past to make such modifications of ammunition hoists and turret arrangements as would meet all practicable requirements of both speed and safety.

Inasmuch as this subject will be fully treated in the report to be submitted by Rear-Admiral Converse, further comment will not be made, except to state that, judging by past experience, it is not at all beyond the possibility of rapid evolution of service sentiment in such matters that modifications may be made in the type of turret ammunition hoist now in service which will entirely meet the requirements of those who desire an increase in speed. If, however, the present hoists are modified so as to provide, in effect, a two-stage hoist, such modification, or the substitution of entirely new two-stage hoists, in the opinion of many ordnance experts, will not be productive of an increase of safety, but an increase of speed, unless speed is sacrificed to safety, an accomplishment hitherto found to be practically impossible under the intensely competitive conditions now prevailing with respect to target practice.

The strictures of the critic upon the bureau system of the Navy Department and bureau management of the Navy are severe, and if all of them had reasonable semblance of truth, would furnish just cause for alarm. A system, however, which has carried the Navy through three wars, and which directly superseded an administrative organization of the general character of the one now put forth as a "cure-all" for the alleged defects of the present bureau system, must surely have very definite merit. It can not, therefore, be lightly brushed aside to meet the views of the irresponsible critic whose comments upon our matériel have been proved to be so misleading and inaccurate. Moreover, it is not entirely apparent that experience as an artist and an author should adequately qualify a critic to express a really valuable opinion concerning the administration of so vast and complex an establishment as that of the Department of the Navy. A scheme for the effective reorganization of so important a branch of the public service might well tax the best efforts of those who have devoted to that subject years of study and have brought to its intelligent consideration the valuable experience of successful endeavor in similar lines of work; it obviously has no terrors, however, for either the naval or civil amateur in such matters. After an experience of more than four years as chief of one of the most important bureaus in the Navy Department, and an administrative experience of many years prior to his appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Chief Constructor can say, without hesitation, that he knows of no branch of the public service which has more earnest, loyal, and devoted servants than has the Department of the Navy in the present heads of its various bureaus and offices. Faults of administration there doubtless are, and the bureau system may not be in all respects ideal; but all forms of corporate or governmental administration have their defects, and, all things considered, I believe the underlying principles which governed the original establishment of the present bureau system are as sound to-day as they were when Congress authorized the establishment of the Bureaus more than sixty years ago.

Moreover, after actual experience of the practical workings of such a system, I have no doubt whatever that, for direct administrative responsibility it is, as a system, one of the best that can be devised, and that with the further development of certain consolidations and changes in navy-yard administration, which are now being tentatively undertaken, the bureau system of the Navy Department can be made to give more effective results than any system of "board responsibility" ever devised.

The Chief Constructor's conclusions with respect to certain alleged defects in the battle ships of the United States Navy have been stated definitely as each subject was disposed of. It is therefore needless to do more, in conclusion, than make a positive general statement based upon the detail statements already given. It is therefore a privilege to be able to state that the height of freeboard, height of gun axes, character of water-line armor protection, general type of turret ammunition hoists, etc., of the ships of the United States Navy are such as have heretofore been embodied in many of the best "all-around" battle ships of which the Chief Constructor has knowledge, and they have been determined upon only after the most painstaking investigation and devoted attention to some of the most experienced and distinguished officers of the United States Navy, including those of the seagoing element as well as those of technical branches of the service. Also that considering each vessel in its own period of design, the battle ships of the United States Navy compare most favorably with those of the most important foreign navies and have been used by certain foreign expert critics as standards which foreign designers should emulate.

Comparison of vessels of the United States Navy with foreign vessels is not agreeable nor ordinarily desirable, but this must be regarded as an extraordinary occasion, since the public and a large section of our own service have been misled or misinformed, and positive statements of fact and opinion are necessary to remove these false impressions. The features of battle-ship design, which have been covered in the foregoing report, are among the most important with which the naval constructor and others responsible for the design of battle ships of our Navy have to deal. They are also, apparently the least understood and appreciated by those whose superficial knowledge of the general subject of ship design leads them to make rash, inaccurate, and unwarranted statements in relation thereto.

In preparing this report, the Chief Constructor has taken an unusual degree of pains to accumulate and prepare data which would be as reliable as the sources of information would permit. With respect to our own and certain foreign battle ships, it has been possible to give data with an unusual degree of accuracy; details with respect to the other typical foreign battle ships for which plans and tabular data have been prepared are the best available, the sole desire being to state the facts and let the conclusions therefrom be so plain that even the unwilling may be convinced. Moreover, in preparing this report and devoting so large an amount of personal attention to the collection and arrangement of data in relation thereto, the Chief Constructor has had in mind not so much the refutation of the misstatements of an irresponsible magazine writer, as the removal of an erroneous impression from the mind of the public at large, and especially to correctly inform those whose naval training and professional association should already have afforded them more accurate knowledge of, and greater faith in, the matériel which may some day be under their command in time of war.

The Chief Constructor is constrained to believe that there is among some of the personnel of our naval service an inexplicable amount of misinformation concerning the development of naval matériel in our own as well as in foreign services; also a complete failure to grasp the essential fact that all battle-ship design is necessarily a compromise, and that the undue development of one feature must necessarily be accomplished by sacrificing some other perhaps equally important feature. That there is grave misinformation as to real conditions with respect to naval matériel is unfortunately indicated by statements of magazine and other writers that the information upon which they have based their criticisms has been obtained from those who were in a position to have exact knowledge on the subject.

After due consideration and consultation with the Department, it has been deemed unnecessary to deal fully with this particular phase of the subject in a report of this kind. Some reference thereto, however, appears necessary in view of the very widespread impression that many of the most sweeping criticisms which have appeared in recent magazine and other articles had a certain amount of direct inspiration.

That those who are responsible for the design of battle ships in the United States Navy are not infallible, is readily conceded; that errors doubtless have been and will be made in some of the details of battle-ship design, may also be regarded as indisputable. This matter was, however, tersely disposed of by the Secretary of the Navy in his last annual report, page 33, in the following statement:

"Peculiarly fitted as are our ship designers for the work they have in hand, we have, nevertheless, in the past made some mistakes; but these, when discovered, have been promptly rectified. Such is the history of naval construction under foreign governments as well as our own. We have no monopoly of errors in warship designs. On the whole, I believe that the members of the construction corps of the United States Navy have greater opportunity for keeping in touch with the requirements of the fleet and the views of seagoing officers than is possessed by any similar corps in any other navy."

There is a tendency among many critics to compare the good points of the design of to-day with the comparative inferiority of the design of ten or more years ago. There is also, among all critics of naval matériel, a strong tendency to criticise some particular element of battle-ship design, without duly considering all the other elements which enter into the design of the vessel as a whole. It also often happens that each critic has his own particular ideas as to the relative value to be assigned to each essential element of battle-ship design, and if his individual views are not met, the design, as a whole, is, in his opinion, faulty.

The failure to consider, as a whole, all the elements which enter into the design of any particular battle ship, and the failure to properly inform themselves as to previous practice and the conditions under which any particular design has been developed, is one of the most fruitful sources of such unfavorable criticism as is made by critics in the naval service.

The majority of those who bring to the Department's attention their views concerning matters pertaining to the naval service are doubtless actuated by the highest motives, and some of them may really believe that they are doing a great public service in appearing to reveal and hold up to public condemnation alleged glaring defects in the battle ships of the United States Navy. Apparently it has never occurred to such insufficiently informed critics that they have no monopoly of professional knowledge, loyalty, and devotion to duty—qualities which, in the judgment of the Chief Constructor, are characteristic of the overwhelming majority of officers of the United States Navy. Neither do these critics appear to take time to consider that while they may possibly be accomplishing, in their own particular fields of labor, splendid results for which all officers are only too glad to accord them their full measure of praise—other officers, fully as devoted to their work, fully as loyal to the naval service as themselves, and possibly much more completely equipped as regards the particular professional work for which they have definite and very great responsibility, are giving their very best energies, in season and out, to the accomplishment of the one great thing which all right-thinking, right-minded, fair-dealing naval officers have in view, namely, the bringing to the highest possible state of efficiency the service in which they have all been trained from boyhood and which the large majority love so well that they will leave nothing undone to make it excel in all things and to defend it from its detractors.

So far as concerns criticism in general, it is always welcome when it is timely and well considered, since much good can and does result from the consideration of intelligent criticism of this kind. There are ample means, however, of bringing to the attention of the Department criticism either of the personnel or matériel of the naval service, and in the last annual report of the Chief Constructor there was set forth in great detail a history of battle-ship design in the United States Navy for the past ten years, with definite allusion to some of the most important criticisms that have been made and definite orders published by the Secretary of the Navy with a view to eliciting from officers in general intelligent criticism upon naval matériel. Reference was also made to some of the very unfortunate results which had followed the overruling of the opinion of the Department's responsible and trained designers in favor of the ill-considered and unwise recommendations of those whose training and experience in such matters were not so complete as that of the Department's official advisers.

That Bureau of the Navy Department of which I have the honor at the present time to be the chief does not shrink from but courts criticism; but in order that such criticism may be helpful and valuable it must come from well-informed and experienced men whose sole desire is to improve and not to tear down, and who are willing to set forth their views in detail with definite reasons for "the faith that is in them." If, in the last analysis, those who have final and definite responsibility for results and whose knowledge and experience does not permit them to concur in the views of the critic—no matter how definite those views may be or how strongly or persistently expressed—rely upon their own best judgment, reinforced, it may be, by the unanimous concurrent opinion of their responsible official colleagues, the critic has no just right to insist that only he and his sympathizers are right and that all those who differ from them in opinion are wholly wrong, especially when the subject under criticism is one for which others and not the critics have definite responsibility. That they alone are right, however, appears to be the point of view of those whose opinions are not accepted, and their subsequent action must, in many instances, be prejudicial rather than beneficial to the naval service if we are to accept as true the statements of certain magazine and other writers that their articles are based upon information obtained from officers of the Navy.

In view of the foregoing, and in spite of the very great additional burden of work imposed upon the Chief Constructor, it has been a real privilege to join with his colleague, the president of the Board of Construction, in setting forth the facts concerning the matériel of the United States Navy. In doing so, the Chief Constructor is fully aware how great has been the misrepresentation as to such matters, how far-reaching may be the results, and, ultimately, how disastrous to discipline and efficiency of the fleet itself must be any widespread dissemination of false or misleading statements concerning our naval matériel unless such false impressions are promptly removed; for it is quite too much to expect that the best work can be done either by commissioned or enlisted personnel if they once become thoroughly imbued with the idea that the possible enemy has the "best" and our own service only the "worst" in naval matériel.

Those features of battle-ship design which have been covered by this report and which affect the design of the vessel as a whole, in matters directly under the cognizance of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, are height of freeboard, gun height, and water-line armor distribution. The detailed discussion of these features of United States battle ships in the foregoing report would appear to leave no doubt whatever as to the accuracy of the following conclusions:

First. That the height of freeboard of United States battle ships has been given the most careful consideration in every design of battle ship, and that the comparatively inferior freeboard of the three vessels of the Indiana class and the two vessels of the Kearsarge class was due, in part, to a literal compliance with the phraseology of the act making appropriation for those vessels and in part to a desire to obtain the greatest possible battery power and greatest possible battery and hull protection on the displacement finally decided upon. All other battle ships in the United States Navy, with the exception of those above noted, have ample freeboard for seaworthiness, and ample freeboard for the purpose of effectual service of the battery under all probable conditions of battle. Since freeboard in excess of that necessary for seaworthiness and the service of the battery is obtained at a distinct sacrifice of other important and essential qualities, the action of the responsible designers of the battle ships of the United States Navy has been fully justified by the results obtained. Moreover, a comparison of the freeboard of American battle ships with that of battle ships of the British and Japanese navies indicates that the responsible designers of these three navies have arrived at substantially identical conclusions in treating this very important element of battle-ship design.

Second. That the heights of gun axes on battle ships of the United States Navy are directly and most favorably comparable with the heights of gun axes on battle ships of the British and Japanese navies, and that such gun heights are entirely adequate for the effectual service of the battery under all probable conditions of weather during which naval actions are likely to take place. The most direct evidence in support of this statement is the effective work performed by the batteries of the Japanese battle ships during the battle of the Sea of Japan, it being noted in this connection that the heights of gun axes of the battle ships of the Japanese fleet were slightly less than the heights of gun axes of nearly all battle ships of the United States Navy, with the exception of those of the Kearsarge and Indiana classes.

Third. That the water-line armor distribution on battle ships of the United States Navy has been made with due regard to the imperative necessity of giving adequate protection not only to vital elements of the vessel, such as machinery, boilers, and magazines, but also—and most important of all—to the stability of the vessel under battle conditions. The data contained in the text of this report, supplemented by the plans herewith forwarded as appendices, leave no possible room for doubt that the water-line armor distribution of battle ships of the United States Navy is in no sense inferior to that of similar protection on typical battle ships of the British and Japanese navies, and in many instances, as is clearly shown, is superior. Where the designs of battle ships of other navies have indicated a greater protection to the water line, such greater protection has inevitably been accompanied by serious sacrifices of other most important qualities, a sacrifice which, in the judgment of British, Japanese, and American designers, has been without justification.

Speaking, therefore, as one who has no responsibility, either direct or indirect, for the designs of battle ships now attached to the Atlantic fleet, but as one who has unusual opportunities to know facts, and who has, moreover, a keen appreciation of the responsibility inevitably attaching to such a statement made by him, the Chief Constructor desires to go fairly and squarely on record as stating that, ship for ship, in its own period of design, the battle-ship fleet of the United States Navy compares most favorably with that of any other navy in the world, and, in the opinion of certain foreign critics, is superior to all in battery power and protection, the two vitally essential elements in all battle ships. In making the foregoing statement the Chief Constructor earnestly desires to disclaim any boastful intent. As previously noted, comparisons of this kind are unpleasant and ordinarily undesirable, but there are times when they are necessary, and this appears to be one of them.

In conclusion, and by way of illustrating the fact that the United States Navy has no monopoly of unfair and unjust criticism and that there are in other countries individuals or cliques whose tendency is to criticize to destruction rather than to assist in upbuilding, and who evince an undue interest in and responsibility for the work for which others are legally responsible, I beg to submit and close with the following quotation from an article in a well-known and widely read British service publication of so recent a date as January 16, 1908:

"* * * The real danger to British naval supremacy at the present time lies not in the possession of fast battle ships nor in the superiority of the material of the fleet, but in the formation of cabals. Loyalty to their chiefs is what the nation expects and requires from its naval officers of all ranks; there can be no success in war without it. Some remarks penned by an officer of rank one hundred and twenty-odd years ago are not without point even at the present time. A certain Captain Cornewall, describing a 'straight talk' he had with his commander in chief, relates how he addressed him in the following remarkable words: 'By what power I can not say, but from the effects of that power he (the second in command) has drawn over to himself a party of at least half of the officers under your command; these are trained up in discontent, and, perhaps, I don't go too far if I say, in open contempt of every resolution sent from the Admiralty.'

"There is a lot to be learned from naval history, if we can only interpret its lessons aright. And the first and last lesson to learn is loyalty to the chiefs, whether at the Admiralty, on shore, or in command afloat."

Very respectfully,

W. L. CAPPS,
Chief Constructor U. S. N., Chief of Bureau.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, in addition to that I present appendices 11 and 12 to accompany the report of Rear-Admiral Capps of February 14, 1908. I do not ask that that be printed in the RECORD, but that it be printed with the report of Admiral Capps as a part of the Senate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. I also ask that 500 additional copies of each of these documents be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maine that he incorporate all of these documents in one pamphlet, so that we shall have them all together in one document, which will be more convenient for reference.

Mr. HALE. I think, as it seems that each is distinctive, that it will be better to have them printed separately as presented, and, if at any time hereafter it is desired that they shall be printed together, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] suggests, they can be very easily printed in that form.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator takes his seat——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The veteran Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] suggests that, in view of the public interest in this matter, I ask for the printing of a thousand extra copies instead of 500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, 1,000 extra copies of the documents referred to by the Senator from Maine will be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator from Maine takes his seat, as he has been discussing naval affairs with a thorough knowledge and understanding, I will say there is one phase of the subject connected with the Navy as to which I should like to have some information, which perhaps he can give. On the 21st of January the Senator from Maine introduced a resolution, No. 77, which the Senate adopted, calling upon the Secretary of the Navy to send to the Senate a complete list of the line and staff officers of the Navy on duty in Washington, etc. The Senator no doubt recalls the subject. It is now nearly a month since that resolution was adopted; and as this is so simple and easy a performance on the part of the Department of the Navy, I should like to know if an answer has come, and if not, why not?

Mr. HALE. I will tell the Senator from South Carolina exactly. The reply to the resolution which the Senator has cited was sent to the Senate during my absence from Washington, something like a week ago. It was withdrawn for the purpose of correcting the proofs and has not yet been returned to the Senate. I am told that it will probably reach this body to-day or to-morrow. Whenever that does happen, I shall ask the Presiding Officer to refer such reply to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It will be a part of the investigation by the committee connected with the bill which is now before the committee.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. BACON. I ask that 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 270 of this session be reprinted. It is a matter relating to the postal service and of very general interest.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the title of the document?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the document.

The SECRETARY. A letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General containing a discussion of the policy of the Post-Office Department regarding second-class mail matter, etc.

Mr. KEAN. I understand from the Senator from Georgia that the cost will be within the $500 limit.

Mr. BACON. My information is that it will be less than $200; in fact, my information is that 10,000 copies could be printed for $250. I do not know what proportion of that amount 5,000 copies would require.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that 5,000 additional copies of the document named by him be reprinted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator rise to morning business?

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a question of privilege, if that be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in the last day or two I have had my attention called to a scheme of swindling in which my name is used rather unpleasantly and without the slightest warrant. I feel it of such importance that I want to give as wide publicity to it as possible, so as to stop the rascals from getting any more money.

I have in my hand a circular which has been sent to me from Connecticut, and I have letters from Virginia and from Wisconsin and one or two other States, all relating to the subject of land grants in Oregon, and mentioning this circular. The circular headed, "How to make $5,000 out of $200." In reading it I find that those responsible for it are using my activity here in calling attention to these land grants and endeavoring to have the Senate investigate and take action in regard to them to advertise a scheme to sell some of these railroad lands. In one place it is stated that "Senator TILLMAN takes eleven quarters," and in another place it is stated that the lawsuits to be instituted in order to recover these lands are promised to be pressed with great vigor, because I am behind them. As a matter of fact, I have not bought any land anywhere in the West nor undertaken to buy any. I have made some inquiries, as one naturally would in roaming through the West. I simply want the people of the country to be put on notice that this swindler at Portland has no warrant whatever for endeavoring to inveigle others into his game.

I have telephoned to the Post-Office Department to ask the official in charge of the fraud-order bureau to come down here so that I can present the evidence and endeavor to block this rascal as much as I can. I ask that the circular be printed in the RECORD in order to give it publicity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the communication submitted by him be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

[St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg. Capital, $3,000,000. Bryan R. Dorr, President. Depositories, American National Bank, St. Paul; United States National Bank, Portlan. Phones, Main 8550; A 5580. Codes, Western Union, McMullen.]

FEBRUARY 5, 1908.

DIVIDEND NOTICE AND REPORT OF STOCKHOLDERS.

We are presenting herewith to our correspondents and stockholders an unusual opportunity to make a quick profit of about 2,500 per cent, if they are willing to act at once. All the particulars are contained in the circular inclosed, and I urge that you read it carefully.

A dividend of 10 per cent was paid on January 2 upon all the preferred stock which has been paid for and issued by December 16, 1907. This dividend was paid out of the earnings on the sale of timber bonds, of which we have an aggregate of nearly $20,000,000 for sale. Dividends are payable twice each year, and we hope materially to increase the dividend rate shortly, owing to the establishment of this Portland office and to the connections which we have formed in New York to represent us there.

During the financial stringency there was a temporary slump in the price of standing timber on the coast, but with the recovery of confidence lumber camps are reopening everywhere and shipments by rail and water are daily increasing in volume. Meanwhile the temporary lower level in timber prices will enable us, being on the spot with ready cash, to secure bargains which will seem absurd six months from now. The large syndicates forming the so-called "lumber trust" are buying as fast as money can be secured and timber located. From this office we shall buy and sell timber and timber bonds, and shall in a few weeks commence the cutting of logs. Our New York representative will be Mr. Clarence M. Smith, of 74 Broadway, banker and broker, and we are very fortunate in securing a firm of such reputation and standing.

Remember, I told you I intended to make a great success of this business. Now, I am going to do it. In fact, I am doing it. Since coming out here, I have become convinced that our opportunity is absolutely unlimited. People all over the world are realizing that when the Panama Canal is completed and the wonderful lumber of the Pacific coast, with its Port Orford cedar, sugar pine, and Douglas fir, can be delivered in New York by sailing vessel at low cost and in reasonably short time the price of this stumpage will be higher than it is now in the Central States. In Minnesota mixed stumpage sells at from $10 to $13 per 1,000 feet, and the price for better timber here now is about $2 per thousand. If you can buy timber now, by all means buy it! We have dozens of bargains on our list, costing from $2,000 up per quarter section. Otherwise, by all means take some of the preferred stock in this corporation at $100 for each 100 shares, payable at the rate of 10 per cent down and 5 per cent per month.

Or take up the opportunity offered in the inclosed circular. Read it carefully every word, and wire us at once.

Very truly, yours,

BRYAN R. DORR, President.

[St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg. Capital, $3,000,000. Bryan R. Dorr, President. Depositories, American National Bank, St. Paul; United States National Bank, Portland. Phones, Main 8550; A 5580. Codes, Western Union, McMullen.]

HOW TO MAKE $5,000 OUT OF $200.

To Our Stockholders and Correspondents:

I have just unearthed an opportunity whereby each of my correspondents can obtain a quarter section of the most valuable timber on the Pacific coast with an initial expenditure of $200. This timber is located in Coos and Douglas counties, Oregon, close to tide water, and each quarter section of 160 acres is valued at $5,000 to $15,000 on a very conservative basis. The particulars, including a tale of gigantic greed on the part of the notorious timber thieves, grafters, and land grabbers of Oregon, are as follows:

Shortly after the civil war the United States Government found it necessary to construct a military wagon road from Coos Bay to Roseburg, in Oregon. In order to obtain a builder for this road they agreed to turn over more than 100,000 acres of the finest Government timber land to the State of Oregon, for the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, on condition that the land should be sold to any one person in quantities of not greater than one quarter section (160 acres) and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. Therefore, in order to make the cost of the road fall upon those persons living along the road and receiving the benefit of its construction, the Congress of the United States, at the session beginning on the 7th day of December, 1868, passed an act donating land to the State of Oregon, which act is hereby set forth, to wit:

COOS BAY WAGON ROAD GRANT.

"An act granting land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Oregon, to aid in the contruction of a military wagon road from navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of said road: Provided, That the lands hereby granted shall be exclusively applied to the construction of said road, and to no other purposes, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses.

"Provided further, That the grant of lands hereby made shall be upon the condition that the lands shall be sold to any one person in quantities not greater than one quarter section, and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre.

"And be it further enacted, That said road shall be constructed with gradation and bridge so as to permit its regular use as a wagon road, and in such other special manner as the State of Oregon may prescribe.

"And be it further enacted, That the United States surveyor-general for the district of Oregon shall cause said lands so granted to be surveyed at the earliest practical period after the State shall have enacted the necessary legislation to carry this act into effect."

Shortly after the legislature of the State of Oregon confirmed this grant on the same terms to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, who in course of time did actually construct a very defective road between the points mentioned, and which exists to this day. However, they have steadily refused to dispose of this valuable timber to individual persons "in quantities not greater than one quarter section" to each, "and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre," nor for any other price. They did illegally and in direct violation of law, and for the purpose of evading it, transfer all the lands in one lump to the so-called "Southern Oregon Company"—that is, presumably to themselves under another name—and this corporation fraudulently holds this land to this very day in defiance of the law and the rights of the people under the grant.

THE PROSECUTION OF THE GRAFTERS.

But the day when this sort of knavery goes unpunished is at an end. No longer are State and nation sitting idly by while the people are being robbed of their birthright by the rapacity of corporations too large to be attacked by any single individual. Francis J. Heney, the great United States district attorney, has been sent out to prosecute the grafters and land thieves of California and Oregon on their own ground, and after having run Ruef and Schmitz to earth in San Francisco and uncovered gigantic steals in Oregon, securing wholesale convictions reaching even as high up as that of United States Senator Mitchell, is here in Portland now prosecuting a Government official for conspiracy with the land thieves to defraud the Government.

Realizing that the time to act has come and that only by concerted action can anything be accomplished, representative business men of Coos Bay, Portland, and elsewhere, including myself, have employed Reeder and Watkins, the leading attorneys of Marshfield, Coos County, Oreg., to make a legal tender for us of $2.50 per acre, or $400 per quarter section of 160 acres, to the Southern Oregon Company, and to take care of our interests there.

With each application they are offering to the duly authorized officials of the Southern Oregon Company, in the presence of witnesses, the sum of $400 for a certain specified quarter section. The corporation refuses this tender, thereby violating the terms of the grant and laying itself open to suit. There is no doubt in the minds of Messrs. Reeder and Watkins or ourselves as to the outcome of the suit, for the law is plain and has no mercy for grafters and land thieves nowadays.

SENATOR TILLMAN TAKES ELEVEN QUARTERS.

The illegal and outrageous robbery on the part of the Southern Oregon Company is notorious in this State, but until now it has been impossible to secure the necessary concerted action. That the right men are behind this movement will be appreciated at once when I state that among those who have spoken through our attorneys for a part of this land is Senator Tillman of South Carolina, the leader of the Democratic party in the United States Senate, a man who usually gets what he goes after. So sure is Senator TILLMAN of our success that he has subscribed and paid the necessary fees for a quarter section for himself and ten other quarter sections for ten of his nearest relatives.

WHAT THE OREGONIAN HAS TO SAY.

The Oregonian, the leading newspaper of Portland, Oreg., speaks as follows in a long article relative to this suit:

"It will be seen that there was no intention of allowing all the lands thus set apart to pass into the hands of one person or company. The act set up guards against creation of a land monopoly that has been created. The act of 1869 laid specific injunction on the trustees, which became a part of the land laws of the United States.

"In 1870 the legislature passed an act donating the land to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, under the conditions and limitations set forth in the act of Congress of the preceding year.

"Congress did not intend the road company to acquire all or any of the lands of the grant, for the State, in execution of the trust, 'shall sell the same to any one person only in quantities not greater than one quarter section.' It is contended in behalf of the State that the State could not grant the entire trust estate to the road company, for the latter could not be the party entitled to them. The parties entitled to them were individuals of a numerous class or the public. Consequently it is contended that the road company was excluded as the sole beneficiary entitled to the lands.

"Instead of selling the lands to individuals at $2.50 an acre, in tracts not larger than 160 acres to one purchaser, the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company transferred the title to the lands to the Southern Oregon Company, which refuses to sell to individuals, thus barring great areas from settlement.

"This is in violation of the act of Congress providing that 'anyone' might acquire the land by paying $2.50 an acre, the money to be devoted to building the road. The idea that one company or person could acquire all the lands is expressly negatived by the provision of the act of Congress limiting sales to 160 acres to any one person. Only by disposing of the lands to many persons could the trustee discharge the trust and relieve the lands of the trust imposed upon them."

YOU MAY JOIN US.

Now, we will allow you to join us in this proposition if you care to do so, and if you have read this circular carefully you surely will. You must act at once, as only about fifty quarters are left. Our terms are as follows:

TERMS.

You must pay a preliminary fee of $200 per quarter section. This includes cruising and locating fee, legal retainer fee to our attorneys, court and filing fees, and all other expenses incident to the prosecution. Upon receipt of your remittance we will instruct our attorneys as above to make application to purchase from the Southern Oregon Company the best quarter section not already spoken for, and will notify you at once, giving you the legal description of the tract and stating the amount of timber thereupon. We and our attorneys will do the rest. As soon as the suit is decided and the timber wrested from the hands of the land grafters, we will pay you in cash for your timber at the rate of $2 per thousand feet, amounting to, at least, $5,000 cash for each quarter section, or we will send you the deed upon payment of the specified sum of $400 ($2.50 per acre for 160 acres, as provided by law) plus a commission of 25 cents per thousand feet for the timber to which the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate will be entitled by right of negotiating these matters. Thus your $200 will obtain for you $5,000 in cash or, by the additional payment upon termination of the suit, as above, a deed to 160 acres of the finest timber land on the Pacific coast.

This timber consists of about 30 per cent white or Port Orford cedar and the balance Douglas fir. Port Orford cedar is the most valuable wood in Oregon, being used extensively for shipbuilding purposes and for match wood. Douglas fir is the most valuable all-purpose wood in North America. A full description of these two valuable woods may be found in the article "Lumbering in Oregon," pages 8 and 9, of the booklet The Richest Land in America, which was sent you some time ago. Suffice it to say that the ownership of one quarter section of this timber represents a tidy sum and that it increases in value with every year.

INSTRUCTIONS.

Simply sign your name in ink to the inclosed form entitled "application to purchase," leaving all other spaces blank, and return to us at once with your check for $200. Wire us without fail as soon as you have sent the money, in order that we may reserve you the very best timber not already spoken for.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. Can I obtain more than one quarter section? Answer: Not for yourself, but you can obtain extra quarter sections for any or each of your relatives or friends by the payment of $200 per quarter section. In that case, for each additional application cut out a piece of good white paper the same size and shape as the "Application to Purchase," and have the applicant sign in ink in the lower right-hand corner. We will fill in on the typewriter. Send $200 with each application and be sure to wire at once.

2. How long will it take to decide the suit? Answer: Can not say. It may take six months, but it will be pushed with the utmost vigor, of course, as it is greatly to our interest, including that of Senator TILLMAN and the other persons associated with us, to have it settled at once. The lawyers will do their best, for we have agreed to pay them an additional fee of $100 per quarter out of our commissions upon the successful termination of the suit.

3. Is it necessary for me to reside on this land? Answer: No. This grant has nothing to do with the "homestead" laws or the "stone and timber act," and any person is entitled to purchase 160 acres whether or not he has used his "homestead" and "stone and timber" rights. He need not even see the land.

4. What if the land is all spoken for by the time you receive my application? Answer: Then we return your money at once. You must hurry, as there are only about fifty quarters left, which we have reserved for our stockholders and correspondents. Therefore remit and wire at once to

BRYAN R. DORR, President,
525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have just seen the circular of which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has spoken, and I think that another suggestion ought to be made in connection with what the Senator from South Carolina has said. In view of the fact that it appears that that circular, which is being sent broadcast throughout the country, by its terms invites people to send to this particular company $200, I think it is, and perhaps some additional fees, for which the company guarantees to secure them valuable tracts of timber land worth not less than from $5,000 up to $15,000—I say, in view of that, I think the statement ought to be put in the RECORD, so that it may go out to the public and be understood that the probability is very, very remote of private individuals being able to acquire this land in the manner suggested by this circular.

The scheme very evidently is for the company issuing the circular to accumulate a vast fund of money by dupes throughout the country sending it to them. They are advertising that these lands can be acquired because the Congressional grant contained a provision that the land should be sold to private individuals in quantities not to exceed 160 acres to each individual at $2.50 per acre. But the probability is that the courts will hold, whenever that question is presented, that no individual can take advantage of the provision, that the Government alone can enforce, by some proper method or some proper steps, the observance of this condition, and any suits brought by private individuals in all probability will fail.

Mr. LODGE. Where is this company?

Mr. TILLMAN. In Portland, Oreg. The circular is at the desk, and I would just as leave have it read as not, though it is rather long.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want it read. What is the name of the company, and where did the circular come from?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Secretary has the circular, and I will ask him to read the name of the company. It is some land syndicate.

The Secretary read as follows:

St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg.

Mr. FULTON. I think that is all I care to suggest in connection with the matter, Mr. President, but it ought to be known that this is a scheme to get money from unsuspecting persons out of misrepresentation and fraud.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will suggest to the Senator from Oregon, while he is on his feet, that this is another reason why the joint resolution reported on by the Judiciary Committee on yesterday should be passed as speedily as possible.

Mr. FULTON. I want, Mr. President, to ask permission to have that joint resolution taken up and passed; but I see the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is on his feet and perhaps has something else to suggest.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] desires to speak this morning on the financial bill. I am aware that the shipping bill has been made the special order by unanimous consent, and I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] whether it would be equally convenient for him to have that order continued until to-morrow, with the same rights, in order that the Senator from Alabama may go on this morning?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire responds to that I should like, if agreeable to him, to have the special order postponed until some further date. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] desires to be present when the bill is considered, and he is now confined to his room at his hotel sick, and it may be two or three days before he will be here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, first, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], that my only purpose was to make some preliminary observations in support of the bill, not to press for its immediate consideration, and I think that might well be done to-morrow if there is an opportunity.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that I will very gladly yield whatever privileges I may have to-day, if I can be granted unanimous consent for the bill to be taken up after the routine business to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill made the special order at the close of the routine morning business to-day may be taken up to-morrow after the routine morning business.

Mr. NELSON. What is the bill, Mr. President? I did not understand.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. LODGE. It is the shipping bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is Senate bill No. 28. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to the request. I simply want to understand the Senator, in order that I may report to the Senator from Georgia that there will be no effort to obtain a vote on this matter to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not at all my purpose to press the bill to a vote immediately, certainly not until the Senator from Georgia is present, because I understand the interest he has in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GROUNDS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, yesterday I submitted a concurrent resolution calling for information as to the price of certain real estate in the District of Columbia which it is proposed shall be acquired by the Government, together with the price of the improvements thereon. The resolution went over. I now ask that it may lie on the table subject to call, as time is precious this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INQUIRIES AS TO CERTAIN WESTERN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. FULTON. I ask consent, before the Senator from Alabama starts with his address, if it will not interfere with him too much, to call up and have considered Senate resolution No. 48, which was up yesterday morning. It has been printed, and I am satisfied that those who were objecting to it, having read it, will now consent to have it go through without discussion.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the wish of the Senator from Alabama, I must insist upon the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that Senate bill 3023 be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that my amendment to section 8 of the bill may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 8 by striking out the first five lines and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That on and after January 1, 1909, two-thirds of the reserve required by law to be held by national banking associations shall be kept in their vaults either in the funds now required by law or in bonds mentioned in this act: Provided, That not more than one-half of the reserve so required to be kept in the vaults of national banks shall be in such bonds.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we have had quite an interesting discussion as to what the reserve of a bank is and its uses and abuses. I quite agree with the views expressed by the two Senators from Texas and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] in their views; and I think they do not differ essentially from the views of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. It is true he limits the use of the reserve in paying depositors to an emergency; but I think the Senator will agree that whenever a depositor presents a check to a bank and demands payment, and the bank can not pay without using a part of its reserve, the emergency is then present, full grown and threatening. It seems to me that it would be absurd to say that the law in such a case presents two alternatives to the bank—one to refuse payment and commit an act which, if it were a State bank, would be an act of bankruptcy; and the other to pay out of its reserves and have the Comptroller appoint a receiver. Such an absurdity is certainly not contemplated, for the act expressly says that the impaired reserve must presently be made good. If a reserve can neither be loaned out nor used to pay depositors, it is the most illogical requirement imaginable. The only other purpose possible would be to hold it as a nest egg for the receiver of the bank to administer. If such be the purpose, it would be safer to require it to be deposited in the United States Treasury and remove all temptation to use it.

Mr. President, I have had some experience in banking, passing through the panic of 1893, and have some knowledge and information as to the use and abuse of reserves.

In and around the city where I live are many large manufacturing and mining plants, employing thousands of laborers. The pay rolls for these laborers require very large sums of money, running up to more than $1,000,000 a month, the pay days coming about the same time. If these, and all the banks similarly situated, were required to keep in their vaults these very large sums, wholly over and above their cash reserves, it would remove from business and circulation a vast amount of money, when the general experience shows that the money paid labor largely returns to the banks within a few days after it is paid out.

The 15 per cent reserve required by law is, in my judgment, sufficient, though banks in my section, both national and State, usually hold in their vaults and with reserve agents a larger amount; but I think the great error in the present law is that too much of this reserve may be, and is, deposited in banks a thousand miles from the home bank, and that too often in times of peril it is, to all intents and purposes, as useless to the home bank as if it were deposited in Japan or some other locality quite as remote from the operation of our laws. It would be better for the banks to "lay up their treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal," than to have it with reserve agents when a financial panic prevails.

It is this condition of affairs that I propose to improve by requiring a larger holding of reserve, actual or potential, in the vaults of the banks.

But before taking that subject up I want to present some tables showing the amount of deposits in national, State, and savings banks, trust companies, etc., and the insufficient amount of actual and potential currency held to meet these liabilities.

There was on deposit in all national banks December 3, 1907 (Secretary's Report, p. 124):

Due to other national banks	$708,919,278
Due to State banks and bankers	318,969,686
Due to trust companies and savings banks	323,321,475
Due to approved reserve agents	36,675,751
Dividends unpaid	1,155,144
A total of	1,389,041,334
And to individual depositors	4,176,873,717
Making a grand total of	5,565,914,051

The total of these deposits on the 23d of August, when business was normal throughout the United States, was $5,915,612,379, or nearly $350,000,000 more than on the 3d of December.

In this table I am including the balances due all banks and trust companies, to show the then total liabilities of these banks that could be demanded in cash.

There are few of us who have had any experience in banking who do not know that the first money to leave a bank when a financial storm is seen on the horizon is that due to other banks. They are the first of all depositors to call in balances due them from other banks. If not the most timid, they are the most active and alert of all depositors.

On December 3, 1907, the central and other reserve banks had deposits (Secretary's Report, p. 124):

	Central reserve.	Other reserve.
Due to other national banks	$390,537,202	$267,226,131
Due to State banks and bankers	129,010,754	122,700,245
Due to trust companies and savings banks	144,710,252	129,612,374
Due to approved reserve agents		26,553,716
Dividends unpaid	194,195	140,124
Making a total of	664,452,403	546,242,590
Due to individual depositors	783,216,778	937,450,963
A grand total of	1,447,669,181	1,483,693,553

So it appears that these reserve and central reserve banks then held an aggregate of—

Individual and bank deposits of	$2,931,354,734
Whilst all other national banks had	2,634,559,317
Making the total of	5,565,914,051

These two classes of banks, the reserve and central reserve banks, then owed other banks, bankers, and trust companies an aggregate of $1,210,461,174, exclusive of the amounts due individual depositors, and the actual cash on hand, according to the Comptroller's report (p. 7), including bills of other national banks, was $735,178,189.

If the banks and trust companies had attempted to withdraw their deposits from these reserve banks, there would not have been money sufficient to have paid them by more than $475,000,000, and there would have been not a dollar left for individual depositors.

The total deposits in all the national banks on August 22, 1907 (Comptroller's Report, pp. 6 and 7), including amounts due other national banks, trust companies, dividends unpaid, etc., were $5,915,612,379.

They held then in specie, legal tender, etc	$701,623,532
And in notes of other national banks	33,554,657
Total of all money held in vaults	735,178,189
And of this there were Government deposits of	143,282,293

The total reserve held for all these demand liabilities was about 12½ per cent in cash.

The average reserve of about 20 per cent would, if held in the vaults of the bank, have then required $1,242,278,599, or nearly $500,000,000 more than was then held by the banks in cash.

The deposits in all banks on August 23, 1907 (Comptroller's Report, p. 32), was—

In national banks	$5,915,612,379
In State banks, trust companies, etc., including $389,903,872 due to other banks	9,166,659,079
Total deposits of all banks, trust companies, etc	15,082,271,458
A reserve of 20 per cent would have required available cash of	3,016,454,291
Yet the Comptroller reports (p. 48) that the coin and all other money in the United States (1907) was	3,115,000,000
Of which there was in the United States Treasury as assets	342,000,000
Leaving available for all banks and the people	2,773,000,000

So there was not sufficient money in the United States, outside of the public Treasury, for all the banks, trust companies, and so forth, to have obtained a 20 per cent reserve.

I am assuming that the reserve we require of national banks is wise and prudent and certainly not too great, and that State banks will follow the judgment of Congress and the national bank act in holding their reserves the same as national banks; and I say if they had all been required to hold the reserve required by law of the national banks it would have required over $3,000,000,000.

I have mentioned these figures in order to show the condition of the banks and the amount of reserve required or the amount that might have been required.

I am going to address myself now to the amendment I have offered, which I think will improve very much the condition of the reserves.

The argument in favor of the amendment I propose has been ably presented by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but it finds no expression whatever in the bill reported by him. I have heard of men who favored a law, but were opposed to its enforcement. In this case the Senator seems to favor the law, but is opposed to its enactment. The Senator gives many reasons why banks should be required to invest in the bonds mentioned in the bill, but when we search the bill for some logical and apt statutory expression of the argument we do not find a single line or sentence of finished work.

I shall attempt to show that, if the Senator is correct in his premises, there should be some conclusions enacted into law.

The Senator says these securities, the bonds mentioned in the act, "would form a part of the bank's best assets and would constitute from every banking standpoint, a judicious investment;" that upon a demand for additional notes the bank could obtain for every $100,000 invested in bonds, $90,000 in emergency currency. He asks if it would be a hardship upon the banks to require them, if they desired to avail themselves of the privileges conferred by the bill, to hold to a limited extent this class of securties as part of their assets.

My amendment does not go so far as that. It puts no hardships upon any bank, because they are at liberty to keep the required 10 per cent of their deposits either wholly in money or part in money, and not more than half in these bonds.

The Senator proceeds to say:

The Congress, in my judgment, might properly, in the wise exercise of its supervisory control over the investment of national banks, require these institutions to invest a portion of their assets in these bonds without reference to their use as security for possible note issues or United States deposits, and that this requirement would be in the interest alike of the public and of stockholders.

The Senator seems decided in his opinion that this would be a wise and prudent thing to do, as it would be a protection to both the public and the banks themselves.

The next position taken by the Senator is still forward. He says:

There is no rule of sound banking more inexorable in its character, the violation of which is productive of more disastrous results, than that which requires a bank to hold a portion of its assets in first-class convertible securities, paying a reasonable income, and readily convertible into money.

And that—

Nearly all the destructive bank failures in our own and other countries can be traced directly to a violation of this rule.

Further on, growing more and more earnest and convincing, he says:

The national banks of the country hold reserves of specie and legal-tender money equal to little more than 10 per cent of their demand obligations.

And that—

Common prudence requires that this should be supplemented by a substantial invested reserve in first-class securities.

The evidence—

He says—

is overwhelming that prudent bank managers everywhere invest a considerable portion of their assets in securities of the class designated in the bill.

Now, conceding the argument of the Senator to be sound on this question, it may be summarized briefly thus:

1. The bonds mentioned in the bill would form a part of the banks' best assets, and from every banking standpoint would constitute a judicious investment.
2. That it would be no hardship on the banks to require them to hold, to a limited extent, these bonds as a part of their assets.
3. That Congress, in the wise exercise of its supervisory control over the investment of national banks, might properly require them to invest a portion of their assets in these bonds without reference to their use as security for possible note issues or to cover United States deposits.
4. That this requirement would be in the interest of the public and of stockholders.
5. That the failure to invest a portion of their assets in such securities violates an inexorable rule, the violation of which is most disastrous in its results and to which can be traced nearly all the destructive bank failures in our own and other countries.
6. That common prudence requires that the money reserves should be supplemented by a substantial invested reserve in first-class securities, such as those named in the bill.
7. That the evidence is overwhelming that prudent bank managers everywhere invest a considerable portion of their assets in securities of the class designated in the bill.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. President, that if the Congress has the supervisory power over investments of national banks, which seems not to be questioned; if prudent bank managers everywhere always invest in such bonds; if the failure to do this causes nearly all the disastrous bank failures in our own and other countries; if this requirement would be in the interest of the public and stockholders alike; if these bonds would form part of the bank's assets, and it would be no hardship on the banks to require this of them; if all this cornucopia of good, wise, and prudent results can be given by Congress to the banks with benefit to the public and security to the banks, why is no provision found in the bill to carry them into effect?

That is the reason I am offering this amendment. I am agreeing with the distinguished Senator in much that he says as to the prudence and wisdom of this investment, and yet the amendment I propose does not go so far as his argument legitimately carries the Senator. He walks up to the river, says that it is much safer for himself and the public to be on the other side; that the passage is free from obstruction or danger; has been often made and always with safety; that it is perilous to remain on the bank he occupies, and yet he refuses to step into the stream and wade across to security and prosperity. Possibly he is waiting for some Democratic Moses to divide the waters so that he can pass over dry-shod. My amendment requires national banks, all national banks, whether reserve or not, to keep in their vaults two-thirds of their reserves, either in specie or legal tender, or one-half of that two-thirds in money and the other half in the very bonds that the Senator says will constitute the best assets of the bank. It is the first step in a programme so heartily commended and so strongly put by the chairman of the Finance Committee.

It has been said that this investment in bonds would reduce the amount of the money reserves of the bank, and hence be of no service whatever in strengthening their position; that if a bank invested 5 per cent of its deposits in these bonds it could only use the bonds in an emergency to get 90 per cent of these bonds in the emergency currency, and that the last state of the bank would be worse than the first.

This might be true if the banks had to ship their currency to some distant point to acquire these bonds, but the class of bonds mentioned in the bill, State, county, and municipal, are found in every State, and much of the money paid for them would find its way back into the vaults of the banks, and, incidentally, the interest paid on these bonds would remain at home.

Another advantage this amendment would secure is that in times of panic the banks holding these bonds could quickly secure emergency notes and meet demands of their customers. Under the present law national banks not in reserve cities are required to keep only 6 per cent of their deposits in money in their vaults, 9 per cent being authorized to be held in reserve banks. If there is anything more intangible than a deposit in a reserve bank in time of panic, I have yet to know it. You may call spirits from the vasty deep and get a response as readily as you can get money from a reserve agent in times of financial distress; so that this investment of 5 per cent in these bonds as part of a reserve, another 5 per cent being in legal-tender money, would nearly double the money assets of a bank when most needed as compared with present requirements. The difference to the nonreserve banks between holding 6 per cent in cash, as now required, and 10 per cent in cash and bonds available for circulation, would be practically the difference between one hundred and forty-eight millions and about two hundred and fifty millions, as the deposits in these banks were, as heretofore stated, $2,634,559,317.

On the 31st of January last the President of the United States sent to Congress a message—in many respects a remarkable message—one that should command our attention, but one that I think was received by many in this Chamber with less enthusiasm than that exhibited in another Chamber not far distant. For fear that Senators on the other side have forgotten some portions of this message, I desire to read an extract.

The President said:

I do not know whether it is possible, but if possible, it is certainly desirable that in connection with measures to restrain stock watering and overcapitalization there should be measures taken to prevent at least the grosser forms of gambling in securities and commodities, such as making large sales of what men do not possess and "cornering" the market. Legitimate purchases of commodities and of stocks and securities for investment have no connection whatever with purchases of stocks or other securities or commodities on a margin for speculative and gambling purposes. There is no moral difference between gambling at cards, or in lotteries, or on the race track, and gambling in the stock market. One method is just as pernicious to the body politic as the other in kind, and in degree the evil worked is far greater.

Now, if this amendment is adopted, it is my opinion that the reduction of the amount that may be deposited in reserve banks from 9 to 5 per cent of deposits, and requiring these banks to hold two-thirds of their reserves in money, or money and bonds, in their vaults, would reduce the congestion of money in the great money centers by more than $100,000,000, so far as interior banks alone are concerned, and to that extent reduce the volume of money largely employed in speculative ventures. The reduction in volume of currency at any given point strikes the speculator or gambler, as the President calls him, the first blow. So that this amendment is in line with the recommendation sent to us by the President.

I think the amendment I have suggested is much better than the provision contained in the original bill, for if all national banks should be required to keep 10 per cent of their deposits in legal tender in their vaults it would require a very large increase in the amount of money locked up in banks, not available for loans and discounts, whilst the investment of half that amount in bonds, as authorized by the amendment to the bill, would give equal safety and better returns to the banks. The interest on the bonds so held would give a larger return to the bank holding them than any reserve agent could or should be allowed to pay as interest on balances subject to check. I am glad that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] approves this amendment.

I have heard it said here that the bill presented by the committee was predestinated and foreordained to pass just as it came to the Senate with such amendments as may be suggested by the committee. I think an emergency bill should be passed; I think the potentiality of such a bill would largely prevent panics. I want the very best bill I can get, and I am not without hope that any amendment that will benefit the people, restore confidence, strengthen the security of banks and confidence in them, and tend to prevent a recurrence of the loss and suffering that the recent panic caused will address itself to the patriotic consideration of every Senator, no matter from which side of this Chamber the suggestion may come.

I may be mistaken. I trust I am not.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I give notice that at 2 o'clock on next Tuesday I should like to speak on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON in the chair). The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is now in order. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The first business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois.

The bill (S. 4030) to fix the pay of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the bill ought to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois.

The bill (S. 3976) to authorize and require the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to maintain and operate a track connection with the United States navy-yard in the city of Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been heretofore read and the amendments agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to reconsider is pending.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it had better not be taken up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CARTER. It is pending on a motion to reconsider, made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is not present. I think the measure is to go over that some parties may be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2695) to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator who reported the bill is not here and the chairman of the committee is not here. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over at the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

The bill (S. 4132) creating an additional land district in the State of South Dakota was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut the bill will go over without prejudice.

THREE TREE POINT MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (S. 626) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Three Tree Point Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Grays Harbor and Columbia River Railway Company, its successors and assigns, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. In the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES]——

Mr. PILES. I am here, and I want to have the bill passed.

Mr. HOPKINS. I beg pardon. I did not see the Senator from Washington. He was not in his seat. The Senator is present, and I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War may authorize the Grays Harbor and Columbia River Railway Company to build a railroad and telegraph line through the Three Tree Point Military Reservation on Columbia River, and to that end may set aside for occupancy by said Grays Harbor and Columbia River Railway Company such ground, and no more, as is actually required for the necessary track, embankments, or trestles: Provided, That the ground so occupied shall remain the property of the United States, under such police and other military control as the military authorities may deem it necessary to exercise: Provided further, That the said railway company shall compensate the United States for all timber that may be cut and shall pay such reasonable annual rental for such right of way as may be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the location and grade of said railroad and other details of construction within the limits of the reservation, also all matters pertaining to the operation and maintenance of said railroad, shall be under such regulations as the Secretary of War may deem it advisable to establish in the interest of the military service and as a safeguard against fire to Government timber lands: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the use of any portion of the reservation as a borrow pit for fills and embankments, unless specially authorized so to do by the Secretary of War and upon the payment of such compensation as may be fixed by him.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the road be not commenced within two years from date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATERIAL FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 40) to provide for the transportation by sea of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. FRYE. That may be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Maine.

KIOWA-COMANCHE AND APACHE LANDS.

The bill (S. 2892) to provide for the repayment of deposits by bidders of Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside until half past 2 o'clock. Certain Senators desire to be present when we resume the consideration of the bill, and they are unable to be present until half past 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until half past 2 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STONE. I ask that we may proceed with the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Until the hour of half past 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Until half past 2 o'clock.

NAPOLEON B. GIDDINGS.

The bill (S. 4690) for the relief of the legal representatives of Napoleon B. Giddings was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated the circumstances of the alleged taking from Napoleon B. Giddings, in January, 1847, at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and deposit with A. B. Dyer, lieutenant of ordnance, United States Army, by order of Sterling Price, colonel commanding the army in New Mexico at that time, of 140 kegs of gunpowder, and to ascertain and determine the reasonable market value at that time and place, and whether the same, or any part thereof, was ever returned or delivered back to Giddings, and the final disposition of such powder.

Mr. BURKETT. The bill may be all right, but I notice in the sixth line it reads:

And deposit with A. B. Dyer.

What the bill means does not seem to me clear.

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated the circumstances of the alleged taking from Napoleon B. Giddings, in January, 1847, at Santa Fe, N. Nex., and deposit with A. B. Dyer——

Mr. STONE. The bill was reported by my colleague [Mr. WARNER]. If the Senator from Nebraska and the Senate care to have patience to hear the report read, I think the purpose of the bill will clearly appear.

Mr. BURKETT. I thought it was a mistake in the print, and that is why I called attention to it. I do not understand what it means. It looks like a mistake in the print.

Mr. WARNER. No, Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the word "deposit" is properly used. As the report of the committee will show, this powder was ordered to be deposited with a lieutenant of the Regular Army by Colonel Price at the time he had possession of New Mexico in 1847. The receipt shows that the lieutenant had possession of the powder. The purpose is simply to ascertain what proportion, if any, was not returned to Mr. Giddings. So the word "deposit" is correct in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The bill (S. 1677) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KEAN. I have not any objection to the bill, but it seems to me to be rather queerly drawn.

Mr. WARNER. It is a bill that has met the approval of the War Department. I do not know what part of the bill the Senator from New Jersey criticises.

Mr. KEAN. I only observed that the bill as read was rather queerly drawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

Mr. KEAN. The amendments may make the bill clear.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "military," to insert "or;" in the same line, after the word "naval," to strike out "or civil," and in line 4, after the words "service of," to insert "the United States and," so as to make the section read:

That the Confederate cemetery near Springfield, Mo., and which adjoins the national cemetery at that place, having been tendered by proper authority to the United States Government, the same is hereby accepted, under the conditions that the Government shall take care of and properly maintain and preserve the cemetery, its monument or monuments, headstones, and other marks of the graves, its walls, gates, and appurtenances; to preserve and keep a record, as far as possible, of the names of those buried therein, with such history of each as can be obtained, and to see that it is never used for any other purpose than as a cemetery for the graves of men who were in the military or naval service of the United States and the Confederate States of America: Provided, That organized bodies of ex-Confederates or individuals shall have free and unrestricted entry to said cemetery for the purpose of burying worthy ex-Confederates, for decorating the graves, and for all other purposes which they have heretofore enjoyed, all under proper and reasonable regulations and restrictions made by the Secretary of War.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. In line 4, page 2, before the word "Confederate," insert "late," so as to read "the late Confederate States of America."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOOPA VALLEY INDIAN LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 4546) to authorize the sale of timber on allotments made to Indians of the Hoopa Valley extension in California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "heirs," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the proceeds of all such sales shall be used for the benefit of the respective allottees in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That with the consent of the allottee the timber on the allotments made to the Indians of the Hoopa Valley extension in California may be sold under rules and conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That in case of minors said consent shall be given by the father or mother or agent in charge in the order named, and for persons under other legal disabilities the agent's consent shall be taken in lieu of the consent of the allottees or heirs: Provided further, That the proceeds of all such sales shall be used for the benefit of the respective allottees in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 4266) to establish a fish-culture station at Trout Springs, Gallinas Canyon, San Miguel County, N. Mex., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with amendments, in line 6, after the word "station," to insert "in New Mexico;" and in line 8, after the word "equipment," to strike out "at Trout Springs, in Gallinas Canyon, in the county of San Miguel, in the Territory of New Mexico," and insert "said station to be located at a point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment of a fish-culture station in New Mexico, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, said station to be located at a point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in New Mexico."

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN PERSONS.

The bill (H. R. 586) granting an increase of pension to Squire J. Carlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws:

The name of Squire J. Carlin, late of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry McNeil, late of Fifteenth Independent Battery, Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Palmer, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Twentieth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander W. Skinner, dependent father of Charles H. Skinner, late of Company F, Second Battalion, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sidney S. Bryant, late of Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rhoda Lloyd, widow of Anthony Lloyd, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of Jackson Sizemoure, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Herbert F. Brooks, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison Burkett, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Levering, late of Company K, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C Hoover, late of Company G, Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Everitt, late of Company F, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Lemon, late of Twenty-second Battery Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martha Andrews, widow of Samuel Andrews, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William H. Mize, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas S. Blake, late of U. S. S. Vandalia and Colorado, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Horstman, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christopher N. Snyder, late of Company K, Eighty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Companies D and G, First Regiment Mississippi Marine Brigade Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Seth H. Phillips, late of Company M, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles McCoy, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anna M. Bohn, widow of George F. Bohn, late of Company B, Sixty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, however, That in the event of the death of Frank A. Bohn, helpless and dependent child of said George F. Bohn, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Anna M. Bohn the name of said Frank A. Bohn shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Anna M. Bohn.

The name of Rodolphus Bard, late of Company I, One hundred and fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank N. Bement, late of Company I, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Essington, late captain Company B, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph H. Kitzmiller, late of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph V. Stevenson, late of Companies H and D, Ninety-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that is now receiving.

The name of John H. Nutter, late of Company B, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Endicott, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mathias D. Rodocker, late second lieutenant Company D, Forty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. P. Turner, late of Company G, Ninety-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Sixty-sixth Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elihu Wheeler, late of Company K, Thirtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margaret Cornwell, widow of John F. Cornwell, late of Company E, One hundred and seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ferdinand Stritsman, late of Company H, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Mess, late of Company C, Forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Pahlman, late of Company M, Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucy Ferguson, widow of Robert Ferguson, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Leona May Ferguson, helpless and dependent child of said Robert Ferguson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of the said Lucy Ferguson the name of the said Leona May Ferguson shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of the death of said Lucy Ferguson.

The name of George W. Fuchs, late first lieutenant Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank D. Newberry, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and captain Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. O'Brien, late first lieutenant Company C, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Little, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Hogan, late of Company C, Thirty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles I. Krickbaum, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elston Armstrong, late of Company B, Ninety-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver P. Johnson, late of Company D, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin H. Buck, late of Company F, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George F. Nichols, late colonel One hundred and eighteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Holliday, late of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Evans, widow of Harry Evans, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth James, widow of Enoch James, late of Companies D and I, Third Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Jennie James, helpless and dependent daughter of said Enoch James, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Elizabeth James the name of said Jennie James shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Elizabeth James.

The name of James R. Grider, late of Company G, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christopher H. Lute, late of Company D, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Taylor, alias George Parks, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Peters, late of Twenty-sixth Battery, New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Deitrich Bellman, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eli Masters, late of Company K, Twentieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Wheat, late of Companies H and C, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas E. Story, late of Company H, First Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Walters, late of Company H, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Bond, late of Company D, Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Winter, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Hearing, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Annie M. Owen, widow of William H. Owen, late of Troop C, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, however, That in the event of the death of William De Witt Owen, helpless and dependent child of said William H. Owen, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Annie M. Owen the name of said William De Witt Owen shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month, from and after the date of death of said Annie M. Owen.

The name of George S. Neill, late of Company A, One hundred and eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Miles, late of Company K, Ninety-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adam Meyer, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Wood, late of Company I, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Beaty, late of Company C, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Miller, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Whitten, late of Company D, Sixty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company M, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Defendall, widow of Abram Defendall, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Elbert M. Defendall, helpless and dependent child of said Abram Defendall, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary A. Defendall the name of said Elbert M. Defendall shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Mary A. Defendall.

The name of Mary J. Baughman, widow of John R. Baughman, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo Harter, late of Company E, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Oakley, alias John Hoyt, late of Company H, First Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Palmer Loper, late of Company E, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Miles C. Christy, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jennie S. Risley, widow of D. Somers Risley, late first lieutenant Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rebecca W. Swain, widow of Robert D. Swain, late second lieutenant Company K, Ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William Bain, late of Company G, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Jaquett, late commissary-sergeant Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Monk, late of Company F, One hundred and seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Johnson, widow of Samuel F. Johnson, late colonel Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Campbell, late of Company E, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George E. Goodrich, late of Company D, Twenty-first Regiment, and captain Companies C and A, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles P. Leavitt, late of Company H, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton Ross, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

